Information bonuses paid by the contractor will be $10 million for production levels of 50,000 BPD, $15 million for 100,000 BPD and $20 million for 200,000 BPD.

Pertamina has the option of selling a portion of the contractor's rightful share of oil, so that the portion of oil Pertamina sells or receives is not less than 50 percent of total production.

It is stipulated that the contractor is to be prepared to surrender 28.57 percent of its share of production for processing in Indonesia and establish oil refineries or petrochemical projects in Indonesia if no processing capacity is available, when its share of oil exceeds 175,000 BPD.

The contractor is required to set aside oil for domestic consumption on a proportionate basis at a rate of $0.20 per barrel after the 5th year of production.

Jackson Kutei Basin Exploration Ltd operates in a 10,140 sq km mainland area in Adang, East Kalimantan.

Exploration costs for 6 years will not be less than $40 million, while production bonuses will be $3 million after commercial production is met, $5 million for production levels of 25,000 BPD and $10 million for 50,000 BPD.

Indonesian Petroleum Ltd operates in a 29,905 sq km area offshore from North Aceh.

Information bonuses paid by the contractor are $1 million, while production bonuses are $2 million at the first boring, $3,818 million after commercial production is reached, $20 million at a production of 50,000 BPD/200 million cubic feet of natural gas, $40 million for oil production at 100,000 BPD/400 mmcf of natural gas, and $60 million for oil production at 150,000 BPD/600 mmcf of natural gas.

FOREIGN FIRMS VIE FOR COAL CONTRACTS

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 29 May 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Two more foreign companies, namely Enadimsa from Spain and Conoco from the United States, are interested in mining Indonesian coal.

Now they are ready to negotiate, said A. H. Szzili, public relations chief of PN Tambang Batubara [State Coal Mining Co] to ANTARA in Jakarta Friday af afternoon.

It is speculated that the two companies will begin the negotiation phases with [obvious omission] around next month.

Besides these two companies, a Japanese firm, Nissau Iwai, also has long said [words missing] negotiations to develop Indonesian coal. But until now the negotiations themselves are blocking its realization.

Enadimsa is interested in developing coal near the area which is mined by Sumitomo, in South Kalimantan.

Conoco is interested in mining an area having quite a high coal potential in the north which is now being mined by Utah [sic] (the United States) at the East Kalimantan-Central Kalimantan border.

The Spanish firm once made a study in this area. On the other hand Conoco, in cooperation with AGIP [National Italian Oil Company] also once did a general study at the Indonesian-Sarawak border area.

Waiting for an Answer

Three other foreign companies which have initialed the results of negotiations for a cooperation contract for coal development in East and South Kalimantan are now waiting for governmental approval. The three companies are Tasek Cement Berhad from Malaysia, Siam Cement Company from Thailand and Hanil Cement Company from South Korea.

Tasek Cement Berhard, [sic] and Siam Cement Company will develop coal in South Kalimantan, while Hanil will be in the East Kalimantan coal development area.

Experts estimate that coal reserves total 1 billion tons in South and East Kalimantan.

BOEING-NURTANIO COOPERATION DISCUSSED

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 29 May 82 pp 1, 11

[Excerpts] W. T. Stamper, president director of Boeing Company, was very impressed with the development of PT Nurtanio's aircraft industry. He said this to reporters after meeting with President Soeharto at Cendana [the president's residence in Jakarta].

Stamper came to Indonesia at the invitation of Minister of Research and Technology Habibie in the framework of exploring possibilities for cooperation between Boeing and Nurtanio.

He said further there no longer was any doubt about Indonesia's capability for producing aircraft components.

He also conveyed to President Soeharto his desire to realize the possibility of implementing a joint program in the framework of technology transfer in manufacturing jet foils (types of ocean-going vessels propelled by jet engines), because Indonesia has very extensive territorial waters. He said he hoped that in the next few months a concrete agreement can be completed. Further, he pointed out that Boeing is going to develop a comprehensive program which will be carried out with Indonesia in the field of technology, like the manufacture of airplanes, spacecraft, communications, energy and computers.

In this regard President Soeharto, according to Stamper, very much wants to see the implementation of this work through cooperation between Indonesia and Boeing.

Meanwhile Minister of Research and Technology Habibie, who was with the president at the meeting, said Boeing believes that Nurtanio can be defined as a company which possesses the qualifications to manufacture aircraft components which would be assembled at Boeing.

As is known, Boeing Company, which has about 100,000 employees, buys its aircraft components from Japan, Italy and Spain. According to Habibie, they do not buy just anything, but the components must fulfill the requirements for quality and economy so that the prices can be competitive.

Because it is a high-level, labor-intensive technology, he said further, it can be implemented in Indonesia. Furthermore, labor costs in Indonesia are lower, so the expenses of aircraft production which utilizes components from Indonesia can be less.

That is why the groundwork is not being laid for the possibility of cooperation between Nurtanio and Boeing. And according to Habibie, that possibility will be carried out in accordance with government policy that in as brief a time as possible we can control the technology, increase job opportunities and increase the value of non-oil exports.

BRIEFS

INFANT MORTALITY RATE--When compared to crude death rates, the infant mortality rate is a sensitive indicator for measuring society's degree of health. According to the statistics, in 1980 the infant mortality rate in Indonesia dropped, compared to figures recorded for 1961 through 1971 and 1976. The crude death rate, based on the 1980 census and variuus other surveys, indicates a sharp decline. Nevertheless, it must be admitted the figures are still quite high. Dr Suwardjono Suryaningrat, ministers of health, pointed this out at the opening of the fifth Indonesian Congress on Obstetrics and Gynecology Monday at the Merdeka Building, Bandung. According to the minister of health, the maternal death rate, which is linked to pregnancy and childbirth, also is still quite high. According to the statistics, between 1961 and 1971 the infant mortality rate recorded was 137 per 1,000 live births. In 1976 it dropped to 110 per 1,000 and in 1980 it reached 100 per 1,000 live births. It is hoped that with constant implementation of various long-term health programs, by the year 2000 a maximum infant mortality rate of 45 per 1,000 live births can be attained. Mortality of children under age 5 will be at most 15 per 1,000, while there will be a life expectancy of at least 60 years. The number of infants who are born with body weights of 2,500 grams or less will drop to 7 percent at the most. [Excerpt] [Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 9 Jun 82 p 9] 9792

PACE OF ISLAMIZATION SAID TO BE DISSATISFACTORY

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 17 Jul 82 p 8

[Article by Shamsul Islam Naz]

[Text]

FAISALABAD, July 16: The CII Charter for Islamisation of the National Education Policy has not only been put in the cold storage, but has also been defied and negated with impunity. This has been implored by the members of the CII in the course of a review report put up by them to President Gen Muhammad Ziaul Haq.

The Council has envisaged grave concern over incompetence of the implementing authorities and their inability to bring the new education policy in unison with the ideology of Islam.

The review report observed "that the present regime was sincere about the Islamisation process in every walk of life". According to the recommendations of the CII the Government had directed the authorities concerned to abolish the system of co-education and set up separate university for women at regional level but all that has been done so far was to pay a deaf ear to these far-reaching recommendations. The report deemed an apprehension that the element which had been fed on western ideology and inclinations was predominant and had the cheek to overrule these recommendations and create hurdles and impediments in implementation thereof.

The review reporter further observed that it appears that the recommendations for the setting up of separate universites for women had met the same fate as the -" Islamisation of banking system-".

The authors of the review report wondered as to how the name of Islam was being exploited but its dictates were being neglected.

The members of the CII, in their observation said that President Zia was asked as to what unsurmountable hurdle had impeded the implementation of their recommendation, and who are the persons impeding these as such. The report said that the assertion of bureaucrats that it would not be possible to provide requisite teaching and technical facilities in the proposed ulmamaters was just frivolous.

The attitude of the bureaucrats, the report concluded, was likely to breed ultramodern trends of unrestricted intermixing of sexes among the younger generation which was prone with disastrous consequences.

It may be mentioned here that whereas, some funds had been allocated in the lasy year,'s budget for establishment of a Women University no such allocation had been made in the current Federal Budget.-

'ISLAMICRACY' ADVOCATED OVER DEMOCRACY

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 15 Jul 82 p 4

[Article by M.A.R. Shaheen]

[Text]

It is undoubtedly a historical fact that Pakistan meant and shall continue to mean 'La Illaha Illa Allah' i.e. Rule or Sovereignty of Allah or Nizam-e-Islam. But alongside this it is also a pertinent historical fact that Pakistan was not re achieved through the normal Democratic procedure. For democracy as in vogue throughout the world with its secular basis, could by no stretch of imagination result in the achievement of Pakistan in a polity dominated permanently by three Hindu votes to one Muslim vote. In fact it was on the basis of the two nation theory that the Muslims of the Sub-Continent, through what was essentially a Referendum—rather a Muslim Referendum to be more precise—achieved Pakistan. The clearcut issue before the Muslims of the Sub-Continent was a choice between an undivided India or Pakistan—they chose the later. This can only be called a referendum (notwithstanding the falsely given title of a democratic election given to it at the time or since even afterwards).

It is therefore incorrect if not a patent lie to say that Pakistan was achieved through democracy. The very word comprises of 'Demo' (from Greek Demos) meaning people without distinction of religion etc.) and 'cracy' denoting authority or government Thus democracy means People's Government' in which the majority group legislates On the other hand 'La Illaha Illa Allah' means first the denial of all (Un-godly authority and then submission to one and only Allah's rule.

Again the democratic Party system and the presentation of oneself as candidate for election, are both repugnant to the Quran and the Sunnah. Democracy's basic unit—the Constituency—essentially encourages grouping for localised territorial interests and sows the seeds of disintegration. But referendum on the other hand strengthens national or Milli unity and integration. For this reason the referendum of 1946 for 'La Illaha Illa Allah' created such a unity among the Muslims of the sub-continent that no one considered himself a Punjabi or Sindhi or Hindi or Baluch or Pathan or a Sunni or a Shia Nay every one was a Muslim and proud of being a Muslim only. On the contrary when after the establishment of Pakistan we tried to replace this Muslim Referendum 'the basis of our state with Democratic election the essential result was that territorialism got encouragement One of the unfortunate consequences was the separation of East Pakistan and the other is the shameful cry of four nationalities which tends to open its jaws wider and wider to swallow Pakistan itself (Incidentally this drum-beating of four nationalities is championed by those who did not accept the two nation theory for a Hindu-dominated undivided India but are bent upon harming and disintegrating a Muslim Pakistan.) No wonder Allama Iqbal had clearly foreseen the destructiveness of democracy and had condemned it lock, stock and barrell. The fact is that democracy has always brought disgrace and destruction to Pakistan. First the democratic elections of 1953 wiped out the Muslim League from East Pakistan reducing the majority of the first central Constituent Assembly to un-representative status and knocking the bottom out of its right to proceed with producing an Islamic Constitution.

Next the democratic elections of 1970 resulted in the country's total disintegration and reduced it to half. And further the democratic turmoil of 1977 is a recent history. As such the patriotic people who love Pakistan are rightly fearful of democracy and feel greatly alergic to it. The honest fact, viewed without the coloured glasses of political interests and propaganda, is that the common man feels more secure under a Martial Law vis-a-vis the democratic holocaust.) Thus the induction or restoration of Democracy in Pakistan would clearly mean knocking the bottom out of its very basis the "La Illaha Illa Allah", as explained above, and would ruin—nay even destroy us.

Therefore Pakistan should have to adopt Islamicracy instead of Democracy. Islamicracy's first pillar is the Sovereignty or rule of Allah as against democracy's prostration to the so-called people's authority. The Second pillar of Islamicracy is the Muslim self-determination and their exclusive responsibility to establish Nizam-e-Islam and promulgate Islamic laws. Thirdly, Islamicracy in clearcut contrast to democracy forbids anyone to aspire for or offer himself/herself as candidate for an office. Fourthly, instead of Party system, there has to be co-operation for goodness and obedience to Allah and not groupings for exploitation or aggression under the high sounding plea of party discipline. Fifthly, the Chief Executive shall be installed by consent and political contract (for adherence and obedience to Allah's orders) between him and the people rather than a vote sold out for empty slogans and/or paltry sum of money. Sixthly, for conducting the state affairs the Majlis-i-Shoora's advice would be sought although the Chief Executive' shall have the prerogative to accept or revise the same on the basis of the Quran and the Sunnah. Seventhly, widest possible arrangements would have to be made for spreading Islamic teachings and that Arabic shall be taught as a compulsory part of Islamiat.

This, in brief, is the structural basis of Islamicracy. The effort, otherwise to usher in secular democracy which clearly cuts at the roots of 'La Illaha Illa Allah' would not only lead us to suicidal self-destruction but history shall also record us as the type of hypocrats who while continuously trying to betray Allah would have perhaps perished in the abortive attempt.

ROLE OF BUREAUCRACY DEFENDED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 16 Jul 82 Magazine Supplement pp I, III

[Article by A.B. Awan]

[Text]

BUREAUCRACY is under considerable adverse comment these days. I was recruited and trained as a bureaucrat more than a decade before Independence and as such, claim some knowledge of conditions prevailing then. I continued to serve on in Pakistan for the first twenty-two years of its existence and saw the whole of the first and a little bit of the second Martial Law. After that I went into retirement and have been at the receiving end since then.

The bureaucrat has assumed the unenviable position of the 'whipping boy' and although there would be any number of people ready and happy to have a go at him, there would be few, in fact, none at all, to understand and explain his point of view. He himself has lost all credibility and all confidence in himself and is, therefore, unable and unwilling to defend himself. And yet, he must be having a point of view however flimsy and unconvincing, and somebody must come forward to state it. With thirty-six years' experience, pre and post Partition, of one side and thirteen years of the other, I feel I am wearing two hats simultaneously and should be able to marshal the weak and the strong points of either side. I believe this would be a profitable exercise.

I joined service during British times. I feel I picked up nothing useful during a year's stay in the Training School except how to live with three other English boys. This, by itself, would be neither here nor there. The principal of the institution took remarkably little interest in my existence beyond giving me an occasional growl. But things started taking a more positive and interesting shape once I got into the stream of things. My first Deputy Commissioner was an Indian gentleman of the I.C.S.; keen as mustard, up and about wide awake. We went out village touring together, riding out long distances, living under canvas, in the crisp Punjab winter. When he did his revenue work, he not only kept me by his side but laboriously explained everything. In the brief space of time, in the evenings, we hurriedly went out after sandgrouse or duck or snipe. At night, after dinner, we sat in front of a log fire and read. You picked up things through example; or failed to pick up, if you were unlucky.

Soon afterwards, I got posted under a Hindu superintendent of police. He was a direct competitioner, about 10 years senior to me in service. The first time I saw him, I didn't like his face but he was a diligent, hardworking, keen young man who spent long hours at work. I did'nt like his face because he gave me a bad posting. He posted me as at assistant clerk at a small police station. I didn't like it. Soon tale carriers arrived, backbiters. This was bigotry; this was cussedness. Has anybody ever heard of a man belonging to an all-India Service being posted in a subordinate position? This was done merely to do me down. And so on and so forth. I was considerably peeved. I was pulled out after about a month of this ignominious posting and given another one, once again in the same subordinate position at another police station. I felt more peeved. But then I was sent for and asked to comment on my posting and my work. I said I didn't like it at all. This was not the way to treat me. My boss listened to me patiently Then he explained it like this. He said the department I had joined was a very difficult one. Even its subordinate officers had very extensive powers under the law. These powers were frequently and extensively abused. This resulted in grave injustice on the one hand and illegal gratification on the other. There was little that anybody could do about it. The only person who could set things right was the Gazetted Officer on top and that only if he knew his job inside out. The robber's den where all the concoctions were cooked was the police station. To learn about all the trickery which went on in this place, you had first to do all the police station work yourself. You had to sit there all the time, see everything with your own eyes, do everything with your own hands. When you had mastered all the tricks of the trade, it was only then that you would know how to prevent the crookery. That was why he was putting me through the mill. It wasn't laid down in any book of instructions. He said he hoped I would rise to a very senior rank. It would be only then that I would appreciate how much I owed to the man who taught me things the way they should have been taught. You don't learn these things by merely counting your beads. I have always believed in inducting officers directly into various ranks but only at the youngest possible age limit and not after a man had left half the number of his teeth in some other profession. This is the most damaging thing that could be done to a service like. That is why I am deadly against lateral entry, but more about it later. An ad hoc induction, even of the best material, cuts right through the very roots of security in the Services, destroys faith and confidence and leads to discontent. Ad hocism in any shape or form, is downright bad.

Another story

I am getting off the point. Please permit me to relate only one more story, hurriedly. When I got my first promotion to the senior scale I was sent for by the head of the department. He was a formidable looking old boy, completely bald and with only one serviceable eye. In this interview he talked about this and that and did not at all make me feel comfortable. When I thought the agony of the interview was over, he turned his one and only serviceable eye at me and abruptly asked, "Do you believe in God?" That must have shaken me a bit, getting God so suddenly into the affairs of an already trembling young man. Yes, I suppose I must have blurted out, fearing, at the same time, he might go further into the matter. "So do I," the old boy said, "perhaps in a slightly different way." "Do you realise", he said, "that in this job you would be dealing, entirely on your own, with the affairs of two thousand three hundred subordinates. You are but only a mortal. Before you sit in judgment on the affairs of man, first pray to your God, that he should guide you on the right path so that you don't do injustice." That was a long time ago.

We were not made to go through text books; we were made to learn by patient, persistent example. The diligence, the hard work, the burning oil midnight oil, the ethics, the scruples, justice, fairplay; rubbing shoulders with your men; trying to understand the other point of view. Then distant rays of hope came filtering through; a new homeland, a homeland of our own, to build to construct, from the foundations upwards. The wonderful teachings of our religion; equality between man and man, without distinction of caste, creed or colour; equality of opportunity, to earn, to worship, to express; justice, fairplay. Yes, the promised land. What an opportunity? An opportunity which comes only to the lucky few, once, perhaps, in a thousand years. What a part we were destined to play. We were enthused; we were thrilled. We felt we were the selected few, trained and equipped specially for this onerous task.

But wait; something was going wrong, right under our very noses. This fabric, this unsteady wobbly fabric. It wasn't stabilising. The refugees. By the thousands, by the hundreds of thousands. Like locusts flying non stop over the expanses of the Indian Ocean from the east coast of Africa all the way to the hungry deserts of Tharparkar; hungry, thirsty, dead beat; keeping their sense of direction through faith alone. The old resigned to the will of God, the frightened, whimpering young, the expectant females; the sick, the wounded, the dying, the dead. They came looking in all directions, looking for shelter, any shelter. Looking for merciful God's mercy. In their own Pakistan. The administration just simply collapsed; it was not equal to the task. I claim that the finest and the best administrative machinery in the world, anywhere, would not have been able to stand up to the strain and this one was neither the finest nor the best; it was badly depleted. The senior administrative posts were the exclusive preserve of the British; they had left. Out of the remaining up to 50% were non-Muslims. They all left. Amongst the remaining two men and a boy, there must have been some who had stout hearts. But that is about all they had. It is all very well to talk of platitudes, but it doesn't work in actual life. Some of us must have had friends and relatives amongst the uprooted. They couldn't remain unaffected, unconcerned, impartial. It was impossible not to be moved.

It would be difficult for me, or for anybody else who was present, to forget the 14th of April 1948. We, I mean the Civil Servants of the Province, had gathered in the Darbar Hall of the Government House, Peshawar, to listen to an address by the Quaid-i-Azam. This is what he said.

"You should not be influenced by any political pressure, by any political party or individual politician. If you want to raise the prestige and greatness of Pakistan, you must not fall a victim to any pressure, but do your duty as servants of the people and the State, fearlessly and honestly . . I also wish to take the opportunity of impressing on your leaders and politicians ... that if they try to interfere with you and bring political pressure to bear upon you, which leads to nothing but corruption, bribery and nepotism .. they are doing nothing but disservice to Pakistan ... You may even be put to trouble not because you are doing anything wrong but because you are doing right .. I appeal to you to come forward to make the sacrifice .. There may be people (among you) who think of immediate advantages. All such things are a hindrance and an obstruction."

Politician's stake

It was a graceful, inspiring and dignified address. We felt we had the backing of the Head of State but having laid down these guidelines, the Quaid-i-Azam died soon after and his advice, in actual practice, turned out to be nothing but a mirage. Some of us tried to stand up; some of us made the necessary sacrifices. It was no use. It was a futile exercise. The politician, or more accurately the man in politics, was inexperienced in the affairs of the administration. All he was interested in was his public image, his votes, his constituency; the rest should look after itself. He always thought of the gallery he had to play back to.

The One Unit was one vast administrative chaos. Take the police for example. There were four integrating provinces and a number of states. Each had its own police, each with its own system of recruitment, training and promotion; different pay scales, different uniforms, different rules and regulations. Imagine lumping together about eighty thousand of such men and then trying to hammer out a logical whole out of this shapeless mass. It was complete bedlam. You got hardly a minute to scratch your head. Add to this the newly created Ministers, Deputy Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries, members of the Legislature and all their hangers on. Imagine this formidable army of warriors converging on to the secretariat every working day, with applications, petitions, with conflicting orders; arguing here, imploring there, threatening everybody; offering good postings, or bad, promotions or th wrath of the Government. I could quote instances. And every evening this motely crowd would converge on to the Chief Minister's House with requests or complaints. Some officials were taken to task some were even penalised, others rewarded. Touts flourished, so did some of the officials. Most lost heart in sheer disgust. I am not condemning democracy outright on this score alone. These are now the accepted norms of this system. This happens everywhere else, even in the most advanced societies and has become a part of the system. You either accept or reject the system along with its plus and minus and weigh it, as a whole, against the other system or systems. But we were in our early stages of development and extreme attitudes under such circumstances, by either side, were inevitable. The hard boiled bureaucrat was bound to react adversely; he was bound to say, what nonsense is this? There was, unfortunately, nobody to come in between, nobody to mediate, nobody to loosen the stiffness. If a semi-literate Minister, who had undoubtedly been through the grinding mill, jumped into a rickshaw instead of a prestigeous staff car, holding aloft the Pakistan flag in his own two hands, to go and face a howling hostile mob, somebody should have understood and appreciated his point of view, rather than hold him up to bureaucrat ridicule. But each went his own way, each lost his bearings, each took the wrong turning, each got lost. This is a merciless world; it has no place for lost souls.

In a fast developing economy where one bureaucratic hand dispenses unlimited patronage, the hand which was dispensing to others instead started grabbing itself. Why not? It looked like a free for all and there was no accountability and even if there was, it was deliberately wrapped up in such a confusion of cobwebs that nobody could or would make out the chaff from the straw.

My venerable friend, Pir Ali Mohammad Rashidi, has written some excellent articles in the Press about the innocence of the poor politicians and the way they were victimised by the unscrupulous avaricious bureaucrats, the bureaucrats according to Pir Sahib, were in a deeply laid out conspiracy to cheat the politicians of the fruit of their struggle for Independence and to make sure that democracy does not succeed. I presume he is referring only to the period between 1947 and 1958, because this was the decade of the struggle for ascendency between bureaucracy and democracy. After that there was a decade of Martial Law and then a dictatorial democracy in which the bureaucrat was constantly on the run and Pir Sahib himself was the beneficiary Or was he not? So, the condemnatory period would be limited to about a decade only, out of three of the total existence of Pakistan as an independent entity. Or about one-third of the total It is all very well to talk of the deeply laid conspiracy on the part of the wicked bureaucrat against the poor innocent politician. I suppose this refers to what Ghulam Muhammad did and how Sikandar Mirza came into power. I may perhaps concede the point, presuming at the same time, with a long stretch of imagination that Munir belonged to the executive arm of the administration and not its judicial. Leaning heavily on this edifice of presumptions, how does all this become a conspiracy on the part of the bureaucracy as a whole, as a class? Let us not forget one or two things The senior bureaucrats of the time are all dead now and may God bless their souls; Ch. Mohammed Ali, Mumtaz Hassan, Said Hassan, G Ahmad, Shujaat Ali Hasnie, Pir Ahsan-ud Din, Col Shah Ikram Ullah, Col. Rahim and many others. At the time of the Pakistan Movement particularly between 1946 and 1947, most of these gentlemen were serving in the Government of India in New Delhi, were constantly in touch with the Muslim League leadership and gave it valuable help and advice. Who denies this?

Was that a conspiracy against the interests of Pakistan? Was Ch. Mohammed Ali's book a conspiracy against Pakistan? Did Ch. Mohammed Ali gain, individually, or lose by throwing away an absolutely brilliant civil service career for a political headache? Well may one ask what were the politicians doing during this very decade? Why were they playing marbles in the Constituent Assembly instead of producing a Constitution? Did they have well-defined, clear-cut party programmes which they took to the people? What were they doing crossing the floor of the House every day and for what consideration? What didn't they do in the few elections which were held? Does anybody want instances? Was this also a conspiracy on the part of the bureaucrats? Does anybody know what part was Qaiyum Khan playing in this and how the secret letters of his right-hand man, Shams ul Haq, in Urdu and in his own handwritting, under the code name Nasreen, were intercepted by the Peshawar C. I. D., how the handwriting was laboriously checked and rechecked by handwriting experts and how the Government was kept informed from day to day how things were developing. I hope Mushtaq Ali Shah, at that time in charge o. this operation on behalf of the Peshawar C. L. D., is still alive to bear me out. But Ghulam Mohammad struck first. Then who was conspiring against whom? I could develop this further, but since I am not joining issues, I will leave it here. Well, then the bureaucrats conspired against the politicians. I am not backing the bureaucrat; what I am trying to say is that bureaucracy, as a class, failed to withstand the political and administrative pressures, generated by the politician at this stage, and either got disheartened and lost interest in public service or, worse, decided to make hay while the sun was shining. Result. The tone of administration went down. It is so very easy to splash mud, but then it smears everybody the guilty as well as the innocent, alike. This article has not been written to splash mud; in fact, its purpose is exactly the opposite.

Well, then at this stage Ayub Khan's Martial Law arrived and inspired awe. Many people were preparing to see a lot of other people being dragged to the gallows. Nothing of the kind happened though. All that it did was to start a process of screening of civil servants. A lot of them were roped in, not on an ad hoc basis, not because the noose conveniently fitted their necks, but as the result of very careful and laborious investigations spreading over many months. The reasons for this exercise were obvious. First and foremost is the fact that a Martial Law is a negation of all normal laws; it is revolutionary, and, therefore, in its own justification, it must produce, revolutionary results, through revolutionary procedures. Second, the machinery of accountability so far had been in the hands of the bureaucrats themselves and, by and large, it had failed to produce results. Third. The bureaucrat is an unpopular creature at the best of times, because of the very nature of his job, and, therefore, to give him a whipping is always a popular pastime. Therefore, the Martial Law regime had to resort to something sensational and that was this screening process through high-powered screening committees. First there were detailed investigations through civilian investigating teams, then charge sheets were served and the accused were given full opportunity to defend themselves. Those who were screened out were given the full benefits of leave, pension, etc. I am defending neither the philosophy nor the procedures; I am merely giving details of what happened. Many of the affected officers were provided with, or at least offered, alternative jobs, many were accommodated outside the bureaucratic structure and each, or at least the senior ones, got a personal letter from the President. The politicians were put through a somewhat similar process of screening. I was concerned with the cases of some of them, but let me relate something about two of them with whom I had nothing to do. One was the late Mr. Khuhro. He was personally disliked by Ayub Khan, for whatever reasons, and I do not know who prepared the case against him and on whose orders. But one day the President gave Khuhro's file to me and asked me for my personal opinion. I found really nothing in the case and this is exactly what I told the President. He accepted my advice and dropped the proceedings. The same thing happened about Qaiyum Khan. Some provincial organisation had prepared the case against him. The President gave me the file for my advice. I found the evidence biased and exaggerated and said so. Ayub Khan did not like it but certainly dropped the proceedings, at least on this score. And what about Pir Sahib himself? I know as much about his EBDO proceedings as he does, possibly more. But this exercise is not in defence of any one particular sector. The purpose is not to apportion blame or to find fault; the purpose is to find a remedy. I claim some background knowledge and some experience of what happened up to this stage. So, let me say one or two things. There was no witch hunt against individuals or a class of individuals. Full opportunity was given to everybody to defend himself. Zafar-ul-Ansar defended himself over a period of weeks before a committee consisting of Manzur Qadir, Khalid Sheikh, Shoaib and Ibrahim. Suhrawardy defended himself before a judge of the High Court, in public, item by item, from day to day, and full, absolutely full, coverage was permitted in the Press. And so on and so forth. But I will go beyond this. I am now a quarter of a century older and, in retrospect, I would say that the regime had over-reacted, both in the case of the politician as well as in the case of the civil servant. All this was not quite necessary, certainly not in this way. The long-range results did not justify the means.

Yahya regime

What followed was worse. The next regime, Yahya Khan's Martial Law, under the cover of screening, started settling old scores. Such witch hunts have a snowballing effect. The lesser dignitories start raking up their private enmities. I speak with some knowledge and confidence and am prepared to back up every word I say. This regime decided to start criminal proceedings against some senior civil servants. The punishment was imprisonment and fine. The list, I think contained ten names, but they started off with three. One of them, the former Governor of the State Bank, used to be put into an open jeep, handcuffed and surrounded by an armed guard, and was driven up and down th crowded road on which the main State Bank building was located. Having gone thus far, the trials were suddenly given up. One of the accused claimed he asked for a witness who had to testify whether it was true that a list had been prepared of about a dozen civil servants who had to be prosecuted, no matter. Out of the three civil servants being prosecuted, two rehabilitated themselves in a manner unachievable in the wildest dreams of their tormentors. What does it prove? It is a long story and a painful one. One day somebody may be in a position to relate it, at least in part.

The net result was that hundreds of civil servants were thrown out without knowing why and without getting an opportunity to defend themselves. What would you expect under the circumstances? More rot set in. Later exercises when Bhutto took over did away even with these formalities. Mere lists were prepared and announced in the Press. It was as simple as that: How was Qamar-ul-Islam thrown out? And why was he rehabilitated soon afterwards? He was amongst the most brilliant of the old I.C.S. officers. The whole thing is sickening.

But two even more remarkable things happened. Being thrown out of service was by now an accepted procedure. A new revolutionary scheme was evolved for intake into the Services. This was called the lateral system of entry. Somebody, in his individual wisdom, decided that there was considerable hidden talent in the country which was not finding a place into the civil services through the normal procedures. This talent should, therefore, be inducted direct on an ad hoc basis. So, the search for talent started and, understandably, led to the homes of the relatives, friends and protegés of the party in power. Thus hidden talent was unearthed and inducted direct, in many cases short circuiting all procedures, even competitive examinations. An official living abroad was thus inducted into the Foreign Service. I asked him how? He said he was merely asked to make out a precis of a long rigmarole speech of a politician and this brought out all the hidden but recognisable talent in him.

The other thing was the break-up of the Service structures. Instead, three or more services, more or less similar, were grouped together and officers became interchangeable. In other words as I understand it, officers would be changing jobs frequently, hopping from one into another. How would you fix inter se seniority then? If seniority and therefore promotion, remains in a constant state of flux all the time, how would you expect the officers to get into a settled frame of mind. When the scheme was in a nebulous state many years ago, I asked a senior civil servant, how would it work? He said it was like handing over a watch to a little boy, asking him to rip it up into all its small component parts, and then finally to put it back again with the additional proviso that it should work better. You might as well be asking for the moon.

Vilification

Simultaneously, to bulldoze public opinion a vast campaign of vilification was launched against public servants and ingeneous ways were devised to maltreat, insult and intimidate them. All constitutional safeguards were withdrawn; the few administrative safeguards had already lost their meaning. At this stage the so-called revolutionary land reforms were brought in under the cover of a civilian Martial Law. These reforms set aside the civil servants, serving as well as retired, for an absolutely unheard of discriminatory treatment as a class of citizens entirely different from all others and protection was given to this law under the Constitution. Did any gentleman who had anything to do with this Constitution say a word about this for or against or understand its implications? The same set of gentlemen now shout from the nearest housetops against the corrupt and inefficient bureaucracy. It is a callous and a vindictive law which will not stand on the statute book of any civilised society for a single day. At the same time all civilian awards for long and meritorious service were cancelled with retrospective effect. While this vast campaign of vilification and victimisation was in full swing, not one word was said by anybody—legislators, intelligentia or the common man—in defence of public servants or public service. Which public service in which country of the world will be able to stand up to such blows? The result is before everybody. I am at the receiving end and could recount innumerable details which will make the reader sick. With all this happening the bureaucrat, inevitably, retained full powers of patronage One little movement of his pen could confer or deny a fortune. What would you expect under these circumstances

This is where we stand at present. But wait a minute. This is not all. There are other things we must take notice of. On the socio-economic front, two revolutionary things have happened. First the administrators of today, those in the age group of thirty to fifty, or more accurately almost everybody are the product of an enormous socio-economic upheaval. They saw the light of day in circumstances of extreme destability'. It certainly wasn't their fault: it just happened to be like that. They may be the children of disappointment, bitterness, grief, anger. I hope they are not, but who can say? Their orientation into a balanced, sober, correct leadership in the domain of administration may be an awkward a difficult process. Who is going to ease them into it?

The second thing which has happened, and continues to happen right in front of our eyes even now is that a lot of people have earned a lot of money abroad, something unthinkable in the home market If not the whole at least a part of this earning is being sent back home, in one shape or another Now money is a very powerful factor in regulating human affairs.

But here other human qualities have failed to keep pace, for example, education, culture, ethics, good conduct, decency. These are things which you just cannot go and buy in the market. The result is that one wheel of the cart is moving at a speed which is different from the speed at which the other wheel is moving. This creates an imbalance in mental attitudes, in social behaviour, and this lack of balance will ultimately rebound on the administration and on the administrators. There is nothing one can do about it. These are the unavitable evolutionary processes and one has to accept them as they come. I am merely drawing attention towards this.

Bureaucracy in Pakistan has been through a very difficult process of evolution and the process continues In fact, I see more difficult times ahead. I haven't said a word about what may happen if the Afghan freedom fighters in our midst suddenly get 'destablised', or there is an outbreak of insurgency, or there is an upheaval in the Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf area or sparks start flying about from the global interests of the Super-Powers in this area. The dark clouds are nearer than the clear blue sky Our bureaucracy is in a mess It can lean back no further Its resilience is nil. How do we put the house in order?

I make the following suggestions:-

1. All injustice done to bureaucracy, as a class, in the last Constitution should be rectified.
2. Adequate and meaningful safeguards should be provided in the Law
3. The Public Service Commission should be strengthened to make it the effective custodian of the rights and privileges of the Services.
4. The Service cadres should be recreated.
5. Lateral entry should be abolished.
6. Age of retirement should be refixed at fifty-five.
7. Extension in service should be abolished
8. Pay scales should be revised and 'hidden benefits' abolished.
9. Pensionary benefits should be revised.

I have deliberately refrained from commenting on the proposed institution of "Ombudsman" and the philosophy of accountability, and end this essay in the hope that it will generate some healthy discussion.

BAR COUNCIL AMENDMENT CRITICIZED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 19 Jul 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Murtaza Malik]

[Text]

PESHAWAR, July 18: The Peshawar High Court Bar Association which met here today in an emergency session, with its President Ismail Qureshi in the Chair, strongly condemned the latest amendment in the Bar Council Act and demanded its immediate withdrawal.

The meeting which discussed at length the consequences of the amendment was addressed among others by Syed Iftikhar Gilani, Syed Sibtul Hassan, Latif Afridi and Masood Kausar. They described the step as negation of the basic concept of Pakistan and observed that it was an attempt to to demolish an, institution which had always been the torch-bearer of the people's rights and which firmly stood for the rule of law.

While condemning the amendment the meeting resolved that in case it was not withdrawn, the lawyers whould have no alternative but launch a movement. It was further resolved that all those including Attorney General Pirzada who were associated with amendment should quit their offices as they had failed to protect the dignity of the profession.

Meanwhile, Bar Council member Khan Bahadur Khan has also strongly condemned the recent amendment in the Bar Council Act and said it was unacceptable to the lawyers as a whole and therefore demanded its immediate withdrawal.

In a statement he said the Bar Councils and the Bar Associations had always been struggling for a constitutional and legal government and the rule of law which was the basic purpose of the creation of Pakistan and was in the interest of the country. People participation in the affairs of the country he said was as important as a strong defence.

The lawyers being an intellectual section of the society could not remains aloof from the national affairs. They had played an important role in the Pakistan Movement and had also been in the forefront to safeguard the integrity and solidarity of the country and the people rights but it was a pity that through this amendment they had been debarred from taking part in the national politics.

The member has also appealed to all the Bar Associations in the country to hold their meetings immediately and convey their reactions on the adjustment to the High Court Bar Associations so that a joint meeting of the all the High Court Bar Associations and other representatives of the lawyers community could be held after Eid to decide the course of action. He has also written to the NWFP Bar Council Chairman to convene an early meeting.

Khan Bahadur Khan said instead of indulging in such an exercise within the country, the government should concentrate on helping the Palestinians who were engaged in Jehad against Zionism. Pakistan being the citadel of Islam was duty bound to take part in the Jehad he said.

SHAMSUL ISLAM NAZ
Add from Faisalabad:

As a sequel to the recent amendments made in the legal Practitioners and Bar Council Act an emergent session of the District Bar Association Faisalabad, expressed grave concern and indignation in a resolution of condemnation. The resolution styled the amendments as 'interference in the working of the bar associations and bar councils, and a hurdle in the path of freedom of opinion and deemed it as a ghastly, and organised "conspiracy" to the curb the last "remnements" of democracy in the country.

The resolution demanded from government in unequivocal terms the withdrawal of the said amendments, failing which black flag would be hoisted over the building of the District Bar Association, till such time as the with drawal is not effected.

The resolution further pledged a one hour boycott of local courts daily as a mark of protest.

BAR ASSOCIATION CRITICIZES AMENDMENTS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 20 Jul 82 p 1

[Text]

LAHORE, July 19: The General House of the Lahore High Court Bar Association, in an emergency meeting here today has decided to hoist black flag on its premises and a full day boycott of the courts on July 21, protesting against the current amendments enacted into Legal Practitioners and Bar Council Act.

The resolution stated these amendments as extremely unwise.

The meeting also suggested to put these unjust amendments into the All Pakistan Lawyers Convention, likely to be held in the last week of September this year. The House appealed to the lawyers to accelerate their struggle for the people's rights.

The resolution called for the immediate withdrawal of the amendments, which according to them, permitted non-members of the Bar to have a right of legal practice and restriction of Bar Associations to indulge in politics.

PESHAWAR BUREAU ADDS: The defunct PML (Pagara Group) Vice President Syed Sibtul Hassan has condemned the amendments in the Legal Practitioners Act and the Bar Council Act whereby the government, he said, had tried to cripple the Bar as a whole.

The lawyers, he said, in a statement firmly believed in the rule of law and the restoration of democratic norms in the country without having any ambition for power. Every lawyer whether he was member of the Federal Shoora or not, he added, was political minded and no statute could deprive him of this right.

The amendment, he remarked, aimed at saving the members of the Bar who had been nominated to the Shoora and had been ousted from the Bar Association on that account and were hence not in a position to practice. He appealed to the lawyers community to stand like a rock against such tendencies and protect their autonomy and dignity. (Another story on Page 6).

REACTIONS TO BAR ACT AMENDMENT REPORTED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 22 Jul 82 p 8

[Text]

LAHORE, July 21: Eminent Jurist and former Attorney General of Pakistan, Sh. Ghiaz Muhammad has said mere expression of opinion by Bar Association on political issue bearing a legal and constitutional aspect, will not be hit by the prohibitive provision of section 59 which has been added in the Legal Practitioners and Bar Council Act, 1973.

In a statement issued to the Press analyzing the amendments made through an Ordinance in the Legal Practitioners and Bar Council Act, he said "In fact the newly added section, 59-A may well serve to avoid disunity in bar" "by preventing political activity, understood in the restricted sense, organising or canvassing in favour of a political party".

He, however, suggested that the expression 'political activity' may be defined in the legal Practitioners and Bar Councils Act, in order to place the matter beyond the sweep and to set at rest misgivings.

He reminded that there is no precedent or practice in any other country permitting political activity in a Bar Association. About other amendments, He said, the same have not evoked any mentionable reaction in bar. He, however, proposed 'a dialogue between the Government and the accredited representatives of the bar may help in sorting out matters.

He said in the statement: A question that is agitating the minds of members of the Bar is whether the newly-added clause will prohibit "the expression of views, by a bar association through a resolution on political issues bearing a legal or constitutional aspect".

The comments that have appeared in Press on the subject do not reveal a uniform conception as to the meaning of the said section 59-A. A critical examination of the section seems necessary to restore the perspective. The expression 'political activity' is not defined in the said Ordinance. The expression, however, finds mention in M.L.R. 24 which prohibits 'political activity' as a general law of the country". He said.

The explanation appended to para 2, therefore, defines 'political activity' as organising a political party or canvassing or campaigning in respect thereof, etc. According to para 40F M.L.R. 24 a Press conference an interview to the Press or a Press statement are not included in the expression political activity, made punishable views does not fall within the purview of political activity. Considering that M.L.R. 24 and the said section 59A are in pari materia it is permissible, according to established canons of interpretation of statutes, to understand the expression 'political activity' as used in section 59/A in the same sense as is assigned to it in M.R.L. 24. That being so it readily maintainable that mere expression of opinion of Bar Association on political issues bearing a legal and constitutional aspect will not be hit by the prohibitive provision of section 59A.

In fact the newly added section 59-A may well serve to avoid disunity in bar by preventing 'political activity' (understood in the restricted sense of organising and lobbying) as may be intended to cater to the interests of political party or other. For membership of a Bar association is likely to represent different heads of political opinion and affiliation to different political parties and to allow therein political activity understood in the above mentioned sense is bound to spell disturbance of unity of Bar.—AFP

SENIOR OFFICERS GROUP STRUCTURE TO CHANGE

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 19 Jul 82 p 8

[Article by Saeed Qureshi]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, July 18: The new structure of the Superior Services now in the offing, offers a different setup for the Office Management Group (OMG) and the Pakistan Information Service, it was learned here today.

According to sources reliable the OMG would be disbanded and its officers dispersed to other groups, the Pakistan Information Group will be remodelled and the selection of the officers to be inducted into the service done on a different pattern.

While the prevailing method of selecting officers through an examination will be done away with, new staff will be taken from among the CSP officers as well as the professionals drawn from media and the Press.

The OMG is likely to be replaced with the former system of Under-Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries. The number of those to be affected in the OMG group is reported to be a few hundred.

It has not known as to how their seniority and other terms of service will be decided after they take up their new assignments with new establishments.

The new changes are being termed as 'radical' and according to competent observers, will give ascendancy to the District Management Group (formerly the CSP) over officers of other services.

These Journalist Officers will be able to make horizontal movements from one service to another, and will be linked with a special pool which will be created to facilitate their mobility.

A few meetings at the level of Secretaries have already been held to consider the dissolution of the OMG group.

These sources say that the Information Group's fate was also being considered and the decisions about both the groups will be announced simultaneously.

The committee to evolve a viable mechanism to enact the changes is reportedly faced with certain procedural bottlenecks, which it is trying to overcome.

CIVIL SERVICE BUREAUCRACY DISCUSSED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM Magazine in English 22 Jul 82 pp A, B

[Article by M. Bashir]

[Text]

THE Civil Service in Pakistan has been a much misunderstood and at times a much maligned institution. There are many questions which agitate the public mind about this institution some of which have even been the subject of dissertations by well known personalities. The aim of this article is to analyse some of the most common notions amongst a host of others about bureaucracy, as distinct from the Civil Service of Pakistan (CSP), which have troubled the public mind during the last three decades.

These notions include its homogenity and power-oriented attitude, its passion for secrecy methods of working, its self professed morality accountability, its rather doubtful self-acclaimed general managerial expertise and ability, its arrogance, its aloofness from society and its ability to survive.

To an outsider the civil service may appear to be a homogeneous organisation, but in fact it is not so. The foundation stone of the indigenous civil service cadre was laid in continuation of the old Indian Civil Service (ICS) through the creation of the Civil Service of Pakistan (CSP) in 1950. Although many of the civil servants who were inducted into the CSP during the fifties believed that they were the progeny of the ICS, but this was not true as the old ICS officers considered themselves more blue blooded than their successors. A major reason was that while entry into the Indian Civil Service (ICS) was partly through an All India competitive examination and partly through nominations of the scions of the landed aristocracy and urban notables, the entry to the Civil Service of Pakistan was open for everybody. The examination, however, had a tucked in high marks carrying viva voce which offered an area of manipulation and was also regulated through the provincial quota system. Those who were at the top in the examination got into the Civil or Foreign Service whereas the remainder went off into such cadres as taxation, postal etc, which were considered to be inferior. There is no doubt that upto the mid sixties it was the ambition of every young educated Pakistani to qualify the competitive examination and to head for the elite services. However the withdrawal of the constitutional protection of service security and the first screening carried out by Ayub Khan soon after his takeover of 1958 served as the beginning of many jolts that the bureaucracy was to suffer. The disdainful attitude of the CSPs towards colleagues of other services resulted in an environment of bitterness within the service structure and later on towards the polarisation of hostility towards them. The situation was made worse through their manipulation because of which all prize posts went to their own members and their future promotions were safeguarded. This resulted in street demonstrations against the Civil Service at a time when the political agitation which toppled Ayub Khan was also in full swing. A few years later Yahya Khan sent home some 303 senior Government officials including some CSPs on charges of inefficiency and corruption. This was the second jolt which bureaucracy was to suffer and which lowered its former image of being an attractive and prestigious occupation. The final was provided by Bhutto's sacking of 1300 officers on an all Pakistan basis and the implementation of the Administrative Reforms of 1973.

These Reforms although well conceived and based on earliar impartial studies conducted by local and foreign experts, including Justice Cornelieus, were poorly implemented and tended to convey the impression and may in fact have been politically motivated. An essential element of these reforms was to break the hegemony of the superior genralist service viz the CSP by such means as having a unified cadre on All Pakistan basis. The Reforms provided for the infusion of fresh blood into an otherwise stagnant bureaucracy by induction of professionals from whichever quarter available. The net result was that the period 1973-77 saw accelerated promotions of existing Government servants of cadres other than CSP who qualified through the lateral entry scheme and the induction of a few highly qualified professionals who entered the corridors of power carrying the erroneous impression of serving the nation and enjoying the power and prestige which the services carried earlier. The overall image of the lateral entrant became synonymous with a political appointee, who in many cases was sandwiched between a superior belonging to a constituted service and a subordinate who felt that his promotion had been robbed from him. Another upshot of this period was that the former Civil Service of Pakistan (CSP) was temporarily successful in restoring itself to the exercise of power. Virtually every Ministry, department and autonomous corporation is today manned by a member of this service.

It is obvious that the only real way for any kind of a Government of come closer to the people lies in the elimination of any organised group which performs the job of acting as a go between for the regime in power and which laces its advice wholly with the intent of furthering its own longevity and interest. Again if the history of three decades of Pakistan can be taken as a guide for the future, no amount of security that a group may create for itself can shield it from the effects of the country's turbulent future.

One of the ways of bringing the Government closer to the people lies in the introduction of the corporate concept to the public services. No civil servant regardless of his ability, knowledge, wisdom or expertise should be permitted to hold a public office for more than 25 years and should be retired honourably if other things are right after this tenure. Such a system would assure fresh blood and ideas to come into the main stream from within bureaucracy itself, and would automatically arrange removal of dead wood and provide hope for the younger generation in the Government. A public office should mean all commissions, group, or any other temporary body which is set up with Government interest as retired bureaucrats have a way of weaving their way into such organisations. At the same time there should be complete freedom to retired Government servants to engage in business or seek employment in the private sector, except in foreign missions.

Despite the passage of time and the general change in the situation all around what has kept the CSP together? The answer probably lies somewhere between their self opinionation of being an elite group and an identification with bureaucrats of the bygone days when the British raj was all supreme, and the association with their alma mater the "CSP Academy" where probably a batch rode their horses and spent a couple of years of their early youth together. To a CSP the Academy is the cornerstone on which the whole edifice of his character has been built. The espirit de corps for those who passed through the portals of the CSP Academy means virtually in to co-operation with a batch mate and a junior and blind obedience to an unwritten code of respect, for the superior.

As regards power orientation there are valid reasons for this outlook considering that a freshman started his career in a district where the basic power in public administration lies. As an Assistant or Deputy Commissioner and thereafter as Commissioner the public in the district or division is virtually at the mercy of these officials and their counter parts in the police. It is not very difficult therefore to develop contacts for the future through dispensation of favours which they could repay in later years when they enter public life. This contact base provides the security of the individual during the rest of his working life.

It is not fair to accuse the bureaucracy of power orientation for it cannot be blamed for the powers with which they have been invested. Furthermore there is no system of public or internal accountability, the latter because the superiors themselves are usually the protectors, prepared to overlook its misdemeanours just as theirs were overlooked years back by their seniors. The initial power orientation remains with a bureaucrat for most of his life even though he may move into different kinds of jobs in the corridors of power. A field officer (a privilege formerly reserved for CSP officers alone) carries on in the trauma of being a divisional or district head until such time as he is jolted into the realities of the situation of being exposed to do file work or preparing summaries, all of which require a clerical bent of mind rather than that for which the famous CSP Academy had trained them.

For reforming bureaucracy it is therefore necessary to change the traditional pattern of division of real power. Obviously no commission or committee comprising of new or old bureaucrats will ever divest itself of power voluntarily. Changes can only be brought about through a two dimensional process involving a major shifting of powers vested in the field officers to local bodies, and through the streamlining and simplification of procedures to ensure least possible contact between the bureaucracy and the public. This would require reduction in the massive amount of paper work and by making the Government working revenue oriented, with papers being routed through banks and post offices against certain fees. Only an outside agency such as an international consultant can be expected to give an impartial opinion as to how the system can be reformed, provided its report is implemented and not put into cold storage as in the past.

The Civil Service of Pakistan (CSP) has traditionally considered itself to comprise of the best brains in the country. This may have been partially true some decades ago, but from the late sixties to the present time and in the future only second rate material can be expected to enter Government service. Firstly because the salaries and requisites offered, except for the top three tiers, are incomparable with relatively minor jobs in the private or public sectors or in comparison to a low level job in the oil rich countries. Secondly Government service today offers niether security nor the prestige of the past and unless one has outright intentions of misusing the office even a hand to mouth existence is virtually impossible. The brilliance of the CSP stands exposed as the country today faces the wisdom of their economic foresight and planning. The brilliant young men inducted in the early years, with the usual exceptions, appear in retrospect to have been of average intelligence, who had the knack of doing well in examinations. Today they appear to be unimaginative souls incapable of being classified as progressive managers no matter what criteria is used. The top level bureaucracy's statements on the national economy indicate that this institution is detached from the actual state of affairs, and a Pakistani feels the truthfulness of the statement "that the brown sahib" when partition took place.

The Civil Service of Pakistan (CSP) had prided itself on its moral and material integrity. The actual situation is that with the exception of perhaps a handful, it is difficult to find anybody who is not looking for an opportunity to be obliged. The vast tracts of agricultural lands and plots in the choicest urban areas of Pakistan and the beautiful houses belonging to these bureaucrats bear testimony to the integrity of the civil service. Islamabad, the habitat of bureaucrats in which plots were provided by CDA alongwith soft term loans for development is another example of bureaucratic honesty and the property thus built rented out at fantastic rates to Government owned corporations and autonomous bodies. If the family tree of the CSP is drawn up, many linkages particularly through marriage while be found. This system is necessary for keeping the Mafia restricted, as it provides the requisite backing for career as well as other benefits such as loans, land, foreign trips etc. readily. One way of establishing the accountability of bureaucracy could be by the publication on yearly basis of the declared assets of Government officers. This year book would let the public know how honest the bureaucracy that serves them is supposed to be.

It is claimed that the CSPs have general all round exceptional managerial ability. In fact the only management training the CSP officers have is in the control of law and order situation such as ordering lathi charges, imposing Section 144 etc. The CSP considers this management training far superior to any other kind of training and experience such as that in the field of business or industry. The CSP hard core has tried very hard to acquire managerial experience in other fields by sending its younger generation abroad for continuous exposure and training. As a matter of fact career planning in the Government is restricted to those belonging to the CSP only while the remaining services are expected to fend for themselves.

The reasons for the propogation and survival of the CSP lie in their ability for adjustment to a change in the situation, and being able to be on the right side of people who matter. This is further established through personal loyalty and service to the chair. Those who do not or cannot follow this policy guideline find themselves either under fire from the top or as Officers on Special Duty with the Establishment Division. The toll this type of service takes out of an individual would be reflected in the bulk of officers being unable to clear a standard psychiatric test today. It is suggested that at least the top three or four levels of the civilian bureaucracy be subjected to an annual psychiatric examination, since decision making at this level effects the entire country. The main reason for supposing these psychiatric disorders lie in power orientation which leads to alienation from even close family members and obliviousness to the total environment except colleagues, superiors, files and subordinates. The only disturbing factors to this otherwise steady state of a bureaucrat's life are premature retirement or dismissal when all the privileges of position evaporate rather suddenly. When this happens the individual comes face to face with the realities of life such as standing in a long queue to fulfil the bureaucratic requirements of existence. Being without the paraphernalia such as a peon, a desk and people hankering around him and shorn of power and glitter the bureaucrat becomes a victim of the same treatment he had given to the public when he was in the chair. At the same time his family members undergo a trauma for having got used to leading a protected life in Islamabad or the GOR's of the major cities adjustment to the real Pakistani environment becomes impossible. This "status shock causes deterioration in physical and mental health and this last period passes in reminescing about the past which can come no more. This is the main reason why bureaucrats who have honourably retired from service never call it a day but hang around power holders hankering for any kind of an office which may even remotely bring back a phantasy of the past.

To conclude it can be said that no matter how much any organised group in bureaucracy may try to propogate itself, its numbers must deplete with the passage of time, and such a future existence is only possible if it is prepared to shed its inhibitions and integrate people belonging to other services or groups with it. Furthermore the shape and attitudes of bureaucracy will also change with time as the public becomes more aware of its rights. To achieve this every Government in power will perforce have to bring about structural changes within itself through administrative reforms. The temporary resurgence of the CSP is therefore likely to be the last flicker before the Mafia quis the national scene in Pakistan at least in the form in which it has so far been known to exist.

PAKISTAN AMONG BIGGEST WORLD BANK BORROWERS

Karachi DAWN in English 28 Jul 82 p 12

[Text]

WASHINGTON, July 27: Pakistan and Bangladesh were the biggest borrowers after India of loans that are almost grants from the World Bank in the 12 months ending June 30, this year.

The total amount of loans under this category, worth 2,686,000,000 dollars went to 43 countries, including Pakistan, where the average income was 730 dollars and below. They run for 50 years and pay virtually no interest.

These loans are made by the International Development Association (IDA) also known as the Bank's "soft loan window".

Last year, loans of this type reached 3,482,000,000 dollars and went to 50 countries. This lending comes from contributions by 33 countries. It was cut sharply because the US Congress refused to appropriate the contribution promised by former President Jimmy Carter. Some of the other donors followed suit.

RECORD LENDING

Meanwhile, the World Bank, which is the biggest source of international aid for raising living standards, lent a record 13,016,000,000 dollars to 85 poor countries during the 12 months ending June 30 this year.

This was 725 million dollars more than the year before. But the increase was considerably smaller than the US inflation for the period, so that in real terms there was an actual decline in lending.

Interest on the Bank's new loans rose to 11.6 per cent annually at the end of the period, considerably less than such countreies could get from private banks.

Upt to the end of June, the interest rate to be paid during the life of the long-term World Bank loan was fixed in advance. Now, new loans will have variable rates, readjusted every six months and beginning at 11.4 per cent.

Borrowing by the Bank itself amounted to 8,521,000,000 dollars for the 12 months. It borrows in the United States, West Germany, Japan, and other more prosperous countries — as well as in Switzerland, which is not one of the 143 members.PPI.

PHASING OUT DEPENDENCE ON FOREIGN LOANS

The surging tide of economic self-reliance rooted in the historical currents that brought about the rapid decline of the colonial era after the Second World War, is now prompting economic planners in Pakistan to abandon their policy of heavy reliance on external borrowings.

External credit and loans which helped stimulate economic activity are beginning to be counter-productive.

Despite the fact that Pakistan has been selected by Washington as one of the ten developing states for quickening the pace of economic development through private investment and bilateral economic assistance influencing IBRD, IMF and other Western nations to follow suit, Islamabad is faced with a growing and critical problem of finding foreign exchange to service its debts.

To quote the deputy chairman of the planning commission Dr. Mahbubul Haq, 1.2 billion dollars out of 1.5 billion dollars gross 'aid' expected in 1982-83 would be spent on repayments and debt servicing. Net flow of external assistance would further decline sharply in next two to three years if the consortium members do not provide long term debt relief.

Pakistan's repayment and debt liabilities of 1.2 billion dollars constitute 50 per cent of export earnings of 2.4 billion attained in 1981-82, an abnormally high ratio much beyond the prescribed safe limit.

Neither the heavy subsidies nor the creeping depreciation of the rupee by some 20 per cent against the US dollar since January delinking decision, are expected to restore the export earnings to the level of 2.93 billion dollars achieved in 1980-81. The current year's target has been fixed at 2.8 billion dollars.

The sharp decline in the net flow of external assistance caused by high debt servicing liability, rampant international inflation and abnormal interest rates is limiting the capacity of the recipient country to borrow and dampening the enthusiasm of the donors to risk their capital with countries already heavily mortgaged.

The policy of donor states based on immediate temporary and transitional interests run counter to those of recipient countries evoking strong resistance of the South against the North and spur the Third World to adopt measures aimed at self-reliance. Immediate losses are helping develop a framework of policies for protection of long term interests of newly independent nations.

Recession and the accompanying protectionism in industrially advanced countries tend to restrict export from developing states and thus their capacity to service their debts and buy foreign plants and machinery. International inflation hinders imports from affluent markets of the West into the developing countries. Imports are increasing value-wise, though not quantity-wise in the same proportion. The great instability of the international monetary markets affects adversely the growth in world trade that slumped in 1980, for the first time in several years.

By restricting imports of the products of the third world, recession and protectionism in the affluent West are forcing the developing countries to rely increasingly on their own national markets. Protectionism cannot stem the surging tide of economic self-reliance

Despite the three times increase since 1977, exports have stagnated around 50 per cent of the annual import bill. Export earnings have primarily created congenial climate for external borrowings rather than move the country towards self-reliance. As stated by Finance Minister, Mr. Ghulam Ishaq Khan at a recent meeting of the Asian Development Bank at Manila export-led growth has ceased to be a realistic option.

Exports are supposed to finance imports of foreign technology, raw materials, skills and service external debts. The restriction on imports of manufactured goods into affluent markets from developing states reduce export earnings of the third world and also its capacity to buy foreign goods and services. And hence avenues are opened up for development of local technology, raw materials and expertise and indigenous capital accumulation.

Protectionism in affluent markets of the West is therefore a mixed blessing. It restricts exports and expansion of domestic manufacturing capacity based on foreign technology and in the process stimulates development of national capital goods industry. So is the case of devaluation which serves as a double-edged weapon in international environment specially marked by inflation.

Devaluation makes goods cheaper for the foreign buyer and imports costlier for the domestic purchaser and causes a greater outflow of net resources from a country whose currency has been devalued to a country which has maintained a stable exchange rate.

Though devaluation may cause a temporary set back through loss of net resources in foreign trade, it spurs the development of import substitutes. In a country like Pakistan where 85 per cent of the total imports are on account of capital goods and raw materials, devaluation inflates cost of production and restricts exports badly needed to finance imports, that could help fight recession in developed states.

The industrially advanced states which persuade developing states through IMF, IBRD and other lending institutions to devalue their currencies are able to make short term gains at the cost of long term interests.

Perhaps, in case of Pakistan, the greatest impetus to the development of the local technology was provided by the 1965 and 1971 wars when external assistance from the West was suspended. Pakistan today boasts of engineering goods industry capable of fabricating 70 per cent of the country's requirements of plants and machinery. The scarcity of the foreign exchange and the chronic balance of payments problem have forced it to abandon the concept of turn-key projects in favour of increasing patronage to domestically fabricated machinery.

External credits help donor states finance costly exports made expensive through high interest rates, tied nature of loans and mounting inflation. Maximization of profits by donors restricts the capacity of the borrowing countries to service their debts.

All devices of the developed world to exploit the markets of the developing countries are of temporary and transitional nature, which because of thier ill-affects, are compelling the developing states to take to the path of economic self-reliance.

The crisis-ridden developed world has ceased to be a model of economic growth for the developing states. Stagflation, a phenomenon, unknown to the 'free world till the early 1970s which combined inflation with recession, has shaken the economic foundations of the industrially advanced countries. And exchange rate upheavals with volatile behaviour of the dollar, whose exchange rate have been propped up much above its intrinsic worth, have liberated most of the currencies of the developing states from the hegemoney of the once mighty and stable U.S. currency.

Countries like Pakistan have been forced to delink the rupee's fortune from the fluctuating dollar and fix its exchange rate according to the dictates of their own foreign trade. The illusion of stability apparent in the rupee enjoying a fixed parity with the U.S dollar, has been shaken off. The unstable international monetary order, though hurting the interests of the developing countries, is illuminating the path of self-reliance.

Whereas liberalised imports at the instance of IMF have raised Pakistan's import bill, they have helped to increase the production of an imported-oriented industrial complex and farms fed on imported inputs like fertilizer. The average 6 per cent growth rate achieved for the past five years has made the country self-sufficient in major crops like wheat, rice, cotton and sugarcane. Pakistan has in fact emerged as a net exporter of foodgrain. Rice and cotton are substantial foreign exchange earners. And steps are now being taken to initiate sales of sugar in foreign markets. self-sufficiency in cement and fertiliser is round the corner.

Whatever steps the developed world takes to promote its self-interest counter to the interests of the developing states, brings temporary and transitional gains at the cost of their long-term benefits. The historical currents are against them. Political Independence of the third world has paved the way for the economic self-reliance.

And the dictates of self-reliance are expressed in many ways and specially through the high indebtedness of the borrowing states causing the net flow of external assistance to fall rapidly on the one hand and the limited capacity of the crisisridden donor states to extend credit to an increased number of countries at a much higher risk. And if the inflation continues unabated, the rich dividend yielding credit may be repaid at a much debased amount in real terms. Erosion of capital caused by galloping inflation, is also undermining, the hegemony of the affluent states over the developing countries specially in the field of economic planning and development.

Faced with an unfavourable international environment, Pakistan is laying stress on development of engineering goods industry, facilitated by the coming into operation of the Karachi Steel Mill. Increased domestic fabrication of machinery and plants would help undertake mechanisation and modernisation of agriculture and provide fillip to further industrialisation at less cost than a foreign assisted programme. Emphasis on development agriculture would also increase reliance on domestic efforts and resources.

Economic planners are now more conscious of the need to encourage labour-intensive small scale industries financed invariably by indigenous capital and based on local technology, materials and expertise.

Besides, regional district-wise planning is now being developed to foster economic growth based on specific features and characteristics of various areas and their requirements instead of just transplanting foreign technology on domestic soil that had led to the development of an imported oriented industrial complex based on foreign technology, raw materials and skills.

Officials of the Sind Government led by the Additional Chief Secretary Mr. R.A. Akhund are now supervising and guiding a team of experts to collect relevant economic date on each district which would be needed in formulation of regional development plans.

District-wise industrial development plans are also being formulated so as to initiate small scale industries based on local technology and raw materials followed later by medium and big-sized industries in which foreign technology may be required.

Recently, the federal government has also undertaken a series of steps to induce self-financing at various levels. With the exception of the Karachi Steel Mills, state industrial enterprises can no longer depend upon the national exchequer for the finances needed for expansion of existing industries or creation of new capacity. Provincial governments have been persuaded to find a greater proportion of funds from their own resources to finance their annual development plans. Cost of utility services are being raised to generate funds for financing new projects and repay external credits. Subsidies on consumer goods and production are being phased out whereas they are being retained on exports. Measures for self-reliance is thus initiated at various levels.

Notwithstanding the fact that the volume of imports have stabilised for the past three years, a five per cent surcharge has been imposed to restrict imports. In the current year's budget tariff protection has been extended to a number of domestic industries.

The liberal import policy is restricted within the framework of an import regime heavily oriented towards capital goods and industrial raw materials.

What Pakistan needs is to raise the yield per acre in agriculture which can be doubled or trebled without much difficulty if the small farmers or tenants find official policies do not tend to encourage monopolisation of the benefits of the increased production by the landed aristocracy or the privileged.

With no major dam or projects except the Chasma barrage proposed to be undertaken in the field of agriculture, Pakistan might as well turn its attention to the exploitation of mineral resources so far neglected because of the high cost and sophisticated technology involved. With the industrialisation programme almost entirely entrusted to the private sector, the government should be able to find resources to undertake such projects as the Saindak copper mines or processing of the Kalabagh iron ore.

FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS ASKED FOR MOBILE MEDICAL UNITS FCR REFUGEES

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 22 Jul 82 p 8

[Article by Saeed Qureshi]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, July 21: Pakistan has approached the Governments of Japan, South Korea, Norway and France as well as Rotary International, for 210 mobile medical units for Afghan refugees, whose number according to latest available figures has swelled to 27,17,727, it was reliably learnt here today.

While a fleet of 64 Mercedez Benz trucks purchased with West German Grant of five million marks, has arrived at Karachi Port another shipment of 240 trucks is due to reach Pakistan some time in September, which according to concerned quarters will help facilitate movement of foodgrains and other commodity aid from Karachi to the Refugee camps.

The government was reported to be seriously handicapped due to inadequate logistic arrangements to carry donated commodities to the camps and the latest measures statedly form part of government's efforts to overcome the problem. While according to reliable sources more financial and commodity aid was pouring into Pakistan, the consortium countries have announced assistance of Rs. 230 crore for the year 1982-83 for the welfare of the Afghan refugees.

This is said to be in addition to 190690650 dollars given by the World Food Programme so far. The aid is equivalent to 522,366 tonnes of wheat, 36216 tonnes of edible oil, 22,613 tonnes of D.S.M. and 3,000 tonnes of dates.

Meanwhile, it is learned that the government has declined to accept a commodity assistance worth five million from the U.S. Government and has instead suggested for the cash grant.

The Government it is further learned has approached the German Government to convert the loans given for drinking water supply schemes for refugees in the NWFP, into grants.

Meanwhile, the government has accepted a French Government offer of 12,000 tons of wheat for the Afghan refugees.

The French Government will reportedly also bear the cost of transportation from the Karachi port to the camps.

To beef-up the package of measures aimed at improving transportation of relief goods to the Afghan refugee camps, the President is said to have directed to place all the donated trucks under the control of the National Logistic Cell (NLC).

As for the operational control, the Commissioner Afghan refugees would maintain a close liaison with the NLC. According to a competent source funds will be placed at the disposal of the Commissioners Afghan refugees of Baluchistan and NWFP who will make payments to the NLC.

It is also learned that the tankers for moving kerosene oil to the camps will too be handed over by the Afghan Refugee Commissioner to the NLC.

An NLC source disclosed that they would be able to finalise the administrative arrangements latest by Sept. 15 provided they are not faced with funds' constraints.

NDP LEADER WELCOMES ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE MOVE

Karachi DAWN in English 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] Sardar Sherbaz Mazari, President of the defunct NDP, yesterday welcomed Maulana Shah Ahmad Noorani's move to convene a round table conference of all parties, but cautioned the people against having high hopes about its outcome.

During an informal talk with newsmen at his residence, he said the Maulana's approach seemed "quite flexible," and he (Mr Mazari) was "impressed by the genuineness of the offer."

Mr Mazari said if and when an invitation for the RTC was received by the MRD it would be duly considered. However, it would be ascertained there had been a "perceptible change" in the attitude of some parties, one of whose leaders talked repeatedly of his "link with the GHq," while the leaders of another party sought to "create confusion by harping on extra-constitutional subterfuges in league with the Government."

He said the MRD would not accept any deviation from the basic provisions of the 1973 Constitution.

Asked about the agenda of the proposed RTC, he said it could not be other than holding of elections expeditiously on the basis of the 1973 Constitution--a moot point on which there was agreement among all parties.

Mr Mazari did not seem hopeful about elections but he said that the situation was such that only a popularly elected government could tackle it effectively.

Mr Maifaj Mohammad Khan, chief of the defunct Qaumi Mahaz-i-Azadi, answering the newsmen's questions, said the MRD had established itself as a "people's movement," because it reflected their urge for a return to democratic rule. Parties outside the MRD's fold were welcome to join or cooperate with it on the basis of the latter's four-point programme, foremost being the holding of nationwide polls under the 1973 Constitution, he added.

Present at the informal Press talk were other MRD leaders including Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi, Khwaja Khairuddin, Mr Zainul Abedin, Mr Fatehyab Ali Khan, Mr Abid Zuberi and Mr Iqal Haider.

The leaders and the journalists were invited by Mr Mazari to see a BBC television film shot in Lebanon. The film, showing moving scenes of Israeli atrocities in west Lebanon carried interviews with Mr Yasser Arafat, Mr George Habbash, Mr Saib Salam, an Israeli commander as well as Lebanese, PLO and Phalangist representatives.

PLAN TO SET UP WORLD MUSLIM WOMEN'S BODY

Karachi DAWN in English 28 Jul 82 p 8

[Text]

A move was afoot to form an international Muslim Women's organisation on the pattern of Christian Women's Association, Begum Salima Ahmad, Secretary, Women's Division, Government of Pakistan, said in Karachi yesterday.

At a radio news conference, she said that working papers for the proposed organisation had been prepared and sent to President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq as well as the Foreign Office.

Need for formation of such an organisation was being felt for a long time to solve various problems faced by women in a concerted way. Pakistan, Begum Salima said, had been made the convenor of the organisation.

The project would, however, take some time to materialise, she added.

Emancipation programmes

Listing the women's emancipation programmes, she said about 5,000 adult literacy centres and a large number of training centres had been set up across the country, and up to Rs 70 million were earned by the women folk who had received training in sericulture, wood works, interior decorations, tailoring etc.

Five women's polytechnics had been sanctioned and work on some was underway. Hostels for working women were also being set up and there was a programme to set up model villages on self-help basis.

About the Family Laws Ordinance, she said that President Zia-ul-Haq had held out an assurance that it had constitutional protection.

To another question, she said that the Women's Division was preparing a programme for cooperative marketing. Its object is that the women folk could sell the products prepared by them at a proper price —APP

CABINET TO REVIEW SAINDAK PROJECT

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 20 Jul 82 p 8

[Article by Jawaid Bokhari]

[Text]

KARACHI, July 19: Pakistan is likely to seek financial assistance from lending institutions in Muslim States for 400 million dollar Saindak Copper Mining Project following its disappointment with the consortium of French-Canadian and Yugoslav firms, it was learnt here today.

The Islamic, Development Bank based in Saudi Arabia and some Arab financing agencies are believed to have been founded on the need for finances for Baluchistan's for finances for Baluchistan's most important project. Initial reponse is reported to have been positive.

The spade work in this connection is being done by the Bankers Equity chief D.M.Qureshi. Incidently BEL is the leading investment bank which has already lined up the required local resources of Rs. 150 crore through a syndicate of credit institutions.

The Saindak project would be financed to the extent of some 250 million dollars from external sources.

The final proposal of the French-Canadian and Yugoslav firms which were to supply plant and equipments and provide foreign exhange component of the project to the tune of 235 million dollars is not finding favour with the concerned officials because of the reluctance of the these companies to provide funds for token equity participation. Pakistan wants these companies to have stakes in the mining project to ensure smooth operations.

Officials concerned with the project financing feel that they would not face any difficulty in mobilisation of external resources once the government gives a go-ahead signal for mobilisation of required funds. The Federal Cabinet is expected to take up the consideration of the Saindak Project soon.

Apart from the French-Canadian-Yugoslav Consortium, Rumanians and Norwegians have evinced keen interest in the project. The Norwegians are reported to have offered machinery and equipment under a credit whose terms and conditions are relatively more favourable.

The Rumanians are understood to have offered credits ranging between 100 to 150 million dollars.

Saindak in Chagai district of Baluchistan is estimated to have 412 million tons of minerals mainly copper and including gold, silver, steel etc.

Charter-CBJ-Services Ltd of the U.K. who were engaged by Bankers Equity and the Pakistan Banking Council to have a fresh look at the feasibility and suggest locations for the metallurgical complex and transport facilities have submitted their report. These recommendations are expected to be placed before the Cabinet shortly.

PAKISTAN RAILWAYS' INTERNATIONAL COLLABORATION SAID TO BE POSITIVE

Karachi DAWN in English 28 Jul 82 p 8

[Text]

Pakistan Railways' entry in the field of international collaboration has yielded positive results and plans are afoot for increased cooperation with a number of countries including Saudi Arabia, Iran, Bangladesh, and Zimbabwe, an official spokesman said here.

Contract worth 104 million dollars was currently being executed in Saudi Arabia. It pertained to laying of 100 km track. Pakistan was also assisting Saudi Railways engineers.

With Iran, the spokesman said, Pakistan Railways would collaborate in the field of operation and maintenance of diesel electric locomotives. Discussions in this regard were held during the visit of Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan, Federal Finance Minister, to Tehran recently.

He said there would be large scale movement of goods to Iran in the coming months by rail route. For this purpose operation on the Quetta-Zahidan section is being augmented.

The spokesman said 50,000 tonnes of wheat and the same quantity of fertiliser exported soon from Quetta to Zahidan. Besides sizeable quantity of coke and barley will be sent. Pakistan Railways moved 20,000 tonnes of fertiliser from Karachi to Zahidan via Quetta last month.

He said a delegation will shortly visit Bangladesh to identify more areas of collaboration, as Pakistan Railways has already manufactured passenger coaches for Bangladesh and could sell more coaches and wagons to that country.

He said a team of railway officials left for Dacca on July 24 to participate in an international prequalification tender for the setting up of a diesel electric repair and maintenance workshop.

On the other hand, a team of technicians of Pakistan Railways was already in Zimbabwe to assist in the repairs and maintenance of diesel locomotives there.—PPI.

TARBELA POWER PLANT TO START BEFORE SCHEDULE

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 19 Jul 82 p 8

[Article by Asaf Sheikh]

[Text]

LAHORE, July 18: Units No. 5 to 8 of Tarbela Hydropower extension project will be commissioned ahead of schedule, an authoritative source told The Muslim here yesterday.

According to the previous schedule these units were due to be commissioned between October 1982 to March 1983 but according to the revised programme these would be put into operation between August-December this year.

The project was approved in 1975 by the Government of Pakistan to raise the existing electrical power supply at Tarbela from 700 MW units on Tunnel No2. The construction activity at the site commenced with the award of civil works in June 1978.

The project is being managed by WAPDA and the consultancy services are being provided by NESPAK in association with Acres International of Canada. The civil works costs are estimated at Rs.650 million.

The source said early commissioning of these units would not only reduce pressure on the existing power system in the country but would also make considerable savings in thermal generation.

In June 1981 WAPDA had cided to add two more units No.9 and 10 to the present extension project, thus increasing the total installed capacity to 1750 M.W. The two units are scheduled for completion in December 1981 and April 30, 1985. Construction of civil works for this second extension has already commenced.

CONTRACT

Messrs National Engineering Services of Pakistan (NESPAK) have won a prestigious contract in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia valuing 70 million dollars.

The project envisages construction management services of Al-Jawf Irrigation Improvement and Drainage Project in the Saudi Kingdom, about 200 Km south-east of tthe Jordanian border.

The scope of NESPAK services includes review of design of the project, construction and contract management and overall cost control.

The project comprises of a system of tube-well with water storage reservoirs, pumping stations for supply of irrigation water through a network of pipelines, and a network of sub-surface drains and ditches for efficient drainage of the irrigated area. The irrigation is proposed to be eventually based on the latest technology – the Drip Irrigation System. It is likely to take 24 months for completion.

VIABILITY OF SOLAR WATER PUMPS DISCUSSED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 17 Jul 82 p 7

[Article by Ejaz Naqvi]

[Text] The solar water pump provides an alternative source of irrigation in areas served by non-perennial canals and where water level is from 10 to 15 feet deep. It can produce water at a much lesser recurring cost than other mechanical devices as it harnesses the free inexhaustible energy of the sun through photovoltaic cells requiring little maintenance and no fuel at all. It functions automatically and fluently in dazzling sunshine. It has already been introduced successfully in several countries.

The sun's radiant energy is estimated at 1 353 kw per square mile in space at the mean distance of Earth from the sun. The absorption and scattering process in the atmosphere reduces it to 1 kw per sq M when it reaches the Earth. Pakistan's total share is about 1,000 times more than its current rate of energy consumption. The solar power may be transformed into heat and electricity by specific interactions with matter like photovoltaic cells. The mechanisation of agriculture has not made much impact on farms below 25 acres in spite of the fact that they constitute 59 percent of the cultivated land in the country. Over 30 percent of 3.8 million farmers in the country are holding farms up to 12.50 acres fed only by non-perennial canals. They need a permanent supply of irrigation water to optimise crop production. Under the 2 million acres cultivated by these farmers fresh ground water exists at a depth of 10 feet or less.

In late 1980 Intermediate Technology Industrial Services (ITIS) of the U.K. provided 14 solar energy pumps made by Solar Electric International (SEI) to the Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan for demonstration, testing and evaluation at small farms under different field conditions in the country. These were installed at ADBP loanees' selected small farms in 13 regions during March 1981. But later in May 1981, the pumps were shifted to the places where the water table did not exceed 15 feet. The areas where the pumps are now proposed to be concentrated are Sukkur, Muzaffargarh, Gujranwala and Swabi.

The SEI units which were tested consisted of a photovoltaic array rated at 250 peak watts connected through an electronic maximum power controller with a submersible motor directly attached to a single stage pump. The output measured at various sites was 2 to 2.5 litres per sec. from water table depth of 8 to 12 ft. at peak hours of sunshine. The area being irrigated was 1/4 to 1/2 of an acre per day. Depending on the system of irrigation and nature of crops, it was found that 2.5 to 4 acres could be commanded with these solar pumps provided: (i) the total lift was less than 3.5 metre (about 11 ft); (ii) the well was centrally placed to the land requiring water; (iii) field distribution channels were of reasonable size and in good condition; (iv) a mixed cropping was carried out so that the peak water requirement of crops grown do not coincide, and; (v) full use was made of the solar pump, i.e. it was used for 10 hours a day.

Out of 15 solar energy pumps installed by the ADBP, 7 units went out of order owing to faults in pump sets which had to be replaced. In two sets defects occurred in the electrical connectors and these were repaired. Defects also occurred in maximum power controllers which were also replaced.

The capacity of 2.5 litres per second at 4 metres lift of the SEI pumps already tested is too low. To be acceptable to our farmers a solar pump should discharge 4 to 5 litres per second at 4 to 5 metres lift, giving a total output of not less than 80 cubic metres per day.

The ADBP therefore, proposes to import higher-capacity units for distribution to farmers to demonstrate the economic and technical viability of this technology. The pilot project is aimed at stimulating the widespread adoption of the technology and laying the basis for the establishment of a local licensed manufacturing capability.

But the current price of the pump is too heavy for the small farmer to bear. It comes to about Rs. 42,000. But according to the Bank, the price is falling at the international level and will come down to Rs. 17,500 in 1985-86. The farmer will have to pay Rs. 20,000 out of which he could make a down payment of Rs. 4,000. The Bank can lend to him the remaining Rs. 16,000 repayable in seven years.

The Federal Government has agreed to a short-term subsidy programme drawn up by the Bank. But the shortage of available funds does not allow a full-fledged dissemination of the technology. There is however, a possibility of the provision of sizable funds by some Canadian sources.

CRISIS IN CARPET INDUSTRY DISCUSSED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 17 Jul 82 p 17

[Editorial: "The Carpet Crisis"]

[Text]

Carpet manufacture, occupying third place as a foreign exchange earner, was first hit by recession in the importing countries; now it is threatened with large-scale insolvency and closure in the wake of the banks' drive for recovery of loans in the industry. It is estimated that about half a million workers all over Pakistan will face unemployment as export closes down and the loans have to be repaid in respect of goods not sold. Contracts worth Rs. 25 crore have not fructified and enterprising exporters still willing to run the gauntlet of a fast-shrinking foreign market are faced with new difficulties because of the rupee's eroding value vis-a-vis the dollar. Pakistan's income from carpets during 1980-81 was Rs. 225 crore; during 1981-82, it has already come down to about Rs. 160 crore. When the banks foreclose on their loans, the weaving units may be forced to close down.

The method of doing business on loans was devised by the entrepreneur who did not own his own factory. He relied on the output of the cottage industry scattered all over the country, mainly in the districts. The carpet boom in the West bestowed sudden prosperity on the carpet-makers, gave sustenance to the workers engaged on looms in the countryside and buttressed the balance of payments. But the base of this nascent industry was flimsy. Carpet-making was not concentrated in factories where quality could be standardised and maintained. When the buyer in the West became niggardly with his money he began to dictate terms and pattern and quality instead of picking and choosing from stocks accumulated by the manufacturers in Pakistan. As no factories exist, bulk orders for quick delivery cannot be executed; hence, the competitive edge of India and China. Business has shied away from setting up factories as they attract the income tax and labour laws. One way to promote the troubled industry is to allow it to set up factories waiving income tax at the production level and clamping it only on export income. Immediately, the banks must sympathise with the plight of the exporters and relax their conditions of recovery of loans. Unless these concessions are made, the carpet industry cannot remain a leading foreign exchange earner it has developed into over the last few years.

EXPORTS TO RCD COUNTRIES--Karachi, July 16--Pakistan's exports to RCD countries totalled Rs. 825.4 million during the first 11 months of the fiscal 1981-82 forming 3.8 percent of the country's total exports which aggregated 21,837.7 million. According to State Bank of Pakistan sources export to RCD countries during the same period last year amounted to Rs. 1,894.1 million. The main items of exports to RCD countries during the period were articles of textile materials (Rs. 173.9 million), rice (Rs. 171.6 m), cotton fabrics (Rs. 144.6m), non-cotton woven textiles (Rs. 83.1 m), untiled Barley (Rs. 53.5 m), leathers (Rs. 35.7 m), paper and paper boards (Rs. 19.4 m), wool and animal hair (Rs. 18.4 m), textile yarn and thread (Rs. 16 m), other organic chemicals (Rs. 14.6 m), ships and boats (Rs. 12.3 m), and medicinal and pharmaceutical products (Rs. 12.3 m). Under the commodity exchange agreements, Pakistan's exports stood at Rs. 852.6 million or 3.9 percent of the total export proceeds during the first 11 months of 1981-82. Barter exports decreased to Rs. 73 million from Rs. 92 million in April. The principal trading partners during the month were Sweden, Rs. 24.7 million, USSR Rs. 20.9 m, People's Republic of China Rs. 13.9 m, Hungary Rs. 7.9 m, Czechoslovakia Rs. 2.1 m, North Korea Rs. 1.6 m, Poland Rs. 1.6m and Bulgaria Rs. 0.3 million.--APP [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 17 Jul 82 p 8]

TUFAIL CRITICAL OF AMENDMENT--Lahore, July 18--Mian Tufail Mohammed, Amir of the defunct Jamaat-i-Islami has criticised the recent restrictions imposed on Bar Councils and Bar Associations. In a Press statement issued here today the Jamaat leader appealed that instead of imposing restriction the government should take steps to generate self-confidence and sense of responsibility in the nation. Mian Tufail Mohammad said after more than five years of Martial Law it was expected that these restrictions would be gradually removed but all the nationalists and well-wishers of Pakistan were surprised to see that Bar Councils and Bar Associations were debarred from taking part in political activities. He said by doing so the government had opened a vast venue for self-seekers and opportunists in those bodies. Interest-Free Loans: Punjab Co-operative Department has so far distributed a sum of over Rs. 100.8 million as interest-free loan among farmers of the Province through Agricultural Co-operative Societies to grow rice, sugarcane, cotton and gram during the current kharif season. Meanwhile, the Co-operative Department has recovered a sum of Rs. 77 million from farmers. Grant: The Provincial Irrigation Department will grant a sum of Rs. 11 million to WAPDA for the maintenance and operation of over 300 tube-wells functioning under the Mona Experimental Project during the current fiscal year. These tubewells will irrigate over 1.7 acres of land in the Sargodha Division. Another sum of about Rs. 4.9 million was earmarked as a grant to Mona Reclamation Project under which about 140 tubewells are functioning. This sum will be utilised for the maintenance and operation of the tubewells during the current fiscal year.--PPI [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 19 Jul 82 p 8]

MRD CONDEMNS AMENDMENT--Lahore, July 18--MRD Punjab condemned the amendment enacted into Legal Practitioners Act, barring the Bar Associations from politics. The Provincial Committee of the MRD in its meeting demanded release of all political prisoners and detenues before Eid and praised Air Marshal (Retd) Asghar Khan, Miss Benazir Bhutto, Nawabzadah Nasarullah Khan and Sheikh Mohammed Rashid for sticking to their principles despite their continuous detentions. The MRD felt that the amendment in BAR laws would not affect the just struggle of the lawyers, aiming at supremacy of law and restoration of democracy in the country. The meeting was chaired by Malik Hamid Sarfraz, the current MRD Convener, whereas other participants were Sh. Rafiq Ahmad, Mansoor Malik, (PPP), Rao Mehroz Akhtar, (NDP), Riaz Loan, (QMA), Maj. (Retd) Ijaz Ahmad, Sheikh Rashid, (Muslim League) Sulaman Khokhar, Zafar Gondal, Mian Arshad Waheed, (Tehrik-e-Istiqlal), and representatives of the local MRD Committee. CONCRETE POLITICAL STRUCTURE PROPOSALS--Rawalpindi, July 15--President Zia-ul-Haq said here today that the report of the Council of Islamic Ideology was being referred back to the Council with the advice to make concrete practicable suggestions regarding future political structure. He was talking to journalists at an Iftar party hosted by him at the State Guest House. The President said the report had enunciated certain principles but not proposed any mechanism.--APP [Text] [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 16 Jul 82 p 1]

'P.T. POINT' INFORMATION COMPLEX--July 15--The Zero Point, the gateway to Islamabad would come to be known as P.T. Point when 'The Pakistan Times' shifts to its new premises there. This was dicslosed by President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq on Thursday evening while talking to this reporter at an Iftar party hosted by him at the President's Guest House, Rawalpindi. The President said it is going to be a prestigious building. The Federal Information and Broadcasting Secretary, Lt-Gen Mujib-ur-Rehmen, who was standing close by said that the Press Information offices and Information Ministry would also be located in its vicinity. The site would thus be turned into "Information Complex." The PID is at present housed in rented buildings. [Text] [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 16 Jul 82 p 1]

REAGAN'S GREETINGS TO ZIA--Islamabad, July 27--President Gen Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq received a message of greetings from U.S. President Ronald Reagan on the occasion of Eid-ul-Fitr. In his message, President Reagan conveyed his best wishes to the President, the members of his family and the people of Pakistan. The U.S. President also stated that the thoughts of the people of the United States, on this holy occasion, were with those Afghans who were struggling to regain their freedom and those who have sought refuge in Pakistan. DOCTORS' SERVICE STRUCTURE REPORT SOON--Islamabad, July 27--A comprehensive report regarding the young doctors' service structure will be formulated shortly. Informed sources told Dawn the report will be based on fresh recommendations given recently by the provincial Governments. It may be recalled that the recommendations made earlier by a high-powered committee headed by the Deputy Chairman Planning Commission, Dr Mahboobul Haq were rejected by the doctors. The committee after re-examining the nature and magnitude of the doctors' demands had reportedly invited fresh comments from all the provincial Governments. The committee which has received a number of recommendations from the provinces is reviewing the financial implications of the recommendations. The revised report would be examined by Dr Haq on his return from abroad. Dr Haq on his return to Pakistan, it is reported, would submit the final report to President Zia-ul-Haq. BAR COUNCIL RESTRICTIONS CRITICIZED--Islamabad, July 21--An emergency meeting of Islamabad Bar Association was held here today under the presidentship of Raja Zahoor Ahmed, Advocate. A resolution condemning the recent amendment in the Bar Councils Act was moved by S.P. Raza. The meeting deplored the restrictions imposed on the lawyers and termed them as 'uncivilised' and 'unsocial.' The meeting demanded the restoration of political rights and approved the resolution by a vast majority. S.P. Raza advised all the advocates serving with Majlis-e-Shoora and Ministries to resign from their jobs and join hands with the lawyers and legal practitioners protect the rights of the lawyers. Meanwhile, an emergency meeting of the Rawalpindi District Bar Association was called on the requisition of Mohammad Akram Choudhry, advocate, signed by 108 lawyers on July 20. A resolution was passed unanimously wherein the lawyers community condemned the recent amendment incorporated in the Legal Practitioners and Bar Councils Act. It was asserted in the resolution that the lawyers all over the world act as guardian of the civil rights of people and are most competent to speak as a body and also participate in political activities. It further said that in Pakistan when there is a complete ban on all political parties this was the only forum available for the protection of liberties and civil rights of the masses. The amendments have demanded to be withdrawn immediately. [Text] [Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 22 Jul 82 p 3]

PLANTING 27 MILLION SAPLINGS--Islamabad, July 21--During the monsoon tree plantation campaign, beginning throughout the country on August 4, 27 million saplings will be planted, official sources said here today. These sources further said that the government has decided to launch massive efforts this year instead of holding normal ceremonial plantations done in the past with a view to motivating the people for participation on larger scale. In the Federal Capital, Horticultural Directorate of the Capital Development Authority will plant about two lakh saplings during the coming season. Special programmes are being finalised for the participation in the campaign by government servants and people. Special areas will be earmarked for the ministries in Islamabad. Sales centres for the convenience of public will be set up by the C.D.A. and Forest Department. The President has ordered institution of a prize of Rs. 1,00,000 to the University in the country for the best plantation while Rs. 20,000 would be awarded to the best college or school in each division.--PPI

COMMERCE BODY OPPOSES PROPOSAL--The Managing Committee of the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry in an informal meeting held here on Monday opposed the proposal of the Government for appointment of an Administrator to run the affairs of the Federation. DETAILS ON DISSIDENT PRIESTS SOUGHT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text]

Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile said yesterday that he has ordered investigators to ask Northern Samar Bishop Angel Hobayan for particulars on eight priests reported to have joined the New People's Army (NPA).

Interviewed over Channel 4's "Network Line" program, Enrile took exception to a reported statement of Jaime Cardinal Sin disputing allegations about the priests and nuns.

Commenting on the cardinal's reported comment on the priests that "we all make mistakes," Enrile said the priests are "supposed to be well-trained intellectually and morally, yet they opted to embrace or support Marxism which is antithetical to the tenets of the Christian church."

The revelations were reportedly made by Bishop Hobayan to foreign editor Peter Hastings of the Sydney Morning Herald in Catarman last June. Hobayan was quoted as saying that he had lost eight of the 27 priests of his diocese apparently to the dissidents.

The interview appeared in the Australian newspaper's issue of June 29, entitled "Christ's Guerillas Plot Violent Revolution."

The defense chief also said Bishop Hobayan provided Hastings a copy of the agenda for a meeting in Calbayog city among radical priests and nuns.

"In the meeting, the priests wore batik-type shirts but not the small cross on the collar and the sisters were informally dressed, with one nun wearing jeans, a tee shirt, no bra and wrap-around dark glasses, according to Hastings," Enrile recalled.

The article, added Enrile, also quoted the priests and nuns as saying that they want to destroy our society because it is an anti-Christ society and that even the church itself must be destroyed because it is part of the society. They were not talking of reformation but of nihilistic destruction, he stressed.

"Now if this is a mistake," Enrile said, "this is a mistake no one of us should commit because it is a very destructive mistake."

Enrile also disclosed that he had sent two teams recently to barangay Somoroy, Lope de Vega, Northern Samar, to investigate rumors that 210 persons were massacred by the military and the teams confirmed earlier findings that no such massacre took place.

Enrile said the teams were sent separately, each not knowing about the other's mission. Both had the same findings, according to the defense chief.

COLUMNIST EXPLAINS DEFECTION OF PRIESTS

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 p 6

[Text]

A priest who signs his name as Father Bel San Luis, S.V.D. and who gives his address as the Divine Word College at Urdaneta, Pangasinan, expresses deep concern over the "'mass defection" of eight priests of the Diocese of Calbayog (Samar) to the New People's Army. His letter is reproduced here without comment:

"Ordinarily, men of the cloth do not jump on the gun. Could it be that they have despaired of all peaceful means in solving prevailing social maladies, thus opted for armed struggle? Is it to dramatize the sad state of socio-economic and political affairs in their place?

"What ever the reason is, the government should exert efforts to attract these churchmen back and have a dialog over their complaints and grievances, thus finding the deeper roots of the problem. A "cat-and-mouse" approach will only drive them farther away or harden their resolve to rebel.

"It must be noted that where there is acute poverty, government neglect and apathy, social injustice and unabated graft and corruption, there is discontent. Discontent breeds unrest and eventually, rebellion. That is why President Marcos once rightly put it: 'The real fight in this country is the fight against poverty, disease, ignorance and injustice. Security is not the only concern, but development."

NPA RECRUITMENT BY PRIESTS, NUNS

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Six rebels captured recently in Kalinga-Apayao said they were recruited for the New People's Army by a Catholic priest and a nun, reports reaching Camp Aguinaldo said yesterday.

The dissidents were identified as Miguel Lazaro, Francisco Licudo, Pedro Torres and a certain Ka Pedro and another known only as De los Reyes.

They were captured July 20 by three composite PC and police teams at barangay Dilag, Tabuk, Kalinga-Apayao.

The six told investigators they were recruited on the night of May 16 by a certain Fr. Eddie Balicao, a parish priest in the area and a nun identified as Sister Aurea at Poblacion Tabuk.

They also said Balicao and Aurea were accompanied by a certain Commander Ringma and one Doming Buscay, said to be affiliated with the NPA.

Last Monday Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile took exception to the statement of Jaime Cardinal Sin on the involvement of some priests and nuns with the NPA.

Sin was earlier quoted by a foreign news agency as saying that he cannot say there are no priests who have joined the NPA "because we all make mistakes."

Enrile described Sin's reaction as "too naive."

"These priests," Enrile said, "are supposed to be well-trained intellectually and morally and yet they have opted to embrace or support Marxism which is contrary to the tenets of the Christian Church."

Julio Cardinal Rosales denied yesterday that eight of their parish priests in Samar had defected to the New People's Army, the Agence France-Presse reported yesterday.

Cardinal Rosales was reacting to a reported order by Minister Enrile for an investigation into reports that eight priests had joined the NPA and were now actively espousing revolution.

The cardinal told reporters in his home archdiocese in Cebu City that some time ago Samar Bishop Angel Hobayan called a meeting of 27 provincial priests regarding a plan to reshuffle their posts and eight priests walked out of the meeting in protest.

"They did not walk out to join the NPA or for other political or ideological reasons, but merely to protest the internal reshuffle," the Cardinal said. He added that five of the eight priests have since abandoned their boycott and taken up their new diocese posts.

Military authorities of Region II comprising Cagayan Valley have tightened their security on 13 subversion suspects detained in their stockade early this month, it was reported yesterday.

Col. Thomas Manglongat, deputy commander of Region II, said that guards had to be doubled in the wake of intelligence reports that a "suicide squad" of the New People's Army had plans to spring the detainees from the stockade.

The detainees included a woman doctor in Bayombong, Nueva Vizcaya, a professor and three students of the Nueva Vizcaya Institute of Technology (NVIT) in Bayombong, and nine others described by the military as "officers" of the group.

The 13 detainees were identified as Dr. Aurora Parong, alleged head of the organization's communication center in Region II; Prof. Eufronio Ortiz, Jr., of the NVIT; Tito Tanguiling, Juanito Gravado, and Bienvenido Garcia, all students of NVIT.

Sabino Padilla, Norberto Portuguese, Francis Divinagracia, Benjamin Pineda, Mariano Soriano, Rosalina Reyes, Letty Ballogan, and Imelda Santos, described by the military as officers of the group.

The arrest of the 13 came last July 6 when the clinic of Dr. Parong was raided.

DISSIDENTS SLAIN IN DAVAO

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 29 Jul 82 p 32

DIGOS, Davao del Sur, July 28—Eight guerrillas, two of them believed to be responsible for the fatal shooting of Mayor Nonito Llanos, Jr. of this town, were killed in a six-hour gunbattle with Constabulary and police patrol in barangay Ihan, Kidlawan, yesterday.

Brig. Gen. Pedrito de Guzman, 11th PC regional commander, said that witnesses identified two of the slain rebels as a certain Kumander Ben Hur and Ka Victor.

The two were reported to have participated in the killing of Mayor Llanos and barangay captain Kasuki Mamac of barangay Aplaya, Digos, last June 26.

De Guzman said that nine firearms, including a Browning automatic rifle, one Armalite, one Belgium-made FAL rifle, one carbine, and assorted ammunition were recovered from the slain guerrillas.

The guerrillas retreated to a more strategic point when two of their companions were felled in the initial encounter started at 9 a.m.

Six hours later, six more rebels fell as more PC soldiers were moved by helicopter to the area. No casualty was reported on the government side.

The family of Mayor Llanos sent congratulatory message to De Guzman for having accounted two of the suspected killers of the mayor.

Llanos, 45, was fatally shot while attending the coronation of a beauty queen in barangay Aplaya. His wife Gavina was hit in the thigh and is still recuperating in the hospital. (RCC)

COLUMNIST QUESTIONS TIES WITH USA

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Jul 82 p 4

[Article by Teodoro F. Valencia]

[Text] President Marcos told his KBL top men the other day that the United States wants to impose its will on the Phillipines by restricting Philippine exports unless the Philippines relented and gave Americans something like the parity rights that they used to enjoy here. Prime Minister Virata confirmed this by saying that the United States has not even implemented agreements in the "Tokyo Round" where the Americans promised to treat ASEAN exporters more fairly.

The way it sounded, the President was hinting to KBL leaders that unless something of a better trade and financial arrangement between the Philippines and the United States is reached soon, his trip to Washington in September had better not happen. If he were to go on this trip, he would be ridiculed by the local opposition and the US-based opposition could take credit for preventing a better treatment for the Philippines by the US. What for should he go?

Notes: Prime Minister Virata told the KBL caucus that some countries other than the United States would be willing to lend us $1.3 billion to finance our development projects. The United States has liberalized its policy on the general system of preference vis-a-vis other countries but not insofar a as the Philippines is concerned. This will have implications in ASEAN. Other ASEAN nations are watching how the US treats an "ally" and "friend"... It is neither fair nor just to impound a public utility vehicle that just happened to carry marijuana or other prohibited drugs. Supposing the buses and jeepneys used did not know of the presence of the cargo? That would be undemocratic and extremely cruel.

SUPREME COURT OPENS TORTURE HEARINGS

[Text] The Supreme Court has for the first time taken a direct hand in the controversy over the alleged torture of subversion suspects by appointing a special commissioner to investigate the charges.

The move came amid complaints by opposition lawyers that the court's former hands-off policy encouraged the alleged abuses by the Philippines' military authorities.

It was the first time the Supreme Court had responded to a novel defense motion to make the right to counsel "unwaivable" because of the alleged torture. The justices had previously ruled this a matter for lower courts.

Quezon City's prosecuting fiscal, Sergio Apostol, was appointed special commissioner and given 30 days to look over evidence on the alleged torture of former government technocrat Horacio Morales Jr.

Morales was arrested in April, almost five years after he publicly announced that he was defecting to the underground.

In a habeas corpus hearing before the Supreme Court last week, 73-year-old opposition lawyer Lorenzo Tanada charged that the justices' refusal to deal with the torture charges had resulted in "worsening of human rights violations in the country."

Morales, 38, former executive vice president of the Development Academy of the Philippines (DAP), had charged that he was electrocuted in various parts of his body and given the "water cure" while undergoing questioning.

He said a subsequent statement which bears his signature was taken under duress although he said he bore no physical signs of torture.

On the other hand, Solicitor General Estelito Mendoza said that the charge of maltreatment was "Standard Operating Procedure" among communist-linked prisoners "because they know they can get attention and publicity."

Mendoza added that there were indications that prisoners with communist ties "even invite maltreatment." He did not elaborate.

He said opposition charges that the number of human rights violations cases was on the rise simply reflected the increased number of arrests due to successful operations by the government and its eagerness to bring complaints to court. (AFP)

NATIONAL BUDGET SUBMITTED TO BATASAN

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Article by C. Valmoria, Jr.]

[Text]

Prime Minister Cesar E. A. Virata submitted yesterday to the Batasang Pambansa for approval a ₱61.8-billion national budget for 1983.

Although the total expenditure program for 1983 would amount to ₱65 billion, the budget which was presented as Cabinet Bill No. 50 authorized the appropriation of only ₱61.8 billion.

Expenditures not appropriated in the budget, Virata said, are programmed as part of continuing appropriations in existing laws.

In his budget message, President Marcos said that an obligation budget program of ₱65 billion in 1983 is both feasible and imperative—"feasible because it is consistent with expected resources and imperative because we must achieve the goals of the development plan."

The money bill which the President called "A Budget for Productivity and Equity" and "an instrument for effecting economic turnaround," is expected to grow by 8.8 per cent over that of 1982.

"The ratio of the budget to the gross national product (GNP) will decrease from 16.9 per cent in 1982 to 15.9 per cent in 1983," the President added.

As presented, the budget sets aside 26.4 percent for economic services, 32.2 percent for social services, 10.4 percent for defense, 10 percent for general public services, 12.9 percent for debt service, and 8.1 percent multisectoral.

"Because of our aggressive capital investment program in the seventies and the consequent physical build-up, maintenance and operating requirements will necessarily expand," the President said.

According to him, the resource generation policy will aim at further reducing dependence on revenues from foreign trade transactions and on external borrowings.

The economic and social services sectors, consistent with national priorities, will jointly account for ₱38 billion or 58.6 per cent of the total obligation budget for 1983, the President said.

The following amounts were alloted to various ministries, agencies, and services:

Office of the President, ₱1.3 billion; prime minister, ₱122.2 million; executive committee, ₱8 million; Batasang Pambansa, ₱125.4 million; National Economic and Development Authority, ₱547.1 million;

Ministries of Agrarian Reform, ₱369.5 million; Agriculture, ₱1.1 billion; Education, Culture, and Sports, ₱5.4 billion; state colleges and universities, ₱1.7 billion; Energy, ₱1.8 billion; Finance, ₱761.4 million; Foreign Affairs, ₱473.4 million; Health, ₱2.6 billion; Human Settlements, ₱2.5 billion; Justice, ₱442.1 million.

Labor, ₱133.4 million; Local Governments, ₱244.4 million; National Defense, ₱8.8 billion; Natural Resources, ₱1.2 billion; Public Works and Highways, ₱4 billion; Social Services and Development, ₱414.6 million; Tourism, ₱96.3 million; Trade and Industry, ₱1.2 billion; Transportation and Communications, ₱1.2 billion; Judiciary, ₱402.5 million; constitutional offices, ₱517.9 million;

Tanodbayan, ₱11.4 million; autonomous regions, ₱600 million; corporate equity investments fund, ₱2.6 billion; international commitment, ₱700 million; national assistance to local government units, ₱7.6 billion; national priorities support fund, ₱7.9 billion; personnel benéfits fund, ₱1.9 billion; property insurance fund, ₱200 million; social pricing and development adjustment fund, ₱683.6 million; general funds adjustments, ₱600 million.

CENTRAL BANK GOVERNOR NOT PESSIMISTIC

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Jul 82 p 9

[Text]

Governor Jaime C. Laya of the Central Bank said yesterday that despite a huge balance-of-payments deficit of $675 million during the first semester, the prospects of the Philippine economy was not all that bleak.

Blaming the deterioration of the payments position on the worldwide recession, Laya said that measures already in effect should improve the country's balance of payments picture over the long haul.

He referred to the structural adjustment program under which a series of measures are now being undertaken in energy, industry and the financial system which are all intended to improve the country's external accounts.

These measures require huge amount of financing and foreign loans, Laya said, which explains the increase in the external debts and the payments deficit.

Eventually, he said, these measures would help the economy bring down its dependence on imported energy, improve the export competitiveness of domestic industries and increase the amount of savings that are generated internally, thereby correspondingly cutting down the dependence on foreign savings to fund domestic development projects.

Speaking before the Management association of the Philippines, Laya pointed out that the CB will maintain its policy of letting the exchange rate of the peso determined solely by market forces.

This meant that the peso would be allowed to "freely" seek its own value in relation to other foreign currencies, particularly the strong US dollar.

During the first semester, the peso registered a depreciation of 7.5 per cent. Laya attributed this depreciation not so much to the weakness of the Philippine currency as to the strength of the American dollar which gained heavily on the high interest rates in the United States.

Laya said that the bright spots in the economy have been the performance of the non-traditional exports, whose prices were holding on in the face of a general decline in the prices of traditional exports like sugar, coconut oil, mineral and forestry products.

Another bright spot, he said, had been the increase in the flow of invisible receipts, mostly remittances from Filipino workers overseas.

He said that the CB was ready to extend further incentives to Filipino workers abroad. For one, he disclosed, the CB was considering to extend its rediscount window to loans extended by banks to cover the expenses covering the departure of workers abroad.

GOVERNMENT TO BORROW SOCIAL SECURITY FUNDS

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Jul 82 p 16

[Article by George T. Nervez]

[Text]

THE national government will borrow P1 billion from the Social Security System (SSS) through a new issue of Treasury Notes.

SSS Administrator Gilberto Teodoro said yesterday that a new series of T-notes worth P1 billion will be issued by the national government to be exclusively subscribed by the SSS.

He said that the SSS already has substantial holdings of the T-notes worth P600 million, but the government decided on a new issue for its exclusive subscription to generate non-inflationary funds.

The new T-notes issue will have a yield of 14.25 percent, he said.

T-NOTES are direct, unconditional nd fully guaranteed obligations of the national government. They have five-year maturities with nine percent coupon payable semi-annually.

Last week, the Central Bank, acting as fiscal agent of the national government, auctioned off P300-million worth of the T-notes. Accepted bids for the notes had an average yield of 14.139 from a high of 14.1 percent.

It was the 12th auction of the new series of T-notes which was initially sold in August 1981. Total sales of the new notes now amount to P2.527 billion.

THE latest auction, according to the CB, was overscribed as total tenders received which reached P483.8 million, P189.8 million more than the authorized issue.

Teodoro said that SSS funds are presently invested in the Philippine National Bank, the Development Bank of the Phils. and the Union Bank of the Phils.

The PNB, he said, has about P3- billion worth of SSS funds, while about P500 million has been committed to the Union Bank, which the SSS jointly owns with the Land Bank of the Phils.

The SSS head also said that SSS collections from members' contributions slowed down last year because of labor strikes and lay-offs.

NEW TAX MEASURES REVEALED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Article by C. Valmoria, Jr.]

[Text]

The government will tap all possible sources of revenue, including the imposition of five new tax measures, to support the 1983 budget and attain the goal of the development program.

This was revealed by Prime Minister Cesar Virata in his sponsorship speech of the money measure, in which he said the government proposes to:

1. Reduce tax incentives of sectors which failed to expand due to excessive protection and the absence of effective competition.

2. Impose five new tax measures.

Virata said the 1983 revenue program is expected to raise about ₱900 million from the five new tax measures. He said these proposals were formulated with the ability-to-pay principle as the overriding concern.

He said the government has explored areas where new revenue sources will have the lightest effect and in line with the equity consideration.

Among the principal measures being reviewed for the consideration of the Batasang Pambansa, are:

1. Imposition of the value-added tax on the second sale of articles listed under Section 194 (percentage tax on the sale of non-essential articles) and Section 196 (percentage tax on the sale of certain semi-essential articles) of the National Revenue Code.

2. Adoption of a uniform five per cent franchise tax, except for electric utilities.

3. Upward revision of the percentage tax on certain services.

4. Restructuring of the present tax scheme for cigarets, liquors, and petroleum products from fixed rates to ad valorem rates, or a mixture of both.

5. Updating of fees and charges being collected by government agencies.

Virata noted that the proposed adjustment of fees and charges is one of the measures which would have a substantial impact on revenue collections.

Virata said although the final estimate is still being firmed up, he expected the government to collect as much as ₱400 million from the upgrading of service fees and charges in 1983.

Virata said, the increase in rates will be undertaken to enable government agencies to reflect their current costs so that they can expand and deliver better services to the public.

"We will minimize the increase of existing fees or charges of agencies primarily providing services to the low income group," he said.

In addition to these proposals, the prime minister said, concrete measures are being identified to further rationalize the present fiscal incentive scheme.

The primary objective, he said, is to promote production efficiency by ensuring the most economic allocation of the economy's scarce resources.

He added that the incentive package will be maintained or broadened in areas with high growth potentials and in which the govenment has substantial comparative advantage.

Meanwhile, an opposition assemblyman urged that the Philippines should assert its sovereignty and refuse to accept unreasonable conditions set by International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Assemblyman Jesus Villegas admitted that the IMF has the right to set certain conditions to ensure repayment of loans. However, he stressed, if the IMF condition should erode the country's sovereignty, it should be rejected, no matter how badly the country needs the money.

He reminded the Batasan of the need to preserve the sovereignty and independence that the Philippines as a nation has struggled hard to earn.

Villegas questioned the proposition that the IMF condition was only imposed by the American-controlled financial institution to set the economy right.

WAGE ISSUE SPLITS LABOR RANKS

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 11

[Article by Chito Parazo]

[Text]

Labor organizations affiliated with the Pagkakaisa ng Manggagawang Pilipino (PMP) said yesterday that any wage increase, at the moment, must be sought through collective bargaining agreement (CBA) rather than through indiscriminate legislation.

Other labor groups, headed by Pelagio Villegas Jr., national president of the Pangkalahatang Kilusan Ukol Sa Paggawa (Pakiusap) and executive officer of the PLUM Federation of Industrial and Agrarian Workers, also agreed that any unrealistic wage hike would only worsen the country's economy further.

The Employers Confederation of the Philippines (ECOP) urged the Labor Ministry last night to convene soonest a tripartite conference on employment and productivity.

ECOP said that any wage hike at this time is sure to trigger a vicious spiral of costs and wages and cause the closure of more business firms, throwing more people out of work.

The Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCI) had earlier proposed that workers be given a ₱3 across-the-board wage increase to allow them to cope with the increasing cost of living.

The President, however, rejected this demand in his State of the Nation address at the Batasan.

Labor sources said yesterday that the wage issue has apparently split organized labor into two groups.

TUCP has been asking for a substantial wage hike while PMP and other labor federations are in favor of freezing wages for the time being, if only to protect the present employment of workers.

Pakiusap President Villegas said yesterday that instead of asking for an unreasonable and unrealistic wage increase, labor leaders should appeal to Labor Ministry officials to resolve all pending labor disputes to give justice to workers who have been booted out without cause.

He said that his 123 unions lauded the move of the President in rejecting the demand of TUCP, to protect the present employment of hundreds of thousands of workers.

The PMP, which is led by the Kilusang Mayo Uno of Felixberto Olalia and the Trade Unions of the Philippines and Allied Services (TUPAS) headed by Bonifacio Tupaz, said it would abide by the decision of the President in order not to de-stabilize the economy of the country.

Former Deputy Labor Minister Amado "Gat" Inciong, whose Solidarity union is affiliated with KMU, said that an across-the-board-wage increase, no matter how much, would push many companies under and aggravate the country's unemployment problem.

Considering the present economic crisis, Inciong said, the President really had no choice but to reject TUCP's demand for a ₱3 across-the-board wage increase.

Tupaz said that before the government looks into wages, it should first resolve the freedom of workers as defined in their collective bargaining.

He claimed that workers are now being terminated even without justifiable cause.

Inciong proposed the lifting of repressive barriers to the exercise of the right to strike under Batas Pambansa 130 and 227.

He said this would enable unions to demand effectively wage increases against financially able companies without necessarily hurting distressed employers.

Inciong also proposed that the government roll back the prices of rice, sugar, and power which have been jacked up at a time when, based on world market conditions, their prices should have gone down.

The ECOP said it would meet to discuss the implications of President Marcos' pronouncements before the Batasan recently.

ECOP proposed that organized labor and employers place more stress on productivity and cooperate as social partners equally struggling for economic survival in these hard times.

LABOR DROPS WAGE DEMAND

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 29 Jul 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Jaime S. Reyes]

[Text]

THE TRADE Union Congress of the Philippines yesterday had a change of heart on its demand for a wage increase.

It is dropping for the time being its proposal for a P3 daily across-the-board pay increase, but is pressing for the integration of allowances into the worker's basic salary and the lifting of exemptions (from payment of allowances) granted to distressed industries.

TUCP president Democrito T. Mendoza said the labor group is also seeking a freeze in the prices of basic commodities to enable workers to cope with the increasing costs of living.

The new TUCP position is expected to be presented during a national tripartite conference on employment and productivity to be convened by the Ministry of Labor and Employment next month or early September.

MENDOZA said the change in the TUCP wage increase proposal was made in deference to President Marcos' request. He added that the P3 wage hike "might not be attained for now."

The President had rejected the TUCP's P3 wage hike proposal on the ground that it was "unrealistic"

TO GIVE the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran and the social forestry programs to identify potential areas for viable resource-based enterprises for kaingineros, the President also declared all remaining unsurveyed and unclassified lands of public domain as forestlands.

He issued another LOI for the sub-classification of lands for various uses. To make sure that they are productively used, the President ordered a resurvey of all special areas such as tourism sites, military and civil reservations and national parks.

On the development of aquatic resources, the President directed the channeling of about P100 million subsidy to the Biyayang Dagat program to help municipal fishermen meet the high cost of fuel.

He also directed the MNR to identify areas that could be proclaimed as communal fishing grounds for the exclusive use of small fishermen.

To promote employment and the forest conservation program, the President also ordered the implementation of decrees requiring all timber leaseholders to own processing plants or have equity in corporations operating wood processing plants.

As another conservation measure, the President ordered the ratification of the Convention of the International Trade in Endangered Species of Flora and Fauna.

considering the present economic situation.

TUCP figures show that industrial workers in Metro Manila will get a basic minimum daily wage of P29.95 if all allowances are integrated into the basic pay while those outside the area will receive P28.95.

Minus the allowances, non-agricultural workers in Metro Manila now get an P18 minimum daily wage and P17 for those outside the region.

The integration of allowances into the basic salary would mean a higher base for the computation of overtime pay, 13th month pay and other benefits.

Quoting statistics, Mendoza said the earnings of skilled workers increased by 140 percent from 1957 to 1980 while those of unskilled workers rose by 152 percent as compared to the 324-percent increase in the consumer prices for the same period.

He said the share of labor in the total cost of production averages only from 8 to 12 percent. The share of the cost of materials is 27 percent and that of the cost of money is from 24 to 25 percent.

MENDOZA said the TUCP will decide today whether to push its planned one-day nationwide rally to press its demands as decided on last Sunday by its 2,000 labor leaders and union officials.

Sources said the proposed rally will definitely be pushed by the TUCP and the only remaining problem is the date and the form of mass action the TUCP will hold.

ANOTHER labor leader, Bonifacio V. Tupaz of the Pagkakaisang ng Manggawang Pilipino, said the labor group is batting for wage increases through collective bargaining negotiations and not through government intervention.

Tupaz branded as "unjustifiable" the P3 wage increase proposal of the TUCP because this may lead to the closure of many small business and service establishments.

MALNUTRITION, INFECTION THREATEN CHILDREN

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Jul 82 p 12

[Text]

Toto, an eight-month old baby boy, has been in and out of hospital since he was three-and-a-half months because of chronic coughing and hoarseness.

He and his family live in a congested area in Sta. Cruz, Manila. His parents, both vegetable-vendors, earn 20 pesos a day.

Nene, his two-year old sister, also has had frequent coughs and colds.

While their parents are at work, the two children are left in the care of their grandmother, who herself has had a history of pulmonary tuberculosis.

Toto and Nene are underweight and are suffering from "moderate" malnutrition. Both have probably contracted TB.

Their condition is commonplace, a mute, painful reminder that today, midway through the Decade of the Filipino Child (1977-1987), the fight against malnutrition and disease among Filipino children remains an urgent national concern.

In 1979, speaking before the 16th annual convention of the Philippine Pediatric Society, then Health Minister Clemente S. Gatmaitan pointed out that "from the public health standpoint, infections and malnutrition are the two leading causes of mortality and morbidity of children in our country."

Statistics from the Disease Intelligence Center show that, of the 10 leading causes of death among infants, eight are due to various infections and nutritional deficiencies like avitaminosis (a disease caused by lack of vitamins).

Infant deaths due to avitaminosis and other nutritional deficiencies rose sharply during the first half of the 1970s. From six percent in 1970-1974, infant deaths due to these causes went up to 12.6 percent of all infant deaths in 1975.

These statistics are born out by equally grim findings on the prevalence of malnutrition, particularly among the young.

Surveys made by the Food and Nutrition Research Institute (FNRI) in the mid-1970s showed that the average food intake of Filipinos is seriously deficient in such basic nutrients as calories, protein, vitamin A, thiamine, riboflavin, calcium, iron, and ascorbic acid.

The deficiency among children and pregnant and nursing mothers is even worse, other FNRI studies showed. They are the ones hardest hit by the most widespread forms of malnutrition.

The most serious form of nutritional deficiency in the Philippines is called protein-energy-malnutrition (PEM). It is caused by the deficient intake of protein and calories, resulting in poor growth, loss of weight, low resistance to infection, and in its extreme, marasmus (the gradual wasting away of the body) or kwashiorkor (severe malnutrition marked by anemia, potbelly, and loss of hair).

Weight is the most telling single indicator of PEM. According to estimates based on results of the weight survey done under "Operation Timbang" in the mid-1970s, as many as three million (out of 10 million) preschoolers suffer from moderate to severe protein-energy-malnutrition.

Vitamin A deficiency (which leads to eye damage or even blindness) and anemia are other widespread forms of nutritional deficiencies. FNRI dietary surveys show that as many as 40 percent of preschoolers are afflicted by these.

Malnutrition and infection feed on each other, in a manner of speaking. Malnutrition renders its victim vulnerable to infection. Illness, on the other hand, usually restricts the diet of the sick.

"There is therefore a need to break the vicious cycle of malnutrition and infection in childhood," Gatmaitan stressed. Children early in life, he added, should receive a diet that will insure healthy growth and development and effective immune response to infection."

IMPROVED NUTRITION LEVEL REPORTED

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 6

[Text]

THE FIRST LADY, Imelda R Marcos, dismissed yesterday as "ridiculous" claims by some quarters, especially the Western press, that 70 percent of Filipino children are malnourished.

Mrs. Marcos said that some people who wish to denigrate the country were deliberately being "fast and loose" with their statistics

The fact is the Philippines has one of the most organized, efficient and viable nutrition programs in the world, the First Lady said in an interview with newsmen.

SHE EXPLAINED that a 1978 survey conducted by the Food and Nutrition Research Institute under the National Science and Technology Authority showed that only 1.6 percent of pre-schoolers were suffering from malnutrition,

The 1982 survey currently under way is expected to show an even lower percentage, she said.

"No Filipino dies of starvation," she said, and cited statistics gathered from the 1978 survey that the country has overcome the "protein gap" and is only 11 percent shy of attaining a 100 percent adequacy in energy intake (fats and carbohydrates.)

THE FIRST LADY said that these statistics show that the people have achieved 88.6 percent adequacy in energy, 102.9 percent in protein, 91.7 percent in iron and 68.6 percent in vitamin A.

She attributed these strides to the integrated nutrition program launched in 1975 and the spread of education and information among the citizens.

THE FIRST LADY said the Nutrition Center of the Philippines has been affiliated as college of the World University of the United Nations for the last three years.

She added that the Philippines has been cited by the World Bank as one of three countries, along with Brazil and Colombia, that has a model nutrition program.

In the face of these statistics, Mrs. Marcos said, "it is sad that some people were bent on making us look like a nation of malnourished people."

SOME REPORTS appearing in the Western press lumped the Philippines with Bangladesh, Senegal and countries in the Sahel, as having a similar malnutrition rate.

She said that with the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran (KKK) gaining momentum in both urban and rural areas, the nutrition level among Filipino families would increase further as per capita intake of nutrients increases.

Mrs. Marcos said that "we should look at it (nutrition problem) in a broader perspective," saying that the country has many problems as many other countries do have problems.

She cited the stress on food production to feed the growing population and to ensure that nobody dies of hunger in this country.

She said the emphasis would remain with the children who are most vulnerable to the adverse effects of malnutrition, especially those below six years old.

She also said that malnutrition can also come from low food intake in some pregnant and lactating mothers resulting in lower birth weight in some babies.

But all these, Mrs. Marcos said, are being overcome by an information and educational campaign among children and parents.

MUSLIM HOUSING PROGRAM TO BE LAUNCHED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 13

[Text]

A massive low-cost housing program will soon be launched in the Moslem provinces of Zamboanga, Davao, Cotabato, and Lanao, with the support of Arab funders.

The program, intended to alleviate the acute housing problem of the Muslim population in Mindanao, will make use of wooden pre-fabricated components to be manufactured by the rehabilitated facilities of Sta. Clara Lumber Co.

An initial 3,000 houses will be built under the program, it was learned

The manufacturing and logging facilities of Sta. Clara, which ceased operation last year, are scheduled to be reopened by the Sta. Clara Housing Industries, Inc. (SCHI), a consortium organized with the support of the Development Bank of the Philippines (DBP) and under the leadership of lawyer-businessman Nordy P. Diploma, chairman of Buenavista Timber Corp.

After it ceased operations, Sta. Clara was taken over by the DBP which had ₱180 million in the firm. The DBP and the Diploma group are now starting to settle the unpaid claims of some 3,000 displaced workers and their 15,000 dependents.

Many of the 18,000 workers and their dependents are Muslim Filipinos residing in Zamboanga, Davao, and Sultan Kudarat.

Under the rehabilitation plan for Sta. Clara, according to Diploma, his group is bringing in fresh capital to provide funds for the repair of manufacturing and logging machinery and equipment, and for the eventual payment of all unpaid obligations.

As an initial step, SCHI is selling to Japan $3 million worth of logs from the unutilized log export quota of Sta. Clara.

Proceeds from the log export will be applied against Sta. Clara's debt to DBP and to partially settle the wage claims of its workers. Yesterday, President Marcos approved Sta. Clara's application for extension to use its remaining log export quota on the recommendations of DBP.

Diploma lauded the President for acting immediately to assist the distressed logging firm and to defuse the labor tension in the areas of Davao, Zamboanga, and Sultan Kudarat where Sta. Clara has been operating.

INCREASED RELIANCE ON DOMESTIC ENERGY SOURCE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 p 19

[Text]

Domestic energy sources increased their contribution, from about 24 per cent or one-fourth of total energy consumed to about one-third or 30 per cent for the period January to May.

The bureau of energy utilization said domestic oil production increased by 288 per cent with the entry of Cadiao oil as addition to Nido oilfield production.

Similarly, increased contributions came from geothermal energy and hydropower sources as a result of higher output levels from old and newly-installed power-generation units.

Coal usage on the other hand, remained at last year's level pending the conversion of cement plants from oil to coal use slated later this year.

As a result of higher domestic energy contribution, the usage of imported oil dropped by 9 per cent, from 28.8 million barrels last year to only 26.2 million barrels as of May this year, resulting in foreign exchange savings estimated at $85.8 million.

The utilization of indigenous sources totalling 11.2 million barrels (about 30 per cent of total energy demand) also enabled the country to save foreign exchange estimated at $336 million.

LEYTE POWER TO BE LINKED TO LUZON GRID

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 28 Jul 82 p 19

[Text]

The National Power Corporation (NPC) is reviving its plan to link the vast geothermal reserves of Leyte to the power requirements of the Luzon grid.

Gabriel Y. Itchon, NPC president, disclosed in an interview yesterday that the ₱2.9 billion submarine cable project is being pursued by the government as an alternative to the coal thermal plant in Isabela whose establishment has been eyed earlier.

Initially, Itchon said NPC is asking the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund (OECF) of Japan for a financial assistance of $2 million to support the cable's final engineering study.

The amount is actually a surplus from the eighth yen credit program provided by OECF for the construction of the first geothermal plant in Tongonan, Leyte.

The submarine cable project has been envisioned owing to Leyte's proven geothermal reserves of which 552.5 megawatts are being tapped by 1986. Moreover, the reserves cannot be fully utilized since there is no large industrial market in the province.

Leyte's resources could not also be linked to the Visayan grid owing to the region's geography.

Itchon said the submarine cable project will include the infrastructures needed in transmitting the power to Sorsogon and Naga through the island of Samar.

Itchon said the project is being placed on the drawing table should a study on the lignite coal reserves of Isabela prove that putting up a coal thermal plant there is not viable.

If, however, the study proves otherwise, Itchon said priority will be given to the establishment of the Isabela coal thermal plant.

Dames and Moore, the British consultant assigned to do a study on the viability of putting up coal thermal plant, has already submitted its findings to NPC. NPC, according to Itchon, is still evaluating the results of the study.

The country's second thermal plant is being eyed in Isabela after PNOC Exploration Corp. confirmed last year the huge reserves of lignite coal in the area.

Lignite coal is suited best for power generating plants.

MARCOS LIFTS LOG EXPORT BAN

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 29 Jul 82 pp 1, 6

[Text]

PRESIDENT MARCOS authorized yesterday the continued exportation of logs until the end of this year, but warned that only exporters who follow the guidelines would be granted licenses after that cut-off date.

The guidelines are:

- That the log processing program of exporters must be resumed and continued

- That for every tree cut, three seeds of the same species must be planted for reforestation.

THE PRESIDENT said that exporters without contracts for machineries to process logs cannot be licensed to export.

He directed the Ministry of Natural Resources to organize inspection teams to make periodic surveys of logging concessions to see that these conditions are met.

Keynoting the eighth anniversary celebration of the MNR at Malacanang, the President also announced that the government would continue its financial support to the copper industry

He said the support was to prevent the lay-off of some 40,000 workers of copper companies.

IN THIS connection, he appealed to the labor sector not to ask for wage increases "because these are very sensitive times."

"Let us be sober and cautious because these are very sensitive times. There are some investors watching from the sidelines and they keep telling me that they cannot afford to come in if labor becomes restive," he said.

To enhance the right of access of the rural folk to the country's natural resource, the President also signed a Letter of Instruction transforming the Program for Forest Ecosystem Management (PROFEM) into an integrated forestry program to be known as PROFEM II.

The President said that this program is aimed at winning over the kaingineros as effective agents for food production and the rehabilitation of denuded forest

RESULT OF LOG EXPORT BAN LIFTING

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] The Government decision to continue allowing the export of logs until December would prevent a dislocation in the wood industry and the consequent lay-off of roughly 35,000 workers, industry sources said yesterday.

The lifting of the log export ban, ordered by the President the other day, would also help generate more foreign exchange earnings, they added.

For the first half of the year the country's trade deficit reached $1.3 bill billion which the Central Bank traced to the softening in the prices of Philippine exports in the world markets.

With the lifting of the export ban, the local wood industry can still export some 700,000 cubic meters of logs which at the current price of $210 per cubic meter could generate roughly $83.5 million this year.

From January to June the industry shipped 100,000 cubic meters of logs worth $12.5 million.

Last year log export sales totalled $76 million for a volume shipment of 416,673 cubic meters.

Of the 279 logging firms throughout the country, only 21 will be initially allowed to export logs.

These log exporters are: Pagdanan Timber, Kalilid Wood Industries, Surigao Development, Taggat Industries, Western Palawan, San Jose Timber, Paper Industries Corporation of the Philippines, Rustan's, Pamplona Redwood, Veterans' Woodworks, Acme Plywood, Southern Plywood, Southern Agusan Timber, Liberty Forest, Timber Industries, El Salvador, Sierra Madre Wood, Sta Ines Melale Forest, and Cellophil Resources Corp., Dolores Timber and a person named Amelil Malaquoik.

Industry sources said that these exporters will have to "keep their hands clean" if they want to continue exporting logs.

The Ministry of Natural Resources (MNR) has formed a team to see to it that the log exporters follow the guidelines:

1. The exporters must resume their log processing and not engage only in exportation.

2. They must plant three seeds for every tree they cut. Those planted must be of the same species as those cut.

The Ministry has also issued two new measures to curb log smuggling.

The first measure designated 15 ports in the seven regions of the country where log shipment may be loaded.

All loadings in these ports will be made only in the presence of a team composed of representatives from the Bureau of Forest Development, the Bureau of Customs and the ministry.

The exporters also have to show a clearance from the composite team. Failure to show clearance will be a ground for the confiscation of the shipment and impounding of the vessel.

The second MNR regulation allows the export of logs of no less than 5,000 cubic meters per shipment.--RP

JAPAN FUNDS MINERAL EXPLORATION PROJECT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Jul 82 p 15

[Text]

Japan extended to the Philippines a grant amounting US$9-million (P2,140,000,000) for the off-shore mineral exploration project. The notes were signed by Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo and Japanese Ambassador Hideho Tanaka, at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs last week.

The grant includes a gross tonnage (GRT) vessel and equipments necessary for the survey of potential mineral resources in the continental shelf and shallow waters surrounding the Philippines. The survey will be conducted by the Bureau of Mines and Geo-Sciences (BMGS) which is under the Ministry of Natural Resources (MNR).

The natural resources, most especially mineral resources, are vital and indispensable to the industrial growth of all countries.

The objective of this project is to explore rapidly and systematically the off-shore regions of the Philippines in order to locate and delimit the economic mineral-bearing areas and, to acquire up-to-date information on the mineral potential and geology of off-shore areas. This project will also study structures favorable to commercial concentrations of essential minerals. To realize the above objectives, the Bureau of Mines and Geo-Sciences will undertake the marine seismic survey using the air-gun system, marine magnetic survey, core and bottom samples gathering, and data compilation, processing and interpretation.

At present, the export of copper, nickel and other mineral resources serves as a major dollar-earner for the Philippines. Therefore, as a result, this project will generate more sources of foreign currency for the potential development of the Philippines in the industrial field.

GOVERNMENT SERVICES IN NPA CONTROLLED AREA

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Jul 82 p 14

[Article by Ruben C. Guevarra]

[Text] Iloilo City--The Iloilo District Fishery office in this city under OIC Landrico Danas has dispersed some 173,500 tilapia fingerlings from January to July this year to all towns in Iloilo province.

Danas told OIC Hermenegildo Magsuci of the bureau of fisheries and aquatic resources (BFAR) for Western Visayas that it will be easy to produce the target of 850,000 fingerlings for 1982. For 1981, the Iloilo district of BFAR dispersed more than 1.8 million fingerlings.

He said the Western Visayas Demonstration Fish farm (WVDFF), where the fingerlings were produced, was able to service the towns of Cabatuan, Igbaras, Leon, Calinog, Lambunao, Maasin, Passi, Tubungan, Pototan, Dingle and Alimodian, all in Iloilo province.

Most of the towns mentioned are NPA-controlled or threatened areas.

VALUE OF MINERAL OUTPUT DIPS--The value of domestic mineral production dropped 11.96 percent during the first half of the year but the bureau of mines predicted copper and gold prices would be at firmer levels at the end of 1982. The bureau's first-half year report said the downtrend was due to high fuel costs and generally depressed market prices in both metallic and non-metallic sectors. Copper production dropped to 143,483 tons or 3.65 percent below the January to June 1981 output with value falling to P1.6 billion from P1.9 billion, it said. Gold output rose to 11,765 kg this year from 11,414 due to slightly higher mill recovery but production value continued lower. Copper and gold prices are expected to end the year at firmer levels, following the anticipated recovery in economic condition worldwide, the bureau said. As a result, a slow development in the local copper industry may be expected to persist until year-end, it added. The bureau said a mild recovery towards the end of 1982 would largely depend on whether world economic conditions ease up. [Text] [Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 29 Jul 82 p 11]

LARGE INCREASE REPORTED IN OVERSEAS REMITTANCES

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 21 Jul 82 p 4

[Article by Mallika Waniga Sundara]

[Text] Remittances of Sri Lankan expatriates have become the nation's largest foreign exchange earner next to tea. No wonder then that the Government has decided to take the exodus in stride. And never mind the brawn and brain drain.

It is made of the stuff that the young dream of. For Munchi, the servant girl from Colombo, that dream came true. She went to the Middle East as a housemaid and before long she married her employer, a Swedish engineer.

Munchi doesn't speak English or any other language except Sinhala. But "body language"--as someone put it, not unkindly, and the blessing of the gods--took her on a honeymoon to Kashmir.

Now she is back on a holiday in Sri Lanka looking for land which her husband hopes to buy for her.

But for 19 year - old Seethi Yassin, the prospects are bleak both at home and abroad. She is married and pregnant. A religious court in Abu Dhabi has sentenced her to 100 lashes for fornication. Her lover, a 23 - year - old Indian named Abdul Ahmed Kouti and a much married man, faces an untimely death by stoning according to the court order.

Gomes worked in a Colombo firm as a workshop supervisor. He went to the Middle East, brought back savings to keep his family in comfort. He hopes to buy a house and property. And rather surprisingly, he has taken back his old job in his old firm.

Mallika's mother sold onions at the public market. Mallika went off to the United Arab Emirates as a housemaid. she has now returned and with her savings she bought a minibus. This she plies as a private coach carrying passengers in transport - starved Colombo.

Justin, an artificer in the navy, was borken - heafted when he came from the Middle East. His family went on a spending spree and frittered away all the money he had remitted. Even their house is in a bad state of disrepair.

So the tale goes on -- of men and women who spend their riyals and dinars wisely and profitably. But there are those who spend well but not too wisely. Others come back alive but empty - handed; still others return tragically for the last time to be buried in the land of their birth.

But the figures seem to justify an earlier announcement of President Jayewardene that the country should plan to send 100,000 Sri Lankans to the Middle East. And never mind the brain and brawn drain.

For remittances from Sri Lankans working abroad have become the largest foreign exchange earner next to tea. In 1981, the country earned Rs.4,400 million (US$219 million) from earnings sent home by expatriates. This improves the 1980 performance at least thrice. In 1980 Sri Lanka earned Rs.1,518 million (US$76 million) from foreign employment.

This dramatic rise in foreign exchange earnings from Sri Lankan expatriates pushes two of Sri Lanka's plantation crops -- coconut and rubber -- further down the line. Next to tea (Rs.6,444 million or US$321 million) came foreing employment, petroleum products (Rs.3,390 million or US$169 million) and tourism (Rs. 2,270 million or US$113 million). Rubber and coconut followed.

No wonder the Government has decided to take the exodus in stride and actually encourage it. Estimates are that between 40,000 and 50,000 Sri Lankans are working abroad, mainly in the Middle East.

High - powered ministerial teams have been sounding out Arab nations on the possibility of employing more Sri Lankans. The responses, so far, have been encouraging. For instance, Saudi Arabia has told Colombo that it is prepared to employ 12,000 Sri Lankans this year.

The Government is even considering advertising to lure the Arabs to employ more Sri Lankans. There is also a plan to use Sri Lankan embassies in the Middle East to keep tab on available jobs there.

The salaries of expatriate workers are very high by Sri Lankan standards. Nevertheless, there have been many instances when employers pay less than the agreed amount once the Sri Lankan arrives in the Middle East. The most common victims are housemaids and nannies.

As a result, the Labour Department now requires employment agencies to make sure that the women are paid a minimum of US$250 a month. A survey by the Sri Lanka Ministry of Plan Implementation has revealed that housemaids and nannies in Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Qatar and Kuwait receive between Rs.2,000 (US$98) and Rs.5,000 (US$249) a month.

A stenographer, particularly in Saudi Arabia, can earn as much as Rs.13,000 (US$660) a month. The price for typists goes up from Rs.7,000 (US$348), clerks, receptionists and secretaries can draw as mcuh as Rs.20,000 (US$997) a month, the bottom level being Rs.4,000 (US$199).

A doctor gets anything between Rs.26,000 and Rs.35,000 (US$1,295 - US$1,745) while an engineer gets between Rs.15,000 and Rs.28,000 (US$748 - US1,395). Pharmacists, nurses, medical technicians can get as much as Rs. 29,000 (US$1,445) a month, the bottom limit being Rs.4,000.

Transport Minister M.H.Mohamed who recently toured the Middle East, has urged that work contracts should be more systematised to protect new labour recruits. He had suggested that employment contracts should be signed in Sri Lanka and countersigned by the Labour Minister. Without the Labour Minister's signature, no passport would be issued. FOOD STAMP USERS INCREASE

[Text] A government decision on whether the food stamps scheme, now costing the economy over Rs. 1,500 million annually, will continue, must be taken shortly, authoritative official sources said yesterday.

These sources said that a detailed survey had been done countrywide and the figures available up to now indicates that while a large number of ineligible persons are enjoying food stamps, a much larger number of eligible people entitled to the benefit are not getting the stamps.

"We have only got results of the survey from 18 administrative districts of the 24. From the figures compiled by special services officers, cutting off the ineligible and servicing the eligibles will mean adding over half a million names to the food stamp lists, these sources said.

Very preliminary estimates suggest that if the government acts on the basis of the presently available figures, a total of around 8 million people will be entitled to food stamps.

Right now, in addition to regular food stamp issues, special food stamps are being issued as drought relief. According to the social service authorities, drought relief payments must continue because those affected need this assistance until a new crop is in.

According to Food Department figures there were over 13 million rice ration book holders in 1978 when rice was issued on the ration. Following the decision to give the benefit of the rice subsidy only to the neediest sector of the population (computed on the basis of a cut-off point of a family income of Rs. 300 monthly), the number fell to somewhere near 8 million.

The number benefiting from food stamps introduced in 1979 has now grown from the original 7.3 million and the present indications are that the figures will even surpass 8 million if eligibles now not on the lists are accommodated.

The big question is: can the economy carry the burden?

While the recent Aid Consortium meeting in Tokyo stressed that the country must try to mobilise more resources locally, some donors, notably the Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands stressed that social welfare must not take a back seat and that Sri Lanka must continue to give priority to the physical quality of life or its people.

EDITORIAL CAUTIONS ON GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 21 Jul 82 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

Criticism, often mistaken for irreverence by minor barons, generally affords a more constructive contribution to the welfare of any society, than vain flattery.

For that reason, it is not surprising that the World Bank and the donor community, while generally appreciative of Sri Lanka's performance, have gone on to point to certain laxities threatening to grow upon the scenes of our economic build - up.

The gains under the present Government are writ large upon the landscape. The progress with the Mahaveli Scheme, the employment generated, the targets achieved in food production, the output of trained men, the preservation of fundamental human rights, the repeated salary adjustments — all speak of a nation on the march.

But we have been clearly told that our expenditure could be running too high; that the Government expenditure must be scaled down to reasonable proportions.

The point ought to be well taken. World inflation is one matter: the costly luxuries of petty potentates quite another. One of the most serious drawbacks to productivity, one of the most tragic reasons for rising costs has been the farming of contracts and jobs, the duplication of staff and the extensions granted to persons with little claim to justify their continuance in a organisation. All this means money down the drain.

This has been particularly true in State projects, and in State - controlled establishments. When a party is returned to power, everyone claims to have supported it. Everyone is a loyalist — even if he once reviled the leader of the UNP himself. Sadly, such pretenders get away with it too often.

That is because one of the weaknesses of democratic rule is that it throws up, into positions of responsibility, a number of mediocrities. The latter then set out to enlarge their own image by building up their own following of unquestioning puppets. Basically, this amounts to no more than the satisfaction of private pleasures at public expense: a luxury we can ill afford.

The breakdown that often results is personal not institutional.

The truth is, that the tendency for idling parasites and henchmen, to harbour old buddies and plain suckers, has grown with time. Collectively, they are a drag on the best of plans; a heavy drain on scarce funds and a threat to national efficiency and morale.

The wastage of petrol in State departments could offer another pointer to the laxity that is infecting the public sector.

Sadly for the country, all this is laid at the door of the ruling party. Others, in their day, could have done all that and much worse, but the question at issue is different. It is the record of the present Government that will come up for review shortly.

That reality ought to stir the UNP's high command to make some effort to identify quislings, interlopers in its ranks, and its own Judases as well, throughout its far-flung network of operations.

We have heard already of smear campaigns. But there are clearly other intrigues that could be going on under cover of communal and religious labels. Are there not trusted lieutenants signing a separate peace here and there?

When such forces are allowed a free hand, it is not merely laxity but wholesale licence, corruption and anarchy that emerge — all at public expense!

The caution sounded by our donors might, if followed, lead to more — to some timely discovery of a dangerous canker. It is competence and integrity at all levels, not the hollow howls of jackals or jackbooting of double-dealings satraps, that will see the nation through.

It is time the Yellow Card were shown to some fancied players for foul tackles and boorish behaviour.

BRIEFS

FISH MEAL PLANT PLANNED--The Ministry of Fisheries has decided to set up its first fish-meal plant at Karanaigar. The Rs. 10 million factory will process a variety of small fish not popular among consumers particularly in the Karainagar area. The Secretary to the Ministry Mr Anura Weeraratne finalised arrangements with his officials for constructing and equipping the factory a few days ago. The preliminary work is already in hand. In its initial stages the factory will be able to process 50 tons of silver-belly (Karala) and other small fish. Large quantities of this fish, it is stated, now go to waste daily. The processing factory will buy the raw material it wants from fishermen of the area. [Text] [Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 21 Jul 82 p 11]

GEN HAN EXPRESSES VIEWS ON ANTI-CPT EFFORT, DICTATORSHIP

Bangkok LAK THAI in Thai 1 Jul 82 pp 18-21

[Speech by Lieutenant General Han Linanon, the Commanding General of the Fourth Army Area, at the Auditorium of the Army Club on 20 June: "The Things That Have Given Rise to Dictators and Black Powers Lie With Us and Not With Others"]

> [Text] Lieutenant General Han Linanon, the commanding general of the Fourth Army Area, attended the debat at the auditorium of the Army Club on 20 June. The debate was sponsored by the Thai Defense Foundation. Many interesting things were said during the discussion. LAK THAI feels that it would be very beneficial for readers to learn about events and the way to defeat the communists. It is thus printing this speech that was tape recorded.

During our meeting today, I will express some opinions of mine in a combative way to help enable our beloved country to maintain its free and democratic system with the king at the head.

I would like to discuss the fact that, at present, the world is divided into two camps, that is, the free world and the socialist world. The socialist world is trying to destroy the free world and transform [the world] into a communist world in the end. Thus, they want to break up the free world and then destroy the free world piece by piece. In brief, that is what things are like.

In order to transform the free world into a socialist world, they must promote internal wars, or people's wars or revolutionary wars as they are called. Here, I want to point out that a revolutionary, an internal or a people's war can break out because of political, economic and social decay. Since there is political, economic and social rot in our country at a time when the government is incapable of reaching the goals, the communists have stepped in to solve the problems for the country. Thus, they are competing with the government.

Thus, at present, the Communist Party of Thailand is trying to solve the national problems in competition with the government. The government has a rival. Whichever side can solve the problems first will win. Thus, the thing that I would like to call to your attention is that, at present, the communists are trying to solve the national problems in competition with the government.

Concerning the matter of internal wars, a country that has lost the internal war and that has become communist will not have a chance to liberate the country because the free nation will have been destroyed. In the history of war, no country that has become communist has ever been able to liberate itself as King Raresuan and King Taksin once liberated our country in ancient times. Things have changed completely because of the policital, economic and social changes. Thus, in our present fight, this is a fight of all the people. In the fight to defeat the communists, by itself, the Thai military, which is composed of the army, the navy and the air force, cannot defeat the communists. I want to stress this.

Because this is a matter of a revolutionary war, or a people's war, this has stimulated thinking about the national army. To fight the communists, we must use the national army in the fight. The national army is composed of a regular military force and paramilitary forces, various volunteer groups and the people. Please remember this. But concerning the various forces that I have mentioned, they msut all have the same ideals.

What are the ideals of the national army? I would like to point out that the ideals of the national army are based on democracy and on protecting the interests of the majority and maintaining and implementing Policy No 66/1980. As for the south, the Tai Rom Yen Policy must be adhered to. These are the ideals of our national army.

The reason that we must have a democratic foundation is that only democracy can defeat the communists. In democratic countries, communists cannot carry on movements. They have no chance. Only in undeveloped countries can communists carry on movements. Please remember this! Only in countries that do not have a perfect democracy or that have a dictatorship can the communists win. This is something that we must understand.

Speaking about democracy again, is Lieutenant General Han a Democratic Soldier? Regardless, we must accept the truth. We must accept the fact that only democracy can defeat the communists. I am not a Democratic Soldier. I have said this before. But the newspapers have printed stories saying that I am a leader of the Democratic Soldiers. Let them print such stories. I want to disclaim this here because I know that this is being broadcast over the radio of the Public Relations Department. Thais throughout the country probably know that we definitely have something to hold fast to and that is the national army. The ideals of the national army are democracy and the preservation of the interests of the majority. This is most important. Whatever forms the interests of the majority msut be protected. But those things that are in the interest of only certain groups or individuals must be destroyed and eliminated since that is dictatorship.

Any country that is a dictatorship will be defeated by the communists. The communists will take over these countries. You can see this for yourselves. I want to stress this.

As we constantly say, we love the nation, religion and monarchy. We will fight to the death for them. But we do not know what to do to defend the nation. If we die, we will not have a chance to defend [these things]. Thus, what can we do to defend the nation, religion and monarchy and keep them from being changed? As long as Thailand exists, these things will not change.

We do not want Thailand to turn socialist. Since we do not want this, we definitely have defense measures and modes of operation. That is, we must act in accord with Policy No 66/1980. This is our "bible" in our nation's struggle to defeat the communists. The Prem government announced this policy on 23 April 1980.

These are the ideals of the national army. Now, what are the duties of the national army? I will tell you that the first duty of the national army is to eliminate the dictators, influential people and dark powers. Its second duty is to struggle against injustice in order to have justice. Third, it must promote the democratic movement and oppose dictatorship in any form.

You can see that I did not mention using the national army to fight the communists in the jungles and mountains. Why didn't I mention killing their forces and destroying their bases? Because eliminating the influential people and dark powers will in fact destroy their forces. Since 1980, our national army, with the Royal Thai Army at the center, has been fighting against the communist terrorists in the jungles and mountains. Here, I am speaking of major military offensives. The army knew that the communists would make a stand in 1980 as they had announced. Thus, a policy was promulgated and the regional armies were ordered to attack their bases. This has been underway since 1980. And have we defeated the communists? Have we won the people's war? If we have won, why were they recently able to set off bombs at the Chieu Lan Dam? And before that they set off bombs at the Surat Thani provincial civil administration headquarters building. And we say we have won!

But today you must understand how we can defeat the communists. What I will explain to you now is most important.

Why did I mention eliminating the dictators, influential people and dark powers? Because we have gone into the jungle and mountains and sent soldiers to kill and to seize bases. And recently the Fourth Army Area launched the Chong Chang Operation. We have seized and destroyed [bases] and the CPT has lost a great deal. But have they been defeated? The answer is in the hearts of each one of us.

Why haven't the communists given up? Take Sirorap, for example. He is still active and is still burning down police stations and district administrative offices. This is because the factors that cause people to flee into the jungle are still in existence. These are the "war factors." The war factors are the most important factors since they cause pure villagers and students to flee into the jungle and fight the officials. We have destroyed their center and forced them to disperse into small units. At present, they do not have any bases. But the communist terrorists will probably continue to fight by carrying out acts of terrorism. This is the weakest type of fighting. Later, they will build new guerrilla bases.

You probably know that there are three stages in their fighting. If you understand this, you will know at what point we have defeated the communists. Originally, they were in the stage of fighting a guerrilla war against us. But they announced that they were entering the stage of confrontation, which meant the end of the guerrilla war, and that they would move into the stage of a regular war. The army was aware of this and so it ordered that major offensives be launched beginning in 1980. And in 1982, the third, fourth and second army areas have carried on major offensives. In particular, the Fourth Army Area, which I command, has been able to destroy their bases. These were the strongest bases of the Surat Thani provincial committee. Thus, the terrorists have downgraded the level of fighting to the stage of terrorism. Do you see. They are still in the stage of fighting a people's war against us. They are kidnapping important people, demanding protection money, setting off explosions and assassinating people. Such things will happen even though they do not have any bases. If we cannot defeat them completely, they will gradually build new bases. Take Camp 508, for example. It may take them 10 or 20 years to rebuild this base. This is because the aims of the revolution are on a long and winding path.

Because of these war factors, people have been forced to take up arms. The war factors are the dictators, influential people and dark powers, who spring from among us. Administrative, military and police officials, capitalists and hoodlums who use their influence have helped give rise to these things. To explain things fully would take too long. I would like to summarize things by saying that the things that have given rise to dictators, influential people and dark powers lie with us and not with others.

GEN SOM DISCUSSES MILITARY EFFORTS, COALITION POTENTIAL

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 23 Jun 82 p 3

[Interview with Lieutenant General Som Khattaphan, the Director of the Information Office, Supreme Command Headquarters; date and place not specified"]

[Text] [Question] During the period in which the tripartite Khmer coalition government was being formed in Kuala Lumpur, did Vietnam do anything unusual or noteworthy?

[Answer] Yes. But they did not do anything in Kampuchea. They took action in Laos instead. The MROU affair was such an action.

They are clever. They did not take any direct action but took indirect action instead.

The mass media warned [people] to be careful after we released the prisoners who were captured when their airplane crashed.

Since you have put the question to me this way, I will say, as for Kampuchea, there has not been any reaction. But concerning Laos, why does something happen almost every time Asean holds discussions? Concerning this hypothesis of mine, can it be true? This is worth noting.

[Question] Concerning the fact that they have initiated this violence, what effect will this have on the discussions between the Asean countries and on the formation of the tripartite Khmer coalition government?

[Answer] If we want to make ourselves the most important figure, we must destroy those who are more important, isn't this true? If our enemy is important, how can we be important? The same thing applies in this case.

For example, if they can succeed in having the [Heng Samrin] government recognized by the United Nations, what will the situation be like for Asean, which recognizes the Khieu Samphan government?

Those who oppose Vietnam will all be like bandits, won't they?

[Question] Since the three Khmer factions have now united, do you think there will be any changes in the political movements or in the military pressure that is being applied?

[Answer] At present, we see that they are spreading public relations propaganda. They say that they want to solve the problems and that if the United States and China do not support our side, or Thailand, in getting involved in Kampuchea, they will withdraw their forces from Kampuchea.

They are spreading such public relations propaganda. You probably understand.

When the Vietnamese minister of foreign affairs went to New york, he said something similar. [He said] they would look at Thailand's attitude first.

Thailand does not have any duties. Our soldiers are only maintaining our sovereignty. At the same time, we are still giving humanitarian aid to large numbers of people.

I want to tell you that, since the fighting started, Thailand has given aid to people who have fled.We have let them pass through Thailand on their way to third countries so they can start a new life.

[Question] Concerning the present fighting between the Heng Samrin and Khmer Rouge forces, there is the feeling that even though the Khmer Rouge can establish bases, it cannot hold them. Why is this?

[Answer] Because they have not joined their armed forces.If they can link their forces at various points, they may be able to score many achievements.

At present, various people are fighting to protect their own economic interests. There is limited time for combat and combat support.

[Question] What military action is Vietnam taking at present in order to wipe out the Khmer Rouge?

[Answer] Recently, there has been little military action because of the geographical and weather conditions. It is the rainy season. The roads are flooded and so it is difficult to send in reinforcements and supplies. More and more soldiers are deserting.

At the end of May, they withdrew their forces 4 kilometers from their former positions along the Thai border. But then in June they sent in North Vietnamese troops to replace those who had been withdrawn. Just as in Battambang, the replacements sent in were North Vietnamese troops.

At the same time, they tried to build up the forces of Heng Samrin but little was achieved.

There was also air activity. They sent in supplies and war materials in order to replace those used since the roads are not convenient during the rainy season.

[Question] Concerning the points where they are conducting heavy military operations, they are still operating along the southern border, aren't they?

[Answer] They are operating all along the border. It is understood that they will have to make changes because more and more soldiers are deserting. Recently, it seems that the mobilization activities of the Khmer Rouge have improved.

The latest reports that I have received show that the villagers are becoming more and more dissatisfied with the Vietnamese and they have begun to fight back more.

This is only natural. They do not look alike or speak the same way and they do not belong to the same race. But they are under the other's control. At first, they may not have felt anything. But for a long time, they have not been treated fairly.

[Question] Some political observers in Indochina have said that now that the tripartite Khmer coalition government has been formed, it will take 10 years to defeat the Vietnamese forces. Is this your view?

[Answer] We cannot comment on this. However, at present, each side is fighting. And sometimes there is fighting between the Khmer Rouge and Khmer Seri forces. They have been able to oppose Vietnam for 3-4 years now.

If they join together, they will be able to reoccupy [territory] because each person and group is trying to win freedom.

I do not want to comment on this but I think that it will be faster than that. Don't forget, in this war, what are Vietnam's reasons for fighting? They constantly claim that they were asked to come fight by the Heng Samrin government.

If the three Khmer factions unite and the Heng Samrin government collapses, what excuse will Vietnam have for fighting?

[Question] Concerning the matter of Prince Norodom Sihanouk saying that he will establish his combat headquarters against Vietnam along the Thai border, where is he likely to do this?

[Answer] That is up to him. Sihanouk is a politician.

At present, the three factions have united and we think this is good. The Asean resolution feels this is good and so do we.

[Question] Later on, won't the fighting affect the Thai border since this combat headquarters will be located near the border?

[Answer] If they are really united, why do they have to come to the Thai border?

The war will spread throughout Kampuchea. In addition to the border area, there are resistance groups in the heart of Kampuchea too in Kracho District, Kampong Thom.

If these forces all rise up together, things will be difficult for Vietnam. But if Vietnam launches heavy attacks, things will be difficult along the border and things will be difficult for us too. Conversely, if the three Khmer groups launch heavy attacks, the difficulties will be in Kampuchea.

SAMAK DISCUSSES ELECTORAL STRATEGY, DENIES DICTATORIAL CONTROL OVER PARTY

Bangkok LAK THAI in Thai 1 Jul 82 pp 22-25

[Interview with Samak Sunthonwet, the leader of the Thai Citizens' Party, by Charan Phongchin: "The Samak-Athit Relationship, Why Is There Such an Uproar?"; date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] What were your standards in establishing and running the party? I have watched the Thai Citizens' Party since it was founded and the party members have very few problems among themselves.

[Answer] I have my own standards. We are like a family. They know how to look for votes. Since we are like a family, there is no grumbling among us. I can say that our Thai Citizens' Party is a democratic party. During conferences, I give everyone the right to propose motions. I have very broad principles, although I do not know how good this is.

[Question] But some people say that the Thai Citizens' Party is rather dictatorial and that only the party leader has power.

[Answer] Who has said this? Tell me. They are just interfering. Did these people ever attend a meeting with me? Tell me. If anyone says that the Thai Citizens' Party is dictatorial, I just say "its none of your business." How could they know anything about our internal affairs. When did they ever attend a meeting with me. I have never acted dictatorial with the party members.

[Question] It seems that everyone in the party has equal rights just as in other political parties.

[Answer] Certainly. There are no problems. I can attest to this. Others meddle in the affairs of our party because we are not as they think.

[Question] Concerning the policy of the Thai Citizens' Party, to date, I have not seen any emphasis placed on solving the economic problems.

[Answer] Who has said this. We do stress this. This is part of our policy. But we are an opposition political party. We cannot show off our policies. Concerning economic and foreign policies, to show off your policies, you have to be in a position to implement things. You have to be in the government. As the opposition, the only thing we could do would be to engage in various sorts of corruption. We could do this while serving as the opposition. Several elements of our policy, for example, price controls, can be carried out. Proof of this is Thai Citizens' rice and Thai Citizens' fish sauce. We have been able to do some things. But we have not been able to implement our entire policy because we are not in power. We have done some things. I have made several good suggestions. But no one has spread these ideas. Take the police car matter, for example. I suggested that we purchase cars by lifting the tax on such purchases. When the cars are sold, they can be sold at the full price. After using them for 2 years, they can be sold at the full price. For example, if a car cost 300,000 and we purchased it for 80,000, after using it for 2 years, we could sell it for around 200,000. We would make a profit of around 100,000. We could then use this money for something else. We could use it to purchase engine oil. This is what foreign countries do. I have gone and observed this. I suggested that we do this but no one agreed. If we followed my system, we would gain. We would have modern cars. Concerning these ideas of mine, no one has implemetned them. Or take the matter of the government area of the city. If things were done as I have suggested....Like Bang Prachao City, if I were in charge, I would have the largest public park in Thailand. There are 3,000 rai for a residential area and 2,000 rai along the river for a commercial zone. This could be done. This is my idea and the idea of the Thai Citizens' Party.

[Answer] Concerning this, I have alrdady said that it is not necessary to guarantee such prices. We can do so in some cases where it is necessary to set prices and purchase things. For example, rice can be purchased for 3,200 or 3,400 baht. The owners do not have to purchase it if they do not want to. We have 3,500 rice mills. They will have a chance to work. Or take cigarettes, for example. The government produces cigarettes and sells them to private merchants. Thus, the same thing can be done with rice. The government must establish a distribution system similar to the system for selling cigarettes. There will be profits and the profits can be returned to the farmers. Profits will reach approximately 6 billion baht a year since 2 million tons must be exported and 9 million tons will be sold on domestic markets. The government can return 300 baht per kwian [1 kwian equals 2,000 liters] to the farmers and there will still be money left over.

Or another thing that can be done concerns seed. By increasing investments by 20 percent and investing 3,100 baht, 1,200 kilograms can be obtained, which will earn about 4,000 baht. Or another thing is to purchase fertilizer and insecticides and to buy and sell shares for the farmers. Nothing will be lost. In purchasing fertilizer, usually 4,000 baht is invested and it is sold for 4,000 baht. Of the production principal of the farmers, 2,600 or 2,500 baht will remain. There will be a profit of 20 percent. This is doing things by oneself. Profits can be made to pay compensation. Or the money can be used to reduce the production principal. There is proof that things would be all right if my system were used.

[Answer] I have my own plan. For the 30 to 40 provinces around Bangkok, plans have already been made. According to the law, there must be 161 candidates but we now have approximately 140 people. And we must select convenient communications points such as Udorn Thani, Khon Kaen, Songkhla and Chiang Mai. We will add people and have the necessary 161 people.

[Question] This means that you will field candidates in all regions.

[Answer] Yes!

[Question] How will you select the candidates?

[Answer] The committee will be the group that discusses this. We will keep the names of those who want to run on file. As for how many will be elected, I will say that I will field 161 candidates. We are confident that 50 percent will win but we are unsure about the other 80.

[Question] In Bangkok, do you think you will win all the seats like the last time?

[Answer] I do not know. I cannot say what will happen. This depends on what the people of Bangkok decide. While the votes are being cast, we cannot say anything. It is wrong not to be able to say anything. We cannot tell anyone to vote for the Thai Citizens' Party. The voters must be allowed to decide for themselves. The people in the country are the ones who will decide which party to vote for.

[Question] Do you think there will be greater interest in this election than in previous elections?

[Answer] However much interest politics can generate among people will determine how many people will turn out to vote. The government should give the party leaders a chance to express their views and discuss their policies on radio and television. I have suggested that politicians should give their views over the radio. People will be interested in seeing which politicians do not have a good manner. The people will have a chance to choose. The mass media must be used to advantage so that, when the country has problems, the opposition will have a chance to take responsibility too.

[Question] Recently, Seni Pramot said that if Chinese are allowed to vote, the party of Mr Samak will lose.

[Answer] He should not talk like that. There is no reason to talk like that. At present, some Chinese can vote. Chinese voted in the past two by-elections. In the first by-election, I defeated the Democrat Party candidate by 10,000 votes. The second time, I won by more than 20,000 votes. There is no truth in what he said. Why wouldn't the Chinese support me? What reason would they have for not supporting me? I am the one who helped revise the law that enabled the Chinese to vote. But people do not know who helped promulgate this law. We helped revise this law and so why wouldn't they vote for me? What he said is not the proper thing to say.

[Question] Concerning the matter of national housing and the issue with Mr Damrong that you brought up in parliament, how will matters proceed?

[Answer] I won't do anything. He can do what he wants. I will ask the minister of interior why he allowed politicians to use government units as campaign tools. And the provincial governor sought votes too. Mr Prem is not embarrassed and neither is Mr Sitthi. They have not done anything. They have only worked to win votes. I do not like this. I am embarrassed for the government. They should be using the time to work for the people. But they have done things in order to gain votes. I do not think that this is proper. If I were prime minister, I would be embarrassed. If I were the minister of interior, I would be embarrassed over the fact that the deputy minister has engaged in such activities. Billions of baht of government money has been used to gain votes so that their party can win. But they are not sorry. The people will be the ones to decide. If the people feel that they have acted properly, they will vote for them. Conversely, if the people think that they have acted improperly and embezzled large sums of money and that they are not sincere, they may not vote for them.

[Question] During the period when the other political parties experienced problems, did MPs from other parties ask to join the Thai Citizens' Party?

[Answer] Yes, many. But I cannot reveal anything now. We must wait until after the law is promulgated. We must wait for the decision. But after the 25th, within 90 days, there will be many. We do not want to say anything. The people would be surprised. But I can say that the people who asked to join are good people and people will not have any objections to them. If we add another 18 people, we will have approximately 50 MPs. If another 20 join, we will have almost 60 people. Based on our discussions, we will have about 60 people but no decision has been made. But based on our decisions, people have been approached. If this law is promulgated, they will probably not want to establish a new party but will join the Thai Citizens' Party.

[Question] If they join, aren't you afraid that there will be problems just as there were in the other parties?

[Answer] Oh! We have selected them carefully. These are people in parliament. From the more than 300 people in parliament, only about 20-30 have joined with us. We have selected only people with good dispositions who have been in parliament more than 3 years. We have selected people who are not troublemakers, who do not need a lot and who do not want to go to the trouble of forming their own party. Some do not want to cause any trouble. Some who join with us do not want to be handicapped. Some who join are given positions in the party but there is no haggling. We have worked together frequently in parliament and so there are no problems.

[Question] Are you sure that the present government will change again?

[Answer] I am not absolutely certain. The prime minister will decide.

[Question] If the Thai Citizens' Party is asked to join, will it do so?

[Answer] Definitely not. There is no reason for me to do that. The election is approaching. Thus, whoever thinks that the Democrat Party will be expelled and the Thai Citizens' Party brought in is stupid. And whoever says that Athit (General Athit Kamlangek) is behind the Thai Citizens' Party and that he is working to have the Democrat Party removed and the Thai Citizens' Party brought in is stupid. That is not proper. Why struggle to do this? The election is approaching. Those who say such things are not politically knowledgeable. Thus, why would I want to join [the government]? I am carrying out my duty as the opposition.

[Question] How strong is the relationship between you and General Athit? There are rumors that it is very strong.

[Answer] We know each other. I am the leader of a political party. He is the assistant commander in chief of the army. Why wouldn't we know each other? Whenever we meet, we have a chat. This is a personal matter. Why should I discuss it. I do not see anything wrong with that. I have talks with others. I have talked for hours with Soem (General Soem Na Nakhon) and with Prime Minister Prem but that never gets into the news. Why is it news when I talk with General Athit? Why isn't it news when I talk with Prime Minister Prem? They want me to deny the truth of this. Why should I have to deny anything? They can think what they want. Why do they think that I have relations with certain people but not with Kukrit or Praman? Why don't they say that? I do have relations with him. But when I meet with Athit, why is there such an uproar!

[Question] Do you think that the military has too great a political role?

[Answer] We have given them the opportunity to get involved. We have given them an opening. I myself do not really care. Let them get involved. If civilians can oversee them, then I think they can play a role. But if the military thinks that it must oversee things, I will not object since I believe that a half glass of water is better than no water at all. I am doing what I have to do. I have instigated three debates of no confidence in the government. I have carried out my duties fully and nothing has been lost.

[Question] Concerning the latest no-confidence debate, there have been sarcastic comments to the effect that you were trying to fool General Kriangsak Chamanan.

[Answer] Who said this? Whoever said that is stupid. How could I fool him? Look. Participating in the debate was not up to me. He is the originator. How could I fool him? When parliament convened, I said that this would be difficult. I said that we should wait until there were 61 votes in parliament. But when parliament convened, the originator was not Kriangsak. The originators were Piyanat and Pancha, who are opposition members who have dealings with each other. We joined our six groups. Thus, it is not possible that I could have fooled anyone. Did anyone have more rights than anyone else? There were six groups. As for Kriangsak's group and the other groups, we arranged the names. Who fooled who? We agreed that the party leaders could speak for an unlimited amount of time. Kriangsak spoke for as long as he wanted. And so did Chaisiri. Both spoke before I did. Who could fool who? Everyone had the same right as I did to express their views. Everyone showed their abilities. Where did the matter of selling tapes come from? I have been selling my tapes for 3 years. I sell the tapes of the no-confidence debates. I sell tapes of debates on insane matters. Who did I need to fool this time? I joined with them and used my rights just as always. Who could say such a thing? Tell me. There is no reason to talk like that. Politicians work together in parliament. How could we fool each other? For example, Pancha has been an MP since I was a child. How could I fool him or Piyanat? Such talk shows a lack of political knowledge.

[Question] Concerning the revision of the constitution, on the third reading, if a majority do not vote for it, do you think the government should resign?

[Answer] No! That is not necessary. When the matter was in the subcommittee, the vote was 12, or a ratio of almost three-to-five. When it reached parliament, the vote was 147 to 262, or almost three-to-five. If the vote exceeds 264, it will have passed. There is no problem. That day, 190 senators voted the same way as the representatives. Even though the Senate is split, we have many. And the matter is not the affair of all the senators. It is the affair of only three senators, Sanon, Rien and Thammanun. By chance, these people are talkative and they changed the motion. And people went and said that this was a Senate affair. It was not up to Khun Rien. The senators do not have to get involved in everything. The vote was favorable. The numbers prove this.

[Question] I have asked for your views becasue, at present, the administrative system used for 50 years is being changed. Do you think there has been any progress?

[Answer] I would be glad [to give you my views]. Some will say that this is inappropriate but I would be glad to do so. Although [a democratic system] has come into being, it is still like a child. It it is nurtured, it will grow. There are several types of democracy in the world. The type of democracy found in England has been in existence for more than 400 years. Democracy has existed in the United States for 200 years. Here, democracy still exists after 50 years because this form of government fits the Thai character. With half democracy, there is no problem, just as I said that half a glass of water is better than no water at all. If you run about, your get thirsty. If there is only half a glass of water, you will drink it. Isn't that better. It can quench the thirst. As at present, if we are given a little more time, we can improve the constitution. But if by chance we do not succeed in time, we can discuss it again. We have set course. There is no problem. If it does not reach parliament this time, it can be brought up again. Once it has been revised, things will be up-to-date. There are no problems. We are expressing ideas and those who have been elected can express objections. We explain things to those in power so they understand what is correct in various situations and what should be done. Everything in parliament is a matter of reasons. People can make any criticism they want and they have criticized the constitution. But those who criticized things are now ministers. Aren't those who criticized the constitution but who then became ministers embarrassed? I said that I did not want to play. Mr Uthai (Phimchaichon) tried to persuade me. I said that it was better to protest. I said no. I said I would not play. This is because I am not thirsty. But you have to take it when its there. When I played, I appointed 32 people. I made budgets three times. I solved many problems for the people. Is my thinking right or wrong? Those who do not play do not play any role for the people and they do not do anything to benefit the people. I am satisfied with what I have done. It won't be long. We have established principles.

[Answer] I am not involved in this. Whether things are handled well or not is a military matter. It is not my affair. I do not know, but I don't see any problems. It seems like they have already made the plans. If there are any problems, they can handle them themselves. If an MP is afraid about who is suited to what position, he should go and ask the minister of defense. He should't ask me. I do not have any views. Go ask Prayut. I do not have any knowledge about the various groups and I do not know anything about how people are promoted.

[Question] As for General Prem, do you think the time has come for him to throw himself fully into the game of politics?

[Answer] That is up to him. He is the one who must decide. We cannot decide for him. If he wants to continue playing politics and play like General Kriangsak, he should do like Kriangsak. If the constitution gives him a way, he does not have to play. That is his right. He can use his rights. But if he does what General Kriangsak did, he will win more votes. But if doing so is risky, he doesn't have to do this.

PAHR QUOTED AS SAYING SIHANOUK, SANN KHMER ROUGE FRONT GROUPS

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 1 Jul 82 p 9

[News Analysis column: "The Khmer Coalition Government, the Light Is Still Shining Dimly"]

[Excerpts] The fact that the three Khmer groups that oppose Vietnam succeeded in establishing the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has not immediately given the Khmer coalition government a bright image.

This is because there have been negative criticisms to the effect that the Khmer Seri and the Moulinaka will both be dominated by the Khmer Rouge.

The most important of these criticisms is that by Mr Willibald Pahr, the Austrian minister of foreign affairs and the presiding officer at the United Nations conference on the Kampuchean problem. In an interview on Austrian radio, he said that he does not have a very favorable view of the formation of the Khmer coalition government since the two noncommunist factions in the government, that is, the Khmer Seri and Sihanouk's Moulinaka faction, will just be front groups for the Khmer Rouge.

Since a person of such importance as Willibald Pahr has said that he does not have a good opinion of the formation of this government, the formation of this Khmer coalition government provides only a very dim hope.

However, in the view of Mr Willibald Pahr, the only chance of Vietnam negotiating with the Khmer coalition government is if the noncommunist factions become the leaders in the coalition government.

But from what has been seen so far, it will be difficult for the noncommunist factions to take control. This looks even more hopeless if we look at the forces. The Khmer Rouge has approximately 30,000 combatants. Mr Son Sann claims to have 9,000 men but it is believed that this is just a boast. It has been estimated that the Khmer Seri forces number around 5,000 men at most. As for Sihanouk's Moulinaka faction, it has around 1,000 men.

Mr Pahr, the Austrian minister of foreign affairs, was interviewed after his meeting with Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila and Tun Ghazali Shafie, the Malaysian minister of foreign affairs. Mr Pahr's itinery also calls for him to visit Vietnam in order to meet with the leaders of Vietnam and discuss ways to solve the Kampuchean problem.

Looking at the views of Mr Pahr, these reflect the great uneasiness of Asean. This can be seen from the interview given by Prince Sihanouk at the end of his visit to Singapore last Tuesday just prior to his leaving to go visit Indonesia.

At a news conference, Prince Sihanouk revealed that he had agreed to join forces with Son Sann. He said that "it seems that I must help Mr Son Sann in order to create a united front. I am ready to disband the Moulinaka and join the Khmer Seri of Mr Son Sann. But I must first persuade my colleagues and my forces in order to get them to accept the Khmer Seri."

And if the Khmer Seri and the Moulinaka unite, Mr Son Sann, the prime minister of the coalition government, will become the commander of the United Kampuchean Nationalist Forces, which will be composed of the Khmer Seri and Moulinaka forces.

However, Prince Sihanouk gave his assurance that joining the forces of the two groups does not conflict in any way with the principles of the formation of the coalition government, which was formed on 22 June.

It can be said that the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea must prove itself much longer and there is still a long road ahead.

COMMENTARY CRITICIZES INSTITUTIONAL BIAS TO PARLIAMENTARY ACTIVITIY

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 30 Jun 82 p 4

[An Ordinary Reporter column: "The Political Crisis and the Conclusion"]

[Text] The government's draft act to revise the constitution was rejected by parliament last Friday, 25 June. This has again led to political instability since it is uncertain what the government's reaction will be to this rejection of the draft act.

Will it resign in order to give parliament a chance to choose a new government to administer the country?

Will it dissolve parliament in order to allow the people to exercise their democratic right to elect a new leader?

Or will it view this as an unimportant matter and carry on as usual?

During the past 4 days since that meeting of parliament, this matter has become a political issue that has been argued widespreadly on an unprededented scale in Thai society.

The thing worth noting is that, in these political arguments, different groups have emerged and there is a very clear difference of opinion.

One group is composed of members of the mass media, most of whom are not under the control of the government, and some elected politicians both in and out of the government. This group feels that the government must take responsibility for this political crisis. Most feel that the government should resign in order to give parliament a chance to elect a new group of leaders.

The other group feels the opposite of the first group. It has somewhat of an advantage in that it can rely on the mass media, for example, the radio and television stations which are under the control of the government, in spreading its views. It is also composed of politicians of party-leader rank who have joined the government. This group does not feel that the government has to take any responsibility for the matter of the draft act to revise the constitution being rejected. This group has relied on communications means in which it does not have to give any attention to the reaction of the listerners and express such views in order to win the public over to its way of thinking.

In this situation in which different groups hold different views, the institution that has been a factor in determining the course of democracy in Thailand for the past 50 years, that is, the military, has clearly shown that it supports the present government.

Concerning this attitude of the military toward this political crisis, it can be said that the clear meaning of this is that the government will continue in office and the present head of the government, General Prem Tinsulanon, will continue on in his position.

It can be said that this is the end of the matter and that it is not necessary to ask any questions. This can be done.

However, concerning this political crisis, there are still some repercussions from these political events in Thailand that can cause some excitement.

This includes the matter of MPs from several parties charging that Mr Thawee Kraikhup, the deputy minister of commerce, bribed some MPs to vote against this draft act.

Another matter is the confusion that has arisen in the Democrat Party, a party that has joined the government. There are frequently stories about the conflicts in this party. These conflicts have at times reached the point where there have been splits and the party has almost been destroyed.

As for the excitement that will result from these two cases, it seems that the events in the Democrat Party will subside in the end after Mr Phichai Rattakun, the new party leader, meets with the head of the government. And the matter will end with the six party members who are ministers in the government probably remaining in the government.

As for the conflicts in the Democrat Party, it is said that Mr Chalimphan Siriwikon played an important role in causing these conflicts. It is entirely conceivable that he will remain in the party in order to create news that will again make the headlines of the newspapers.

As for the excitement in the other case, Kraikhup is a star performer who was entrusted with the role of speaking up in parliament, as has happened. He did this is the past, he is doing this now and he will probably continue to do so in the future. This is probably so exciting that he will certainly contine on in this role until the end.

The final act will bring this political crisis in Thailand to a close and it will show whether this government is able to give some answers to the people.

EDITORIAL NOTES DP PUBLIC APPEAL, SAYS OTHERS LACK PUBLIC TRUST

[Editorial: "The Democrat Party, Only a Shadow of Its Former Self"]

[Text] The Democrat Party has gone a long way and how much farther it must go in order to reach the final goal is not known since the aims of the Democrat Party from the very beginning have concerned putting an end to dictatorship and [working] for the nation, for democracy and for principles that are correct and just.

During those periods when the people have lived under a dictatorship the Democrats have lived as general members of the populous by leaving the [political] stage and engaging in trade to earn a living. Or they have compromised with the dictators in order to survive. But when the time has been right and they have had a chance, the Democrats have used that time and chance to immediately strike at the dictators.

This long history of the Democrat Party is the history of an opposition party that has unfailingly carried out its duties and it should serve as an example for all the opposition parties.

But when the Democrat Party joined the government, it quietly accepted many of the things that it once vigorously opposed.

In addition to the Democrat Party, other parties that have joined the government include the Social Action Party and the Thai Nation Party. As for these latter parties, the party leaders are in charge of the committee for drafting an act to revise the constitution. But no one has demanded that the Social Action Party or the Thai Nation Party show such an attitude or such manners. This is because no one has ever had such hopes for either of these parties, particularly the latter party, in such matters. Hopes have rested with the Democrat Party since it has a long history as has been mentioned. Since the Democrat Party has encountered new data and new facts, it has now changed its attitude. Thus, there should not be a fuss about why people have been abandoning this political party and why people have been criticizing this party, which is a party of the people and a party whose members have followed the path of democracy. This is because the things that the Democrat Party is thinking and doing these days are opposite to those things that the people associate with the Democrat Party. Stated directly, the things that the Democrat Party is doing now are things that Democrats one vigorously condemned.

The Democrat Party has gone a long way, but it has not reached its goals. But the goals that were formulated in the past have now been changed. From heading toward democracy, the party is now walking blindly. And that means that it is really heading toward its own grave.

COLUMNIST ASSAILS ELECTORAL PROCESS, CITES CORRUPTION, SENATE

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 30 Jun 82 p 4

[A Stubborn Reporter column]

[Text] We have had joint-zone type elections in the past and there have been separate-zone type elections. But in each election, some of the candidates have belonged to a party while others have not and all have had numbers.

This is different from the election that will be held in 1983 after the present constitution, which has been in use for 4 years, and the temporary provisions expire. This will be a joint-zone type election in which all of the candidates must belong to a party, all of whose candidates will have the same number.

If a province has nine MPs, a political party that fields candidates there must field nine candidates. And the voters who vote for the single number will elect all nine candidates.

The nine candidates used as an example here are people who are chosen by the political party.

Voters cannot elect two from this party, three from that party and four from another party. The constitution does not allow this.

It does not allow this because the people who drafted the constitution felt that, if this was not done, the political parties would not be strong and the election would not result in a clear-cut winner. This would necessitate the formation of a coalition government, which would result in the government being unstable again.

In past elections, no political party has fielded the full number of candidates. There may be a complete number of MPs for only a province. For example, a province may be allowed to have nine MPs. But [a party] may be able to select only six candidates to run in the election and so it fields only six candidates. But according to the [new] constitution, when there is an election, the parties must field a full slate of candidates in accord with the number of MPs allowed for the province. But whether a party can field the full number of candidates in all the provinces depends on the resources of the political party.

As for some political parties that have problems in fielding candidates in some provinces, if nine MPs are to be elected but the party has only four or five qualified candidates whose ideals are in harmony with those of the party, the party will probably have to draft various relatives of the candidates to complete the slate. Since there is only one number, if this number wins, the entire family will be elected.

In some provinces where the older candidates are well known people who are loved by the people, it is not possible to find people to join the party. Whichever way these people turn, there will be others who are trying to use their name and good reputation to get elected. But this is at least better than bringing in strangers from other areas to join the party.

Previously, when money was thrown into an election, such as in Maha Sarakham, Roi Et and Ubon Ratchathani, [a party] may have won three seats or at least one seat. This time, when money is poured into Maha Sarakham, Roi Et, Ubon Ratchathani or some other province, [if the party wins], it will win all the seats.

It is no longer necessary to spend large sums on each person as in the past. Those who could spend large sums had to be very wealthy.

The law stipulated that candidates were to spend approximately 300,000 baht on the election. But in fact, people spent 1 or 2 million baht and some spent as much as 30-40 million. I haven't seen anybody do anything.

Previously, 1 or 2 million was spent to elect one candidate.But this time, by spending another 1 or 2 million, the whole slate can be elected.

Senators, you can think for yourselves what the future of Thai politics will be like.

Let us talk about the political parties.

Are there any political parties that the people can place their hopes in and trust completely?

What does each party or each group have that the people can trust?

Since the political parties were revived after the fall of the Thanom-Praphat dictatorship, we have had the Democrat Party, the Social Action Party, the Thai Nation Party and almost 100 other small parties.

At that time, we said that there were too many political parties. There were so many that [no one] could have any faith in them.

The governments that came to power during that period were coalition governments composed of various parties.

During the Thanin period, dictatorial power was used again. The political parties disappeared and were only reborn when a constitution was promulgated.

In these 3-4 years, have the political parties developed into perfect parties? The answer is no.

This answer is not without reason. Everyone knows that the Social Action Party has internal problems, the Democrat Party has many problems and the Thai Nation Party too has problems, although it may not seem like it. Party members have been allowed to accept 4,000 to 5,000 baht from the "black sheep" minister, Thawee Kraikhup. This is well known throughout the country.

Since this is well known, why are the senators insisting that the people again choose among the political parties?

The answer is that the senators have their own dreams. They have never been involved in elections and they have never been in close contact with the people. They do not know what the people think and feel.

It is not known when the people will be free from the troubles caused by those with power who make the laws. If people wait until 2200 hours, it will be too late.

LARGE SCALE TURNOVER IN POLICE RANKS EXPECTED

Possible Replacements Profiled

Bangkok LAK THAI in Thai 1 Jul 82 pp 11-14

[Article: "The Thai Police: Major Changes At tha Department Level"]

[Text] On 30 October 1982, at the Police Department, 17 police officials from the rank of police major general to police general will retire. And two others, Police Major General Wichit Traisuwan, the deputy commissioner of the provincial 1, and Police Major General Sombun Ayuyo, the commander of the border patrol police, will resign before the age of retirement. Thus, 19 general's positions will be vacant. This is, therefore a matter concerning which basic data should be analyzed and presented to readers in accord with the duty of LAK THAI.

The Director-General of the Police Department In Accord With the Chain of Command

When Police General Suraphon Chunlaphram retires from the position of director-general of the Police Department this year, the person who, by rank, should step into this position is Police Lieutenant General Narong Mahanon, the deputy director-general of the Police Department for suppression and the most senior of the three deputy directors-general. Police Lieutenant General Charat Phengcharoen, the deputy director-general for administration, will also retire this year and so two director - general positions will be vacant. The problem is who will step into these positions.

Who Will Be the New Deputy Directors-General of the Police Department?

Of the six assistant directors-general of the Police Department, it is well known that the person who will easily step into the position of deputy director-general this year is Police Lieutenant General Prasong Saksupha, the assistant director-general for suppression 1. He graduated form the Police Officer Academy, Class 8, or the Army Academy, Class 4. He is more skilled in administration than in suppression since he once served as the head duty officer for the director-general. It is thought that his chance of replacing Police Lieutenant General Charat Phengcharoen in administration is very good. Police Lieutenant

General Suwan Rattanachun, who is the more senior person and who is more skilled in suppression work, will probably step into the position of deputy director-general for suppression so that he can coordinate things well just as he did when he was with the Metropolitan Police and work with the new director-general of the Police Department. As for the assistant director-general who will become the deputy director-general for special activities, it is the turn of Police Lieutenant General Udom Latphli, the assistant director-general for administration 1. But he is retiring this year too. And so it will be the turn of Police Lieutenant General Suthat Sukhumwat, the assistant director-general for special activities 1. But he probably cannot compete with a fellow member of Class 1 at the Police Academy, or Class 5 at the Army Academcy. This is Police Lieutenant General Banthoeng Kampanatsaenyakon, the assistant director-director for administration 2. It is known that, at present, he is forging unity between the military and the police. He will certainly be promoted to the position of deputy director-general for special activities. Thus, three assistant director-general positions will be vacant since two of the present directors-general will be promoted and one will retire.

Are There Five Or Six Positions Vacant?

There are 12 police commanders with the rank of police lieutenant general and some of them will have to be promoted to the position of assistant director-general of the Police Department. This is a very difficult matter. Concerning seniority, Police Lieutenant General Amphon Chitpatima, the police inspector general who was removed form the position of commissioner of the provincial 4, is the most senior. But the reason for his transfer is still unclear. It is thought that he was transferred because of the surname "Chitpatima." And actually, it was "Inspector General Amphon's" turn to become an assistant director-general last October. This October, it is expected that it will be his turn to rise in position. Another one will probably be Police Lieutenant General Prakop Wiraphan, the commissioner of central investigation. The final person will probably be Police Lieutenant General Wasit Detkunchon, the commander assigned to the Police Department (a temporary position). Concerning these two latter men, there are problems that are being discussed within the Police Department. But as for salary levels, these three commanders are at the level of assistant, deputy and even director-general. As for the reasons for the discussion, it is not known whether the first person has sufficient qualifications to be commissioner of central investigation. As for the second person, he needs to learn more about police activities at the Police Education Bureau. If these two fail to gain the positions, it will probably be the turn of Police Lieutenant General Narong Anphat, the commissioner of the provincial 4, or Police Lieutenant General Chai Suwannason. This is because they are the senior personnel after the three mentioned above. Thus, since these commanders will be promoted, three positions will be vacant. And in addition, Police Lieutenant General Det Khattaphan, the commissioner of the provincial 3, Police Lieutenant General Charoenrit Chamratromaran, the commissioner of the border patrol police, and Police Lieutenant General Soem Yakhasen, the head of the Police Operations Center, are ready to retire this year. Thus, concerning police commander politions this year, if Police Lieutenant General Wisit Detkunchon is transferred, five position will be open. If he isn't, then there will be six position vacant.

Who Will Be the New Inspector General?

Since Police Lieutenant General Amphon Chitpatima, the inspector general, really has a chance to move up since he is the most senior person at present, there are six deputy inspectors general who are in line to become inspector general. But Police Major General Chan Sirisuk and Police Major General Chat Samutsing, the two most senior men, will retire this year. Then there is Police Major General Chumphon Kanchanaphanang. But his health is not good. He had a heart attack. The other three men all come from combat support units, including the finance and quartermaster divisions. They will probably have to wait awhile longer to step into these positions. Besides these, Police Major General Phon Platraksa, the deputy commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, has a chance to be promoted. But he is not as suitable a replacement as Police Lieutenant General Chai Suwannason, the commissioner of education, who is trying to have himself promoted. It is Police Major General Phao Sarasin who is the most knowledgeable about police work and who is most qualified to be promoted from the position of deputy commissioner of central investigation.

The Chief Medical Doctor of the Police Department, a Long Time Yet

The position of chief medical doctor in the Police Department is equal in rank to a commander's position. Police Lieutenant General Somsak Subsanguan took this position just last October and he does not retire until 1989 since "Dr Somsak" was born on 20 March 1928. Also, this position calls for special qualifications. Thus, it will be a long time yet [before he is promoted].

When the commissioner of education is transferred, who will replace him?

There have been reports that Police Lieutenant General Chai Suwannason, the commissioner of education, will become the commissioner of central investigation. But well informed people in police circles have said that this is probably just a strategm and that "Commissioner Chai" will really be moved to the position of inspector general or even higher. It is time for this. The rivals in the Police Education Bureau are Police Major General Prasop Tangsiriphat, who is a graduate of the Police Academy, Class 6, and who recently changed his date of birth from 30 May 1922 to 30 November 1922 in order to extend his government career 1 last year with the hope of becoming a commissioner and making the rank of "police lieutenant general." His rival is Police Major General Chai Sewikun, a graduate of Thammasat University. He was promoted to deputy commissioner of education on 2 October 1979. He will not retire until October 1986. But the rumors are that both should be careful of a younger man from Class 3 of the Police Academy who has the prestige of having been the commandant of the Police Academy. This is Police Major General Phat Prathipasen, a man who is in the same chain of command.

The Commissioner of the Central Investigation Bureau Will Definitely Be Moved

Police Lieutenant General Prakop Wiraphan, the commissioner of central investigation, has such seniority that he will have to be promoted to the third position. There were reports that Police General Suraphon Chunlaphram, the director-general of the Police Department, once received a recommendation from subordinates stating that "Commissioner Prakop" should be promoted immediately and that "Commissioner Chai" from the Police Education Bureau should replace him at the Central Investigation Bureau. Because of the strictness in this sector, there are several senior men. This is an important position and the person who occupies this position must be well qualified. The man holding this position now will almost certainly be transferred. High-ranking sources in administration say that, if he should be passed over, the person to be promoted to this position will come from the provincial 4 or the Metropolitan Police.

What Are Things Like At the Commissioner's Office of the Metropolitan Police?

Looking at things at the department level, it seems that Police Lieutenant General Chamrat Chanthrakhachon, the man who became commissioner of the Metropolitan Police last October, has a chance to rise higher this coming October. And if he is moved without being promoted, he is more qualified for the position of commissioner of central investigation than anyone else. As for within the Metropolitan Police, the position of commissioner will go to either Police Major General Phichit Mepricha or Police Major General Chalit Bunsuwan. Both are now deputy commissioners of the Metropolitan Police and both graduated from the Police Academy, Class 1, or Class 5 of the Army Academy. They are rivals in this second round from last year. "Deputy Commissioner Phichit" is given a 60-40 or 70-30 chance of getting the position. If this is wrong, this pair have the right to be promoted to some other position this year. The fear is that the son-in-law of the director-general, whose name is Police Major General Phon Platraksa, will be in line first even before October.

Police Lieutenant General Choncharoen Sombatsiri, the commissioner of the provincial 1 who will retire next year, will probably be transferred to another position at the end of this year. As for the five deputy commissioners of the provincial 1, only four will be left since Police Major General Wichit Traisuwan, a senior man, is unhappy and is resigning. Next in line is Police major General Ongat Phutphat, a younger man who will not retire until 1987. He was once a soldier who left the military and joined the police. In addition, he is a member of the Capital Defense Committee, which adds to his qualifications. Having close ties with high-ranking people in the 1st Division is considered a necessity in order to coordinate activities in this position. For these reasons, Police Major General Kiet Tiraphaet, the third deputy commissioner, does not have any chance of stepping into this position.

Police Lieutenant General Rut Kantharat, the man who became the commissioner of the provincial 2 last October, will probably not be promoted at this time. If he is transferred, it will probably be to another position at the same level. There are four deputy commissioners of the provincial 4. This October, someone will be transferred in to replace Police Major General Sitthisak Suphanphesak, a deputy commissioner who is retiring in accord with regulations without problem. The remaining three will probably spar with each other now since each has 1 or 2 years left.

There are four deputy commissioners of the provincial 3. When Police Lieutenant General Det Khattaphan, the commissioner of the provincial 3, retires, the rivals for this position will be Police Major General Charoen Watchanakhup and Police Major General Somwang Phensut. The first graduated from the Police Academy, Class 7. He was born on 9 May 1923 and will retire in 1983. So many rules and regulations! He was in the old metropolitan section known as the administrative section. The second graduated from the Police Academy, Class 3. He was born on 3 June 1925 and will retire in 1985. He once served in an important position as a suppression commander. He is skilled in suppression work, which is known as the combat sector, and has become well known. However, it will be between him and the other person or someone from central intelligence.

There are four deputy commissioners of the provincial 4. Police Lieutenant General Narong Anphat is the commissioner of the provincial 4. Even though he is number four in seniority, his chance of being promoted to a higher position is not very good this year. He is still involved in suppression activities with colleagues from the same class. Maybe he should come work in administration. No one would say anything if he is transferred to this position. There is also Police Major General Chuan Siriprasit, who graduated from Thammasat University and who once served as the chief duty officer, Police Major General Sangat Rotphirom, who came from S.H. and was transferred to the suppression secton, and Police Major General Linphit Satchaphan, who graduated from the Police Academy, Class 3, or the Army Academy, Class 7. He is a former deputy commander of the Special Branch Division who showed sufficient skill at suppression work. Because of his background, "Deputy Chuan" should have the advantage over the others since he has been in line for the position since last year. But this year, his chance of being promoted is 50-50, but it will have to be somewhere else.

The Commissioner's Office of the Border Patrol Police

The Police Department allowed Police Lieutenant General Charoenrit Chamratromaran to be the commissioner of the border patrol police for 1 year and this October he will retire. There are three deputy commissioners. Police Major General Mano Smitaphinthu is the most senior and he is suited to the position. Last year, he was ordered to wait patiently. He will retire in 1986. Police Major General Prawit Wongwiset and Police Major General Prachong Sitthichai, the two younger deputy commissioners, can afford to wait if they are not promoted this year.

A Special Position

As for who will replace Police Lieutenant General Soem Yakasem, who will retire as head of the Police Operations Center at the end of September, it depends on whom the director-general of the Police Department selects to fill the second highest police position. This is such an important position because this person must handle tasks in place of the director-general and give adivce. Thus, it must be a person whom the director-general has faith in and trusts.

A Temporary Position

Because of the confusion in the promotion of high-ranking personnel in the Police Department at the end of 1981, the cabinet gave permission to establish the position of "commissioner attached to the Police Department." This was done so that Police Lieutenant General Wisit Detkunchon would have a position. It was stipulated that this position would be abolished when Police Lieutenant General Wisit Detkunchon leaves the position.

But this September, the appropriateness of this will again be discussed. The reason for this is that he has not been engaged directly in police work for a long time. When he returns, he should first study the work in other sectors. For example, he could serve as the commissioner of police education or stay in this position in order to study things continually. This would also give another general a chance to be promoted to the level of commissioner. But the criticism has exerted pressure and it is believed that, this September, there will not be enough strength to do this and Police Lieutenant General Wisit will definitely not be promoted. And when he is promoted or transferred from this position, this temporary position will be abolished. As for the hope that there will be six commissioners' spots, there will definitely be only five.

OFFICIAL WARNS OF GROWING THREAT OF LOCAL TERRORISM

Brisbane THE COURIER-MAIL in English 30 Jun 82 p 27

[Text]

ADELAIDE.— Australia must be prepared for terrorism of the sort that has occurred in other parts of the world, the South Australian Chief Secretary, Mr John Olsen, said yesterday.

Speaking at the opening of a one-day seminar on terrorism here, Mr Olsen said Australia had been largely spared the ravages of terrorism.

The few tragic incidents which had occurred had jolted Australians from any feelings of isolation from terrorism.

"I don't have to remind you of the terrorist acts we have witnessed, but it is sufficient to say what they have lacked in frequency they have adequately compensated in horror, suffering and anguish," he said.

"It is a tragic comment on society to reflect that the names of terrorist groups have become household words."

Mr Olsen said terrorism could be met with firepower, armed guards, chauffeurs wearing flak vests and paramilitary police, as was happening overseas.

"That is fighting the disease, however, not attempting to destroy the factors which cause the disease," he said.

"Solutions will be complex and time-consuming, but it is a step in the right direction to recognise the fact that it is a very real problem." Australia did not have the social injustices that existed in many countries, and its class and religious differences either did not exist or were not as prevalent.

Its people valued the right to disagree and argue freely, according to rules which had been universally accepted because they knew they were workable.

"As a race, Australians have a reputation for being spirited and strong-willed," he said.

"We must show the rest of the world we are too strong to entertain being host to the social malaise which has become a cruel fact of life in many other countries."

REORGANIZATION PANEL'S RECOMMENDATIONS TOLD

Chairman's Press Conference

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 18 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator Rear Admiral M.A. Khan, Chairman of the Administrative Reorganisation Committee said that a national level implementation committee headed by Chief Martial Law Administrator will be formed for the implementation of the recommendations of the Reorganisation Committee.

Addressing a Press conference at the CMLA's Secretariat on Saturday the DCMLA told the newsmen that the CMLA had given assurance for the implementation of the recommendations which provide for adequate devolution of administrative, judicial and financial powers at the district and thana levels.

Rear Admiral M.A. Khan said that an amount of Taka 363 crore for creating intrastructural facilities for the conversion of the sub-divisions into districts and upgrading of the 387 thanas would be required. The recommendations would be implementated in three phases and he was hopeful that the implementation could be completed by the end of the Second Five Year Plan. He told a questioner Taka 59 crore would be required for conversion of 30 sub-divisions into districts and Taka 299 crore for the upgradation of the thanas.

In the first phase 116 thanas with a population of over two lakhs have been recommended to be upgraded at a cost of Taka 48 crores, 198 thanas in the second phase at a cost of Taka 152 crore. The average population in each of these 198 thanas would be one to two lakhs. In the third phase 73 thanas will be taken up for upgradation at a cost of 56 crore Taka. These thanas have on an average one lakh population in each police station.

Rear Admiral M.A. Khan said that an amount of Taka 15 crore had been recommended for holding the elections to the district, thana and union parishads. The committee has recommended that the directly elected chairman of the district thana and union parishad would be the chief of administration at the respective levels. The committee further recommended that the elected councils shall have full functional control over the officials working at that level and the elected chairman will be the chief co-ordinator at all levels.

Rear Admiral Khan said that the recommendation further provide for strengthening of village courts in terms of authority and training and development of infrastructure at all levels to make development of adequate athority possible.

Mr. M. M. Zaman, Secretary Cabinet Division and a member of the committee told the Press Conference that the money which has been recommended for upgrading of thanas would be spent phase by phase. But he said, the initial implementation of the recommendations could be possible right now without spending any money on infra-structure. He said that the biggest chunk of the money would be spent for building thana hazat, offices and accommodations.

The DCMLA told a questioner that the functions of sub-divisions will be shifted to the thana and senior officers not below the level of SDO would be posted at thana level.

Thana council headed by a elected chairman and constituted by chairmen of the union parishads would have full control over the thana administration. The officers serving at district or union level would be accountable to the respective council.

Replying to a question Rear Admiral M. A. Khan said the bureaucracy would not create any obstacle in implementing this participatory democracy at the grass root level. He said that the officers would be given rural orientation training.

Rear Admiral M.A. Khan said that although the villages are the lifeline of our country, these remained neglected so far. The present Government had decided to make the thana as the focal point of administration. He said that the committee had recommended an administrative system conducive to fullest utilisation of the rural resources particularly the land. The thana council would plan and execute the local development programmes and the Annual Development Programme (ADP) would be fragmented and a portion of it would go to thanas.

The committee has recommended following functions in broad areas of operations in the thana level: Major part of agriculture, livestock public works health education upto secondary level, cottage industry cooperatives communications and family planning.

The committee has also recommended areas where thana council would be allowed to levy taxation. The areas are tax on annual value of buildings and land transfer of property hearths profession, trades and callings births marriages and feasts, entertainment etc.

Replying to a question the DCMLA said that the recommendations would be scrutinised and then implemented. He said another questioner that the proposal for 51 new districts is not final. New areas might be considered for up gradation as districts he said.

The DCMLA said that the committee visited a number of thanas under different districts to study the Local Government administration and met the local leaders of public opinion as well as officials. The committee also obtained pubilc opinion through written questionnaire.

The committee in course of its examination found that popular participation in administration was lacking. Co ordination of field services was totally absent specially at thana level. He said that it was also found that there were too many levels of administration creating for the common man problems of communication and access to Government services.

Rear Admiral Khan said that the committee is firmly of the view that meaningful and effective devolution of authority is possible only in a frame work of elected Local Government. The DCMLA said that to achieve the ultimate and of eradicating poverty it would need a dedicated sense of public service both on the part of the officials and the corps of elected leaders of Local Government.

He said that the committee further recommended for transfer of administrative functions to the elected Local Government.

Rear Admiral Khan said that the committee also recommended that a policy of non-intervention by the National Government in matters which are within the purview of the elected Government should be adopted. The oft repeated argument that Local Government needs guidance and supervision need to be stretched so far as to impair popular initiative or to dominate decision making process of the elected leaders the committee rcommended the DCMLA said.

He said that a competent implementation machinery combined with popular initiative will set in process of participatory development that may lead to elimination of poverty provided the National Government is committed to this goal. It is through self government that popular leadership can emerge, popular energy is generated sustained and used for national develo ment Rear Admiral Khan said.

Rear Admiral M. A. Khan said that the committee had suggested an administrative system which would help accelerate the pace of development in the country particularly in the rural areas. He said that the administrative inadequacies in the present system had deterred the development work in the rural areas and the benefit of development did not reach the people. He hoped that the implementation of the recommendations of the committee would usher in a new era in our struggle for national development.

The Press conference was attended by the members of the committee Mr. A. Z M. Obaidullah Khan, Mr. M. M. Zaman Dr. Sheikh Maqsud Ali Mr. Obaidul Huq, Mr. S. M. Al Hussainy Mr. M. A. A. Samad and Dr. Shaukat Ali.

Salient Features Listed

[Text] The Committee for Administrative Reorganization in its report has made a number of recommendations including abolition of subdivisions as a unit and turning thana as the 'focal point' to bridge the yawning gap between the Government and the rural people. The report deals with elimination of 'unnecessary levels' of administration reducing the existing 7-tier structure to five and decentralisation of the administration.

The salient features of the recommendations of the committee are as below:

--directly elected Chairman at Zilla Parishad (ZP), Thana Parishad (TP) and Union Parishad (UP),

--officials to be members of the councils at the respective levels.

--elected Chairman to be the chief coordinator at all levels,

--elected councils to have full functional control over the officials working at that leve,,

--elected Chairman to be provided with full and adequate staff support in the form of a senior officer to be called chief executive officer.

--Chairman of UPs to be the members of TP.

--Chairmen of TPs to be members of ZP,

--adequate devolution of administrative, judicial and financial powers at district and thana levels,

--strengthening of village courts in terms of authority and training,

--development of infrastructure at thana level to make development of adequate authority possible and

--elimination of unnecessary levels such as subdivisions and divisions.

The committee noticed the following major inadequacies in the existing administrative structure :-

--lack of appropriate, consistent and uniform personnel policies with regard to recruitment, promotion and training of public service

--tadbir-based approach to decision-making,

--difficulties of the common man to comprehend the compartmentalised functions and complexity in Governmental decision making,

--absence of a sound and durable political process to give appropriate, consistent and uniform policies with regard to public welfare,

--vertical-functional departmentalism that vitiates area-based coordination.

--weak Local Government system rendered weaker by lack of representative institutions at different levels of administration,

--creation of parallel political and administrative institutions leading to conflict in jurisdiction and

--reluctance on the part of the political authority to devolve power to the representative institutions at the local levels.

Subdivisions To Be Converted

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 18 Jul 82 p 1

Present Weaknesses Noted

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 19 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] Tadbir-based approach to decision-making is one of the nine major weaknesses that the administrative reorganisation and reform committee found in the existing system in the country, reports BSS.

Other inadequacies of the exising system are:

Lack of appropriate, consistent and uniform personal policies with regard to recruitment promotion and training of public services.

--Difficulties of the common-man to comprehend the compartmentalised functions and complicacies in government decision-making.

Absence of durable political process to give appropriate, consistent and uniform policies with regard to public welfare.

Vertical-functional departmentalism that vitiates area-based coordination,

Weak local government system rendered weaker by lack of appropriate political direction.

--Weakening of traditional administrative and representative institutions at different levels of administration.

--Creation of parallel political and administrative institutions leading to conflict in jurisdiction.

--Reluctance on the part of the political authority to develop power to the representative institutions at the local levels.

TEXT OF FOREIGN MINISTER'S SPEECH IN NICOSIA

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 18 Jul 82 p 5

[Text] Mr. Chairman,

All of us have, at one time or another during the last few weeks predicted that Israel would aggress and yet, each one of us have hoped that some measure of common sense and some feeling of humanism would prevail at the very end to avert disaster. We were all proved wrong. Force has prevailed in the face of sincere persuasion. The aggressor has rightly assessed that persuasion represents weakness.

"We are also each aware of the deep divisions which permeate our ranks, and yet we are also somewhat shamefacedly reconciled to the tragic fact that we are incapable of forging unity. This is all for the good because we are atleast honest about it all. This is why I think that all is not lost and that we can, if we have the political will, not only demonstrate our solidarity but mobilise such forces as are necessary to have this aggression vacated.

"The people of Bangladesh have been shocked by the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. The sense of shock goes well beyond a mere expression of words. We are shocked even more that those who are reckoned to possess real power have not exercised it to prevent aggression; rather they may have knowingly or unknowingly contribtued towards it.

"Events in Lebanon have established quite clearly that unless the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people are met and an independent Palestine established, aggression will continue. The events have also proved quite clearly that unless Lebanese sovereignty is recognized and respected, this aggression will increase in geometrical progression. These are not contradictory. On the contrary, it is the reality which all of us must face to find a humanitarian and just solution

"Over decades now, the Palestinian people have been identified with terrorism by a continuous exercise in propaganda, most of it self-deceiving Israel has been consistently presented in an image of the oppressed and persecuted deserving continuing compassion on the one hand and the means to defend themselves on the other. I believe that history has never before witnessed so great a distortion of facts. It is so great and it has been made to appear so real that the allegedly oppressed are today able to aggress with impudence while the international community have become mere bystanders.

"We firmly believe that the present grave crisis has clearly focused attention on the need to demand universal recognition of the PLO by the international community. In fact, the present mechanism of negotiation already bears all the elements of recognition. We also believe that the immediate vacation of aggression by the Israelis coupled with the recognition of the PLO on the one hand and the respect for Lebanese sovereignty on the other are essential ingredients for a political settlement of the present conflict.

"On behalf of the people of Bangladesh, Mr. Chairman, I express our solidarity with the Palestinian people with their representative organisation PLO and with their great leader Yasser Arafat.

"I also take this opportunity of expressing our sincere grief for the loss of life and property sustained by the Lebanese and the Palestinian peoples.

'We pray that peace is soon restored to enable the people of Lebanon to lead a normal life which will enable them to rebuild their country in complete freedom and without fear of further aggression.

"I conclude, Mr. Chairman by thanking you and the Government of Cyprus for the warm hospitality and kindness extended to my delegation and myself and also thank you for organising this important Conference at such short notice"

VISITING WORLD BANK OFFICIAL HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Mr. William David Hopper Vice-President of World Bank for South Asian region, commended in Dacca on Saturday the new fiscal and other economic policies of the Government. He termed the country's national budget for 1982-83 as a remarkable and bold document which, he felt would have far-reaching effects for promotion of development activities.

Summing up his impressions about the state of the national economy and the prospects for its growth and development in the light of the new policy moves of the Government, the WB Vice-President told the newsmen at a Press conference at the conference room of the External Resources Division (ERD) that the country was now better poised for steady growth and development of its economy.

Mr. Hopper leaves Dacca today (Sunday) for Calcutta on route to New Delhi at the close of his six-day familiarisation tour of the country. His discussions with the Government leaders including the Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. General H. M. Ershad during his stay in Dacca covered different aspects of the new national budget, development priorities and choices of the new administration, economic reforms and policy changes initiated after the change in government on March 24 last, prospects for aid-flows new investment policy etc.

Kazi Fazlur Rahman, ERD Secretary, was present at the Press conference, addressed by Mr. Hopper on Saturday.

Mr. Hopper told the newsmen that his visit to Bangladesh this time was aimed at assessing for himself the impact of the recent events on the development scenario of the country. He recalled that he came to Dacca last time almost a year back after the shock that took place on May 30. '81.

Mr Hopper felt that the country has by now succeded in finding a course for her development through the successive changes in her governments.

Referring to his discussions with the CMLA, he observed that he discussed a wide range of development and other issues with General Ershad who he felt, would be able to provide the leadership, recapture the development initiative and reinitiate the growth process for building a viable economy for the well-being of the people of Bangladesh.

Mr. Hopper said that he was much impressed by the priorities in the Annual Development Programme for 1982-83 and stated that the ADP "reflects the availability of the resource and priority development needs of the country." He added that as the Vice-President of the World Bank and also the Chairman of the Air Group, he felt convinced that the community of donors would render assistance to Bangladesh to mee her present as well as future development targets.

Replying to a question, he said that Bangladesh is the second largest recipient of aid from the World Bank's soft-loan agency, IDA. The largest recipient of IDA assistance is India, he noted.

He pointed out that total assistance to Bangladesh in 1981-82 was 14.7 per cent of the IDA funds for the year. He hoped that the same level of assistance from the IDA would be continued in 1982-83 for Bangladesh. But the assistance be more than the previous level if the present state of problems relating to the IDA's sixth replenishment of funds for development assistance can be overcome he added.

Answering another question the WB Vice-President stated the seventh replenishment for IDA's funds is scheduled to begin in July next.

Mr. Hopper termed the prevailing international aid climate as a difficult one with a manifest tendency on the part of some major donors to curtail their aid programmes.

About the prospects for more assistance from the World Bank for Bangladesh in order to enable the latter to overcome the problems on account of shortage of funds for meeting the local costs of the projects, the WB Vice-President said that the World Bank does not discriminate between foreign exchange costs and Tk. cost and it apprises the full cost of the projects at the time of committing funds for the same. "We only want to see that the recipient country funds a part of the project cost in the manner of making some down-payment for the same", he added.

Replying to a question as to whether the Government has reduced the subsidies on account of fertiliser sale and foodgrains distributed under rationing system owing to any pressure from the World Bank or other donor agencies, Mr. Hopper stated that such decisions reflect only the choice and the option of the Government.

ERSHAD MESSAGE TELLS CONCERN OVER IRAN-IRAQ CONFLICT

[Text] NICOSIA, July 16--The Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad, today expressed Bangladesh's "grave concern" at the "very serious situation arising out of the Iraq-Iran conflict" and the deep shock at the events in Lebanon reports BSS.

This was conveyed in a message by the CMLA to the President of Cyprus, Mr Spyros Kyprianou, handed over to him by the Bangladesh Foreign Minister Mr A R Shams-ud Doha now attending the emergency session of the Non-aligned Coordinating Bureau here.

The message was also read out during the general debate of the bureau meeting by Foreign Minister Mr Doha who was received by President Kyprianou this morning.

Following is the text of the message:

"Your Excellency,

Kindly convey the grave concern and anxiety of Government and the people of Bangladesh to the Bureau of the Nonaligned countries as result of the very serious situation arising out of the Iraq-Iran conflict and which directly affects our combined efforts to render assistance and support to our Palestinian brethern.

The people of Bangladesh is deeply shocked by this events in Lebanon and we fervently urge the movement whose bureau has assembled under your hospitality and onitiative to appeal our non-aligned brothers Iran & Iraq to cease hostility immediately so that out combined efforts can be directed towards facing the common Israeli threat."

PROJECT MONITORING DIRECTOR ON PROBLEMS ENCOUNTERED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 17, 18 Jul 82

[17 Jul 82 pp 5, 7]

[Text] The number of problems and bottlenecks which affect project implementation by way of cost cver-run and time over-run are many. The number of problems which have been identified by the Project Implementation Bureau (now Project Monitoring Bureau) in the course of its work over the last seven years runs to over twenty. However, the major ones are indicated below:

(1) Spreading thin of available investible resources over too many projects;

(2) Shortage of funds (both Taka and Foreign Exchange requirements);

(3) Non-availability of vital inputs (e.g. plant, machinery, etc) in time;

(4) Faulty preparation/formulation of projects;

(5) Delay in approval of projects;

(6) Shortage of skilled manpower;

(7) Injudicious acceptance of foreign aid;

(8) Problem of debt-servicing liabilities and the consequent short release of funds;

(9) Delay in release of funds;

(10) Failure to apply management tools (such as network analysis and critical path analysis technique) project implementation; and

(11) Delay due to donor procedures.

It is very important to note the interrelated nature of many of these problems. Problems of time over-run are frequently accompanied by problem of cost over-run (however cost over-run problem can take place independently also). One problem can lead to another and therefore a project can be afflicted by more than one problem at the same time. Conversely, the solu ion of one problem will lead to solution of others, and minor problems will largely disappear if major problems can be solved. The government has already taken a number of important decisions to solve or minimise these problems. However, the thing is while some of these problems are amenable to solution, others are not so easy to solve, at least in the short run. We are to remember that time over-run and cost over-run are by no means an uncommon phenomenon. They take place everywhere, irrespective of whether a country is developed or developing. But in the context of a less developed country like Bangaldesh, instances of time over-run and cost over-run take place far more frequently. Then there is also the question of taking of decisions being one thing while their strict observance and implementation being another.

A brief discussion now follows on the above problems. Suggestions are offered along the way, where necessary or possible.

Spreading Thin of Available Investible Resources over Too Many Projects:

This problem can also be phrased as "allocation of funds without reference to physical schedule in Porject Proformas (PP's)" or as "inclusion of too many unapproved projects in the Annual Development Programme (ADP)". In terms of number of projects affected, this has by far been our biggest problem, but fortunately one for which effectual solutions are available. We have too many projects crowded in the ADP, all crying for funds but since investible funds are very limited, they are spread thinly over all the projects, meaning a situation in which there are some allocations for each and every scheme which can somehow find its place in the ADP, but which are hardly adequate for the implementation of the particular portions which are targetted for completion during the financial year in question according to the physical schedule shown in the project proformas. The number of projects falling under this problem category would be too numerous to mention. Nevertheless, Teesta Barrage Project, Habiganj Gas Field Development (Well No. 3 and 4), 110 MW Khulna Power Station, Mechna-Dhonagoda, Irrigation Project, Serajganj IRDP, etc. can be cited as examples.

This problem, because of its enormous magnitude, has already received considerable attention by now. Various exercise have been undertaken in the past to tackle this problem. Mention may be made in this regard of the project pruning exercise, prescription of minimum standards in construction and building, ban on the purchase of cars, preparation of physical programmes of projects for each FY, directive s for acquisition on only tives for acquisition on only minimum necessary land and so on. These exercises are continuing right through this day in which both Planning Commission and PMB are cooperating closely. The latest steps consist of emphasis on directly-productive projects and on the exclusion of unapproved projects as far as possible. All these together should hopefully go a long way in solving this problem.

In this context, we should also actively consider decentralisation in terms of geographical regions. This has become overdue. In this respect, emphasis should be shifted from function-oriented multiplication of agencies (we already have too many of them) to area-oriented consolidation of agencies; and the present Divisional Development Boards should be further strengthened in terms of government financial support and institutional development. The load of planning, programming, monitoring and (in some cases) implementing p ojects may be passed on to these Boards to a considerable extent. To a lesser extent, the same can be done to Zilla Parishads and Thana Councils. A good start has already been made by deciding to hand over substantial portions of feeder roads, minor irrigation, rural electrification, etc. to agencies which implement "food for Works" schemes.

Shortage of Funds (both Taka and foreign exchange requirements):

This is a problem which is not so easy to solve. From that viewpoint, shortage of funds becomes our most difficult problem. The problem of "spreading thin of investible funds over too many projects" also arises as a consequence of this problem. We are not only wholly dependent on various donors for the entire foreign exchange requirements for our projects but are also directly dependent on them for a substantial portion of Taka resources requirements. Indirectly, we are dependent on them for the entire Taka cost financing as well. The donors give us commodity aid which generates counterpart funds. These counterpart funds go entirely into our development budget providing Taka resources. Commodity aid also indirectly brings about considerable increases in our revenue receipts by way of duty and sales tax, which together comprising the most important source of government taka revenue. The government had already taken and are still taking various steps to tackle this problem by providing various incentives on exports and by effecting rationalisation of tax structure, gradual elimination of subsidies on food and fertiliser, and so on but the problem is so formidable in our context that till date little real progress could be achieved because of, among others, high inflation and deteriorating terms of our trade. One of the easier solutions in such a situation is by resorting to deficit financing which is considered an undesirable things. Among projects which are suffering from this problem (particularly lack of foreign exchange resources), mention may be made of such BMEDC projects as Jaipurhat Limestone Mining and Cement Works, Madhyapara Hard Rock Project, Jamalgonj Coal Mining Project and so on.

Non availability of vital inputs (e.g. plant, machinery etc) in time:

This major problem is caused primarily by suppliers, by their failures to supply vital project inputs in time. Once a tender is accepted and orders placed with a supplier or contractor much can not be done by project management to ensure supply in time except for a continuous follow-up action as primary responsibility for timely supply remains with the supplies. This is particularly more true in situations where vital projects inputs (e.g. proprietary items) are to be procured from foreign suppliers or under tied aid. Of course, in the event of such delay, punitive actions can be initiated against the suppliers and contractors but that does not eliminate the delay already caused. Cancellation of orders of procurement or contracts are not always easy because placing of orders or signing of contract with new firms may by itself, take a lot of time because of procedural formalities. Missing of items consignments which have arrived at the port also falls within this problem category. The detection of certain vital items missing from consignments during the penultimate phase of implementation of the Ashuganj Fertiliser Project caused a lot of difficulties and these missing items had eventually to be airfreighted to Bangladesh. Many projects would fall under this problem category. To name a few, we may mention the Ashuganj Fertiliser Project, Gulfra-Habib Mohini Textile Mills (BMR), 60 MW Chittagong Thermal Power Station, etc.

Faulty Preparation of Projects :

Project preparation is not an easy job. It requires knowledge experience expertise and imagination. It calls for the project formulator to have a clear perspective of the technical, financial, economical organisational and managerial aspects of a project which is proposed for formulation. It also requires a clear perspective of the working of the national economy. All this would call for a high degree of skill and perspective on the part of the people who are responsible for project formulation. Unfortunately, such skill and perspective are very much lacking in the context of Bangladesh. In many cases, the presence of "square pegs in round holes" makes matters worse rendering project formulation exercise full of faults right from the beginning. Even where there are people who have knowledge of project formulation, they lack depth and imagination. Now a days a lot of courses are being offered on project appraisal and project management here and abroad. However, they are mostly short courses of 2-3 months' duration, in which emphasis is laid primarily on the economic aspects at the expense of other aspects, particularly technical and organisational aspects. The knowledge that one acquires in such courses is rather mechanical in nature and can be very inadequate for the job of project formulation. In this respect one should guard against the creation of situations in which little knowledge can become a dangerous thing. All these weaknesses in project formulation are reflected in the frequent revision of the project proforma and in the tendency of underestimating costs, while overestimating benefits. This problem can be tackled in a number of ways such as :

(a) Appointment of the right people for the right jobs and through complete elimination of cases of "square pegs in round holes". Some flexibility can be there only in matters of direct requirement at the lowest level (e.g. in case of Research Officers in the Planning Commission, Project Monitoring Bureau, etc.) but even there jobiarta specialization should be initiated for direct recruits through appropriate training programme.

(b) In-depth training in project formulation, appraisal, and implementation. Short training courses may not always be the right answers as they may give rise to situations in which little knowledge can become a dangerous thing. Besides, the emphasis at present is primarily on economic and management aspects. Equal importance should be recorded to technical (e.g. choice of technical alternatives) and organisatio,

Delay in approval of projects is a major problem but it is one in which a degree of inevitability cannot perhaps be altogether eliminated. The Second Five-Year Plan was not launched immediately at the end of the First Five-Year Plan (1973-78) and instead, a Two-Year Plan covering the period 1978-80 was launched. This was done specifically with the purpose of ending the "tyranny of ongoing projects", as it was called. This is because at the time the load of too many on-going projects was eating up all the available resources and good new projects in sufficient number could hardly be accommodated in the ADP. Naturally at the end of the Two-Year Plan, when the Second Five-Year Plan was launched, the number of unapproved projects was far in excess of approved ones so much so that the total number of unapproved projects stood at over 1100 in September, 1980 out of a total portfolio of 1,525 projects in the ADP, 1980-81. In spite of the then Presidential directive to get all the unapproved projects approved by December 1980, the number of such projects continued to remain high and even today, out of a total number of 1,679 projects in the Revised ADP, 1981-82 over 600 remain unapproved. The inevitability of this problem which we mentioned arises because approval can take place only after a project is formulated correctly in terms of its various component parts and only after the costs of components and benefits of project output have been estimated on as accurate and realistic a basis as possible. In this sense this particular problem can be seen as directly related to the problem of faulty preparation of projects and the problem of lack of skilled manpower.

Approval can be accorded to a project only after the Project Evaluation Committee (PEC) can first recommend this approval and the PEC can recommend a project for approval only after it is completely satisfied that the project has been prepared properly in all respects in terms of its component parts and on the basis of realistic estimates of costs and benefits. At the risk of repetition, it has to be again said that formulation of a project is not an easy job and that it requires knowledge, experience, expertise and imagination. Naturally, the donor agencies, particularly the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank almost invariably make it obligatory on the part of recipient countries to undertake feasibility studies first before formulation of an aided project. Unfortunately, in our context, many projects are included in the ADP without the benefit of prefeasibility or feasibility studies. Many of such projects are included in the ADP because of pressure from various Ministries and agencies. We can call this pressure as pressure from influential quarters. Notwithstanding these problems and difficulties, first the External Resources Division and now the Planning Commission in consultation with other Ministries and Divisions is trying to bring the approval procedures within a maximum time limit of 150 days from date of formulation of a project in full details (in respect of foreign-aided projects, from the date of completion of appraisal). In this regard, it is felt that only approved and foreign-aided projects (provided firm commitments to them have been made) should be included in the ADP.

If we exclude the unapproved projects from the ADP, this problem of delay in approval can largely be taken care of. This should not pose any problem or create any complications. Since the ADP for a particular FY, under present practice, is prepared at two different periods of time — first, in March-May of the preceding FY and then the revised ADP in December-February of that FY, the exclusion of unapproved projects from the ADP at any point in time should not cause concern to any quarters because after just 6 months or so, candidate unapproved projects, which got approval during that period, can get accommodated in the next ADP, be it Revised ADP for that FY or Original ADP for the next FY. Only a notional reserve allocation in the original ADP should be sufficient to take care of those projects when the revised ADP is prepared. We would, therefore, strongly suggest that the Planning Commission may from now on bring out two documents simultaneously:

(a) An ADP consisting only of approved projects, and also those foreign-aided projects to which GOB's firm commitment has been made, irrespective of whether they are approved or not (Approval in this sense should also include anticipatory approval which is obtained in respect of a few selected important projects;) and (b) Portfolio of Unapproved Candidate Projects for .....(FY).

Shortage of skilled manpower has been quite a problem ever the last few years, particularly in respect of projects the implementation and operation of which require a high degree of technical expertise.

In Bangladesh, the technical jobs of literally every foreign-aided projects are performed by expatriate consultants or experts, be it a fertilizer factory or a paper mill or a sugar mill or a power plant or a river bridge or a barrage. We seem to depend on foreign experts and consultants for technical jobs of any consequence. But it is not that it is always a reflection of lack of technical skill of our local personnel for the jobs. This is also due to a lack of self-confidence on the part of our technically-qualified personnel or to an attitude to "play it safe"

The construction of 3rd Unit of Karnafully Hydroelectric Project may be cited as an example. Originally, only the consultancy job was to be performed by expatriate perpertormed by expartriate personnel. Construction part of the job was to be done by our own engineers and technicians. However, at a later stage, the Power Development Board opted for expatriate personnel for both the jobs.

The flight of our considerable technical manpower for better jobs abroad (particularly Middle East) has of late caused another major problem, so much so that our government has now to consider recruitment of foreign teachers for our engineering colleges. It is very difficult to quickly fill this vacuum by our own manpower. Restrictions (in some cases, outright ban) have already been imposed to stem such flight. However, considerable damage has already been done. Training and education is another solution, but this will produce results only after a period to time. Shift of emphasis from general education to vocational education and specialised training in fields of practical importance would hold the key to successful solution of this very important problem. However, we are still a long way off from effecting this change.

Injudicious Acceptance of Foreign Aid:

Decisions to go for foreign aid for part financing of particular projects may automatically inflate the project cost by considerable extent above the original cost estimates that were worked out on the basis of taka financing only. This is particularly evident in the roads sub-sector where one finds that the per mile cost of road construction in respect of foreign aided projects is 4-6 time that for roads which are constructed with taka resources only. Rangamati-Khagrachari Road (41.60 miles) may be cited as a case in point. When the Roads & Highways Department first proposed the construction of this road on the basis of taka financing, the estimated cost was worked out at Tk. 18.00 crore. Subsequently, when part financing of this project was proposed under Australian Aid, the estimated total cost jumped to Tk. 40.57 crore (with a foreign exchange component of Tk. 16.16 crore alone). Out of the total foreign exchange component of Tk. 16.16 crore, Tk. 8.00 crore were to be incurred by way of salaries and facilities of foreign consultants, fuel cost, etc. Khulna-Mongla Road (22 miles) is yet another example. This is an ADB-financed project. The cost of the Project which was initially estimated at Tk. 35.44 crore in 1973 has now jumped to Tk. 50.48 crore. Such examples can be multiplied. It is, therefore, imperative that extreme caution and care are exercised in accepting foreign aid because without so, there is every danger that not only the total costs of the project would go up, but that there may be substantial increases in the taka costs as well. Thoughtless acceptance of foreign aid may also burden the economy with undesirable projects (such as, capital-intensive projects) which are inconsistent with the socio-economic policy objectives of the country. However, that is another matter.

Problems of Debt Servicing Liabilities and the Consequent Short Release of Funds:

This has been a big problem plaguing the development projects under implementation now for a long time. The government is fully aware of this problem, but its effective solution has so far proved rather difficult to achieve. The various commercial corporations and boards are supposed to pay their debt servicing liabilities from their revenue budgets but in actual practice, they have failed to do so so far. Payment of debt servicing liabilities is important for generation of domestic resources because debt servicing receipts is a very important component of Government's non-tax revenue. Government (Finance Division) is, therefore, very reluctant to give relief to the executing agencies in this respect and they (Finance Division), therefore, deduct the due amounts from the allocations of the on-going projects of those agencies in the ADP. If Finance Division does not do so, there will be a corresponding shortfall in the generation of domestic resources for the next year's ADP. Again because of this deduction the executing agencies receive less amount than what are provided for in the ADP, resulting in shortfall in the progress of the projects. This causes the inevitable time over-run and time over-run, in turn, causes cost over-run. We have a vicious circle here. By a recent decision of the NEC, this particular problem is now receiving high level attention of the Ministry of Finance and the Planning Commission.

DELAY IN RELEASE OF FUNDS:

This delay takes place mainly in the Finance Division and the Office of the Accountant General, but these two organisations may not be held fully responsible for this. In fact what happens is that the various formalities are not completed by the executing agencies seeking funds, with the result that their requests are sent back for necessary rectification or further elaboration, and this causes delay. Normally this problem affects unapproved projects more severely than approved projects for the simple reason that procedures for release of funds are of necessity more complex for unapproved projects than for approved ones. This particular problem is also receiving due attention by a high level inter-ministerial committee which has recently finalised its recommendations for simplification and streamlining of the various procedures.

FAILURE TO APPLY MANAGEMENT TOOLS IN PROJECT IMPLEMENTATION:

It is seen that the persons who are actually responsible for, or involved in project implementation lack knowledge of even such simple tools of management as network analysis and the critical analysis technique. The upshot is that jobs which should be done simultaneously or in their proper sequence are not done so. And this invariably cause delay in implementation. Chittagong Dry Dock and Heavy Steel Engineering Works is a case in point. Here we find that the dry dock itself has been completed but not the supporting workshop, although works on both the jobs could have been undertaken more or less together. Inevitably the implementation of this project has been delayed. This problem can be tackled by imparting training to the project personnel, and in fact the PMB (then PIB) conducted a short training programme specifically for project directors/managers on the critical path techniques some time back. Also by now some 18 short courses on Project Management have been held since September 1978 in which a total of 470 mid-level and young officials have received training. But even here the problem has been that few participants could be drawn from personnel who are actually involved in project implementation in the field. But then this is perhaps a problem of a more general nature and happens with every training programme, particularly in the realm of social sciences. In any case, the appreciably reflected in projects implementation and it may take sometime before its effect is so felt.

DELAY DUE TO DONOR PROCEDURES:

It is not just that only our own government procedures relating to approval of projects, release of funds, and so on delay implementation. Donor procedures may be equally cumbersome and can put such constraints as may eventually result in delay in project implementation. Periodic dialogues with the donors have not been of much held because the donor countries have their own difficulties at simplifying or streamlining their procedures. An example would be with the procedures for reimbursements of Taka costs which are financed by various donors. If places of the present reimburseable basis, a lot of problems on this account would have been solved.

In the ultimate analysis, all of the above-mentioned problems could be described by the single term of "people-related problem". Because it is people who, through their ignorance, failures, inefficiency or attitude, cause these problems; and it is people again who have to find solutions. We have indicated some of the measures which can be undertaken to combat this people-related problem. This has primarily to do with the recruitment and appointment of qualified personnel strictly on the basis of job requirements, and with training. As regards training, short courses may not always be the answer because of the danger that such courses may create situations of little knowledge becoming a dangerous thing.

Meaningful job rotation is yet another important step that should be practised in conjunction with training in this respect. However, every measure stands the danger of dismal failure unless the attitude of the personnel could also be changed at the same time. And this is a far more difficult task than anything else. Because even with all the world's knowledge and experiences and expertise, higly-qualified personnel may not be delivering goods and services to the country, if they are suffering from a mercenary attitude and questionable integrity at the same time. But then this is a problem which holds true not only for the job of project implementation but for every job as well.

BANGLADESH, NEPAL PLAN JOINT VENTURE INDUSTRIES

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 19 Jul 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Matiur Rahman]

[Text] Bangladesh and Nepal are going to set up a number of industrial plants under joint venture in the Himalayan Kingdom.

The Joint Economic Commission set up by the two friendly countries about four years ago proposed three industrial projects--one jute mill, one pulp mill and one pharmaceutical plant to be set up in Nepal under the bilateral cooperation.

The recent Foreign Secretary level meeting in Dacca during the visit of Nepalese Foreign Secretary Jagdish Shamsher Jang Bahadur Rana, decided to form a "review committee" to monitor the progresss of implementation of the projects under joint venture.

The Review Committee comprising high officials from the External Resources Division of the Bangladesh Government and from the Finance Ministry of the Nepalese Government will start meeting every six month alternatively in Dacca and Kathmandu in order to keep the projects under constant watch.

Mr. Jagdish Rana though visited Dacca during his current tour of four South Asian countries--Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Maldives and India in connection with the regional forum for cooperation had talks with his Bangladesh counterpart, Mr. Ataul Karim on bilateral matters with particular reference to the recommendations of the Joint Economic Commission.

The Joint Economic Commission set up in 1978 during the state visit of late President Ziaur Rahman had its third Ministerial level meeting in Dacca in January and made a number of recommendations for expanding the areas of bilateral cooperation particularly in the fields of industry and trade and commerce. Nepalese Finance Minister Dr. W. B. Pant led his country's delegation to the Commission's meeting.

Meanwhile, both the governments carried out survey for setting up the proposed jute and pulp mills in Nepal. Feasibility study in this regard is under consideration.

It may be mentioned here that Nepal has two jute mills and the third one will be set up in collaboration with Bangladesh technical know-how and other assistance.

JT Chamber

Both the countries are contemplating to set up a Joint Chamber of Commerce and Industry to boost bilateral trade. The Governments of Nepal and Bangladesh are now in touch with each other to give final shape to the joint chamber.

During the foreign secretaries meeting both the sides expressed their determination to increase volume of bilateral trade by undertaking initiative to encourage the private sectors and traders.

The volume of two way trade between Dacca and Kathmundu came to around two crore taka in 1980-81. Bangladesh exported mainly newsprint, paper and paper products and soaps of all kinds worth about Taka 70 lakh while she imported fruits, vegetables and manufactures of metals worth Taka one crore from Nepal during the period.

The joint Economic Commission, however, listed 21 items for export from Bangladesh and only 7 items for import from Nepal. The export list includes textiles including saree, bicycles, plastic goods, readymade garments, G.I. pipes, crockeries and cutleries, electric wires and telephone cables, packaging materials, jute carpets, telecommunication equipments, coir products, cellophane, dried and salted fish etcetra.

The commodities which can be imported from Nepal include rice, mustard seed/oil, marble chips, boulders, pulses and medicinal herbs.

Both the sides also discussed the transit trade that is being done through India from Chittagong port for both export and import of land-locked Nepal. The railwaywagons that carry goods upto Bangladesh border point Birol can carry back boulders on return way in order to make the transport cost cheaper, it was suggested.

MERGER OF COOPS, RURAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM PLANNED

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 17 Jul 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The Government is going to set up a single new organisation--Bangladesh Rural Development Board--merging the existing traditional cooperatives and the Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP).

The decision is being taken to bring uniformity removing confusion and conflict in the co-operative-based development activities.

The Rural Development and Cooperatives Division of the Ministry of LGRD has proposed the new i lea to integrate the two parallel systems with a view to strengthen the overall credid structure.

The proposed organisation, which is expected to get Cabinet approval soon, will perform the promotional and developmental function while the registrar of cooperative societies will look after the regulatory function of the cooperative societies.

After getting Cabinet approval, the IRDP, Thana Central Cooperative Associations, Krishak Sambaya Samity (KSS) and Bangladesh Samabaya Bank Limited (BSBL), Central Cooperative Bank (CCB), Union Cooperative Multi-purpose Societies (UCMPS) will be brought under the new structure.

The status of IRDP is not yet defined although this has been expended in 330 thanas of the country. The remaining 96 thanas will be brought during the remaining period of Second Five Year Plan. The progress of the registration of the cooperative societies including those set up under IRDP shows that upto June 30, 1981, 104472 primary societies, 764 central societies and 13 apex societies at the national level were registered.

The reorganised credit structure also will have four tiers instead of existing three tiers.

In the proposed structure, primary societies will operate at the base of the village level, TCCA banks at the thana level, which will be assigned as the sole cooperative financing agency in a thana; central cooperative which will function exclusively as the federatio of TCCA banks; all primary societies affiliated to CCBs at present whcih is now transfered to the TCCA banks and the Bangladesh Samabaya Bank Limited will operate at the national level.

The standing decision of the Government to establish a cooperative bank in each thana of the country by redesignating the existing TCCAs as thana cooperative association and bank will also remain in force, it is learnt.

Proposal for delinking the IRDP TCCAs from Sonali Bank and linking them with the Bangladesh Samabaya Bank Limited is also under Government consideration. The inter agency meeting earlier reached consensus that the outstanding loans of the TCCAs with Somali Bank will be repaid in lump sum. On the other hand, Bangladesh Bank will provide refinancing facilities to Bangladesh Sambaya Bank Limited to enable TCCAs to square up their loan accounts with Sonali Bank. Bangladesh Bank will provide two types of refinancing facilities in respect of overdue and non-overdue loans.

In relation with this new proposal a new interest rate structure for the co-operative credit is now awaiting Government approval. Ministry of Finance is examining the new interest rate seperately proposed by Bangladesh Bank, Rural Development and Co-operatives Division of the Ministry of LGRD and the Finance and Investment wing.

JAPAN TO INCREASE ECONOMIC AID TO BANGLADESH

[Text] Japan is expected to increase its quantum of economic assistance to Bangladesh by 10 per cent in the current financial year according to diplomatic sources in Dacca on Wednesday reports ENA.

Japan extended an economic assistance to Bangladesh to the tune of 210 million U.S. dollars covering both loans and grants for the year 1981-82:

The sources said that Japan had already indicated its increased loan and hoped that the grant was also likely to be increased.

They described Japan-Bangladesh relation as good and economic ties between the two countries would further develop.

The sources further expressed satisfaction over Government measures to improve the economy of the country and felt that the Government move to "decontrol" industries would be beneficial to the growth of economy.

They however believe that some more measures should be taken to encourate foreign investment in Bangladesh.

It may be recalled that Japan provides economic and technical assistance to Bangladesh particularly in the fields of agriculture and Petrochemicals.

IMF AID TO BANGLADESH REDUCED BY 580 MILLION SDR

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 21 Jul 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] International Monetary Fund (IMF) will not give to Bangladesh 580 million SDR out of 800 million SDR it had committed to Dacca in December 1980.

This was indicated by Planning and Finance Mnister A.M.A. Muhith while talking to members of Overseas Correspondents' Association, Bangladesh in Dacca yesterday. He said, the IMF fund was meant for financing Bangladesh balance of payment deficit for a period of three months. He said, the limited purpose assistance did not operate any longer.

The IMF had approved on December 8, 1980 a total of 800 million SDR for Bangladesh of which 319.30 million SDR was under the extended fund facility. The remaining 480.70 million S D R was for supplementary financing facility.

Under the agreement Bangladesh received 220 million SDR in three instalments. The remaining 580 million SDR was not received by Bangladesh despite several reminders. The Government in the meantime had implemented some of the suggestions made by the IMF as part of its package deal for receiving 560 million SDR.

Minister Muhith, however, brushed aside a broad suggestion made by a newsman that World Bank, IMF and donor countries had influenced the present budget and said, "even without World Bank and IMF I would have presented the same budget."

Mr. Muhith said that the budget provided incentive for investment and equalised benefits for investment for public and private sectors. It also aimed at bringing financial and monetary discipline in public sector, he added.

The Minister expreseed his optimism that there would be substantial growth in agriculture sector during the period resulting in availability of goods. He pointed out that highest ever allocation has been for the agriculture sector in the current budget and expected growth rate in the sector could be achieved, he said.

He said these will result in the upturned in the economy around November this year and greater availability in agricultural goods and manufactures. This trend is expected to reach peak by March next year when the entire nation would benefit from the budgetary measures.

Mr Muhith said that during mansoon there will be rural infrstructural work and food for work programme to generate income in the villages.

The Minister said that the budget estimate had been made keeping, in view the level of disbursement of foreign assistance. He said we have taken a very hard look at the disbursement level and excluded the uncertain commitments. He pointed out that the estimated foreign assistance of 1,305 million dollars for the current fiscal year was work out on the basis of aid in pipeline and also commitment which are fairly certain.

FORMER FINANCE MINISTER CONVICTED OF CORRUPTION

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 18 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Special Martial Law Tribunal No. 2 on Saturday convicted former Finance Minister M. Saifur Rahman in one or the three charges of the corruption case against him and sentenced him to suffer imprisonment till the rising of the court, reports BSS.

The five-member tribunal headed by Colonel A. B. M Elias also ordered the former Minister to pay a fine of Taka 2 lakh in default, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two years.

The tribunal did not find Mr. Rahman guilty of the first and second charges in the case involving a total amount of Taka 28.93 lakh. The first charge relates to exemption of stamp duty to the tune of Taka 22.99 lakh to Gulbarg Cooperative Housing Society. The second charge relates to recommending and obtaining a loan of Taka 5 lakh from the Pubali Bank for Hotel Anurag of Sylhet.

In its unanimous judgement the tribunal observed: "After a careful consideration of the evidence, facts and circumstances on record, the tribunal is of the view that the prosecution has failed to prove the first and second counts against the accused".

But the third count (charge) on misuse of transport, has been proved against the accused former Minister beyond any shadow of doubt. The tribunal therefore, found Mr. Rahman guilty on the third count under Regulation 11 of MRL 1 of 1982 and sentenced him to suffer imprisonment till the rising of the court and to pay a fine of Taka two lakh, in default to suffer RI for two years.

The third charge brought by the prosecution against the accused was that the family members of the former Minister used one additional transport of the Jiban Bima Corporation and then of the Janata Bank over and above the official transport given by the government. Through use of the transport illegally and abusing his official position, the accused had caused financial lose of Tk. 1.93 lakh to the two organisations concerned as cost of fuel, maintenance and drivers' salary.

The tribunal during its eight-day hearing of the case examined 25 prosecution witnesses. Some of the witnesses were cross-examined by difence lawyers. The defence produced no witnesses.

The prosecution case was conducted by Special Public Prosecutor Mr. Ashrafuddin Ahmed. He was assisted by Assistant Special Public Prosecutor A.S.M Obaidur Huq.

The accused was defended by a team of lawyers including Mr. Abdul Malek, Senior Advocate, Mr. Jamiruddin Ahmed and Mr. K. Z. Alam.

ABRAMORITZ AMBASSADORIAL NOMINATION REJECTED

Post Remains Vacant

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 24 May 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] The candidacy of Morton Abramovitz as the next American ambassador to replace envoy Edward Masters is considered a closed matter and Indonesia presently is awaiting the nomination of a new ambassadorial candidate.

Foreign Mochtar Kusumaatmadja, after a meeting with President Soeharto at the executive offices where he accompanied various Indonesian ambassadors from Africa, the Middle East and America last Saturday, declared that he had met with U.S. Charge d'Affaires John Monjo the previous evening and that the American envoy had advised him orally that the nomination of Morton Abramovitz as U.S. ambassador to Jakarta had been withdrawn.

Foreign Minister Mochtar drew the conclusion that the United States had withdrawn the ambassadorial nomination of Abramovitz before Indonesia itself could respond whether it agreed to the proposal or not.

The U.S. State Department, through its spokesman Dean Fischer, last Thursday announced that Indonesia would not accept Morton Abramovitz as the new American ambassador to Jakarta.

According to diplomatic sources in Jakarta, there is a strong possibility that Morton Abramovitz, an expert on China and former American ambassador to Thailand, who was to replace U.S. envoy Edward Masters in Jakarta, was rejected by Indonesia because of his Jewish background. Indonesia, as is known, has a society the majority of which is Islamic, and is firmly anti-Jewish.

The last U.S. envoy, Ambassador Edward Masters, departed Jakarta several months ago. In the meantime, the U.S. Embassy in Indonesia has been headed by Charge d'Affaires a. i. John Monjo.

Foreign Minister Mochtar Kusumaatmadja, in his meeting with the press, also declared that the United States had already given its agreement to the nomination of LTG Hasnan Habib, the present ambassador to Thailand, to become Jakarta's new envoy to Washington. LTG Hasnan Habib will replace Ambassador D. Ashari who has completed his tour of duty to the United States.

Domestic Political Considerations

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesia 25 May 82 p 7

[Text] Filling the U.S. ambassador vacancy in Jakarta has been a problem since the departure of the last American envoy, Edward E. Masters. The Reagan Administration has submitted the name of Morton Abramovitz as its new ambassador. Indonesia, however, has not yet given its approval to Washington's candidate.

Certain political pundits are saying that Indonesia has refused to accept Abramovitz. However, the matter was never publicized or even raised by the Foreign Ministry. And now, the U.S. State Department in a news report has announced that it was that agency which withdrew Abramovitz's nomination as ambassador because his candidacy had not been acted upon by Indonesia.

This is rather strange. The United States is a government that has a strong influence on the New Order. However, the fact that its ambassadorial post in Jakarta has remained vacant for over a year arouses suspicions that there is something which is troubling bilateral relations between the two countries. This suspicion has raised questions in political and diplomatic circles and among observers of the Indonesian political scene.

A little while ago, there was an incident which nearly gave credence to the suspicion that something was troubling Indonesian American relations. At the beginning of May, it was announced that Gen. Jusuf, the minister of defense and security, was to fly to the United States. Instead, according to accounts, he only went as far as Tokyo where he remained for 3 days and then returned to Jakarta. Western European sources stated that the Jusuf trip to America had not been confirmed, or in other words, had been refused by the United States. This was denied by American sources in Jakarta. According to the U.S. sources, Jusuf was awaited in the United States but never arrived. Whether this story is true or not, only the concerned parties can say for certain. However, at least it gives a certain indication of the state of relations between Indonesia and the U.S.

Jakarta's refusal of Morton Abramovitz, besides demonstrating Indonesian firmness in upholding its sovereignty, also reflects its careful attention to the selection of ambassadorial candidates accredited to Indonesia from large countries. Domestic political considerations, as well as the country's interests on an international level, compel the Indonesian government to sharpen its sense of discretion.

Morton Abramovitz, of course, is an American career diplomat of great talent and capability. However, as in the case of American diplomat Marshall Green, Abramovitz always provokes popular suspicion. During his tour of duty as American ambassador to Thailand, he played a not insignificant role in influencing the development of that country. Indeed, he was alluded to waggishly as the unofficial administrator of Thailand.

As an American of Eastern European descent, Abramovitz has strong anti-Russian sentiments. He is considered one of the factors that caused Thai foreign policy to tilt towards Beijing. He also influenced American policy towards Indochina and the development of Thai antagonism toward Vietnam. In addition, it is possible that domestic development in Thailand in recent years, to include a military coup and a student revolt, were not free of involvement by Mr. Abramovitz.

Normally, American diplomats like Mr Abramovitz arouse certain fears among the governments to which they are accredited. The Indonesian government is no exception. The government decision to reject the Abramovitz candidacy, besides being appropriate, was also a very purposeful act in preserving an Indonesian foreign policy that is free and active. Professional meddlers in a country's domestic affairs, such as Morton Abramovitz, must be rejected so that they do not pose problems for us.

It is obvious that the ambassadorial candidate to replace Abramovitz also must be scrutinized conscientiously. He must not be a person as equally suspect as Abramovitz, but should be an ambassador of high repute who should not only defend his country's interests in Indonesia, but should also refrain from taking advantage of his position to meddle in our domestic affairs.

Habib Denies Rejection

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 26 May 82 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts] The Indonesian ambassador to Thailand, LTG Hasnan Habib, who shortly will be appointed as Jakarta's envoy to the United States, today denied firmly that he was behind the Indonesian refusal to accept the seasoned American diplomat, Morton Abramovitz, as the U.S. ambassador to Jakarta.

General Hasnan Habib, in a statement read by an Indonesian embassy spokesman in Bangkok, said: "I could scarcely believe my ears when I heard the news from Jakarta alleging that I had been the one to make an unfavorable report concerning Morton Abramovitz."

Hasnan Habib was well acquainted with the American diplomat while the latter was U.S. ambassador to Thailand.

An Indonesian government spokesman said that Ambassador Hasnan Habib returned to Indonesia from May 9-16 to attend a meeting of Indonesian chiefs of mission in Jakarta. Hasnan Habib himself declined further comment on the subject.

POSSIBILITY OF ASEAN MILITARY COOPERATION DISCUSSED

Hanoi's Aggressive Posture

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 18 May 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] Foreign Minister Mochtar Kusumaatmadja declared that there was a possibility of military cooperation among the ASEAN countries if Vietnam declined to step back from its aggressive posture that posed a threat to the sovereignty of these countries. The minister said that if Hanoi, on the contrary, mended its ways and directed its attention to its economic problems, then ASEAN would continue to stress its cooperation in that sector.

The above matter was brought up by the minister as he responded to questions Monday evening at Semarang during a press conference concerning ASEAN political activities in response to the Kampuchean crisis.

According to the minister, for the time being ASEAN would continue to give priority to economic activities. "Political activities are only a contingency because of Vietnamese aggression in Kampuchea. If ASEAN were to remain insouciant in the face of Hanoi's bellicosity, it would be considered powerless. Besides, it has become one of our principles to oppose each act of aggression. If cooperation in the political sphere leads to military cooperation as a consequence, it will depend on the future behavior of Vietnam," said the minister.

He declared that Indochina would be a prominent problem for ASEAN throughout the 1980's. "If Vietnam wants to change its aggressive posture, ASEAN efforts to raise the living standards of its own people could be extended to the countries of Indochina, without their being obliged to join ASEAN.

According to the minister, ASEAN efforts to come to grips with the problem of Kampuchea have been relatively successful. Vietnam recognizes that these efforts are supported actively by other nations, or at least have the acquiescence of the non-communist bloc.

On this subject, FM Mochtar further said that "No, it is simply not true to state that our (ASEAN) foreign policy with respect to Kampuchea has not been successful. It is obvious that we can mobilize world opinion to withhold its approbation of Vietnam's actions. But if Vietnam mends its ways, it will be the recipient of the UN's good offices and there is even talk that it could join ASEAN. Of course, we'll have to see about that first and make sure Vietnam's desire in that respect is not just a pretense, but rather in indication of a reformed attitude."

The foreign minister was in Semarang to give a lecture on Indonesia's foreign policy at a symposium on "ASEAN Perspectives for the 1980's." The symposium was organized jointly by Diponegoro University, the regional government of Central Java and the Secretariat of ASEAN.

Foreign Minister Mochtar said that his appearance outside the capital in various provinces to give lectures on foreign policy was to arouse public consciousness on the subject. It is an activity that the minister has pursued already at several universities and that he will continue at various other institutions of higher learning. "The formulation of foreign policy must take domestic views into account. And when you're in the capital, whatever views you hear on the subject from the provinces are bound to be pretty vague. So, you just have to go out and listen to things for yourself," said the minister.

Mochtar Denies Defense Pact

[Excerpts] Foreign Minister Mochtar Kusumaatmadja declared firmly that bilateral military cooperation among ASEAN countries simply was a function of those nations' right to provide for their self-defense.

"Let me stress that this military cooperation in no way will lead to a defense pact, because what we want to do is return to ASEAN's true objective as an economic association of nations," said the minister to the press yesterday at the Foreign Ministry in Pejambon.

Bilateral military cooperation among various ASEAN countries began several years ago. For example, there have been exercises between the Indonesian and Royal Thai Air Forces, or between Indonesia and Malaysia where the venue for such exercises has switched successively to each nation's territory.

In his appearance before the media, FM Mochtar denied a news account by a Jakarta daily which reported that he had hinted at the possibility of military cooperation among ASEAN countries if Vietnam maintained an aggressive posture that threatened the sovereignty of the members of the five-nation grouping.

The daily KOMPAS on Tuesday reported that FM Mochtar Kusumaatmadja had hinted at the possibility of military cooperation among ASEAN members if Vietnam displayed no intention of abandoning its aggressive posture which endangered the sovereignty of ASEAN's member nations.

SIHANOUK KIN HAILS POL POT, OMITS MENTION OF SON SANN

Gentilly KAMPUCHEA in Cambodian 21-27 Jun 82 pp 8-9

[Text] After the people, the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and our national army liberated our motherland from the grasp of foreigners in 1975, we went to make merit for the nation at Preah Keo Monastery of the Royal Palace. We also went to visit Angkor Wat as well as the national museum in Phnom Penh. We, therefore, do not hesitate to firmly state that our fraternal combatant of Kampuchea did preserve our ancient cultural heritage such as scupltures and other properties with great efforts sparing no energy day and night.

It is generally known that under the deceitfully propagandistic slogan: "Collective struggle against colonialism" of Indochinese parties, the Vietnamese strategic goal is to dominate the three Indochinese countries: Kampuchea, Laos and Vietnam. During the period of anti-imperialism and struggle, the Soviet-Vietnamese hegemonists practiced a most criminal policy aimed at crushing the national liberation movements with Democratic Kampuchea as the vanguard and fundamental force so that its party can place its neo-colonial yoke on Kampuchea in place of the U.S.

Later on, under their insane flag of "internationalism-socialism," Hanoi's over-aggression against Kampuchea at the beginning of 1979 suppressed Kampuchean independence and sovereignty, pillaging and plundering to the utmost Kampuchean national resources and materials. As witnessed through television on 22 April 1982: fish in our Tonle Sap are caught by Vietnamese soldiers.

The most significant factor of all which led the Vietnamese to hate Democratic Kampuchea was [Vietnam's] expansionism and Democratic Kampuchea's policy of National independence and sovereignty.

From 1975-1979, Kampuchea saw economic and cultural growth particularly in the field of agricultural production. Every Kampuchean citizen knew very well that the Vietnamese were very fearful if Kampuchea were to evolve toward splendid progress in national construction in all fields. This is especially necessary for spreading influence and positive factors on other nationals, particularly among the Kampuchea kraom in Vietnam who were [are] being suppressed and crushed by Hanoi authorites and who are now struggling for their rights and liberty. Furthermore, for fear that it might have an impact on their scheme of expansionism, the Soviets and Vietnamese followed a policy of division aimed at preventing the people of Indochina and Southeast Asia from uniting in peace based on the principles of mutual respect of each other's independence.

His Excellency Pol Pot, commander in chief of the national army of Kampuchea said very clearly that Kampuchea possesses enough lands, sea waters and forests. She does not want lands from any other country. By its invasion of Kampuchea, and crushing the economy and starving the people, Vietnam follows aggressive policy violating the Lao people and provoking the invasion of Thai people. Vietnam did this without knowing that the people of the four countries would have common interests and would cooperate closely. Along with this, the Vietnamese clique's policy hurts them in ways in which there is no solution. On the economic and financial crisis of Soviet Union and Vietnam, Minister Thiounn Mumm denounced the Soviet Union for using scientific and technological force to kill weaker countries and people of the world.

The Kampuchean question can be resolved on the basis of the three-point accord as a result of conversations between Prince Norodom Sihanouk and H. E. Khieu Samphan, a political principle which addresses the interests of all strata and classes of our people.

Prince Sihanouk and H. E. Khieu Samphan for a long time used to fight against the great power aggressors. We, therefore, wish these two patriotic heroes a firm and long lasting tie and hope that this tie which transcends politics will become a family bond.

COLUMNIST CRITICIZES U.S. CHEMICAL WARFARE STAND

Phnom Penh KAMPUCHEA in Cambodian 22 Apr 82 p 11

[Article by Khieu Kannarith: "Why Does the U.S. Continue to Fabricate the Question of 'Toxic Chemical'?"]

[Text] Currently, everyone is very surprised at the great efforts by the U.S. in making glamorous noise about what they call "toxic chemicals use in Kampuchea and Afghanistan." And recently, the chief cheaters in American diplomatic suits have submitted a report to the U.S. Congress to dramatize their tasteless novels. Consequently, world public opinion wonders why the U.S. tries its best to prop up that act on stage?

Hitler's fascists always taught each other that "any lie, when told many times to the public, would be perviewed as true." For this reason the U.S. merely recites its original teacher's lessons. But it clearly cannot deceive international public opinion. Taking contemporary history into account, one sees that only the imperialists use toxic chemicals in a large scale during World War I (1914-1918) by Germany victimized 1,300,000 people in which more than one hundred thousand people were horribly killed. Author Maria Remarque, in a book entitled "Nothing New In the West" ["All Quiet on the Western Front"] wrote: "I saw the shocking scene of victims who coughed with collapsed lungs burnt as a result of toxic gas...." At that time mankind resisted very strongly the use of chemical weapons and in 1925, many nations agreed on a protocol in Geneva banning the use of toxic gas or killing with other biological weapons. At that time, the U.S. refused to sign the protocol (the U.S. only signed it in 1975 after its defeat in Vietnam and after it sprayed millions of liters of toxic chemical agents in Indochina).

At the end of World War II, in contrast to the Soviet Army which took steps to destroy Hitler's lethal weapons arsonals, the U.S. transported from Germany to the U.S. more than 100,000 rounds of chemical munitions in order to continue their research and use. Great Britain used for the first time their chemical weapons after World War II in its fighting in Malaysia. In the Korean War, the U.S. began using its chemical weapons, and in between 1967-69, the U.S. sprayed toxins called "Agent Orange" over the demilitarized zone in Korea. In the war on the Indochinese peninsula, the U.S. destroyed millions of hectares of land with toxic agents in Vietnam victimizing more than 2 million Vietnamese. Its side-effects spread to the next generation with grave consequences (babies were born without eyes, without limbs, with two heads or even without heads). This does not take into account the American troops themselves who also fell victims and now are demanding that the U.S. Government pay damages. In 1980, the U.S. refused to consider a Soviet proposal to strictly ban the use of chemical weapons and it was the only country out of 157 members of the United Nations to vote against the General Assembly's resolution calling on all countries to stop producing and deploying new chemical weapons and to prevent the spread of that kind of weapons to states which do not now possess such weapons.

But why is the U.S. more nervous than other nations?

Nobody should have any doubts about U.S. intentions on this point. In every charge made by the U.S., we do not see a single phrase or sentence that the U.S. is demanding a halt in the use of chemical weapons. Instead we see that the U.S. is requesting a bigger budget to begin production of toxic chemical weapons. This is a preparation for war and not a wish for peace at all because one cannot strengthen peace by preparation for war.

This is, in fact, a deceitful campaign of the Reagan administration to legalize the production of toxic chemical weapons for the Washington war mongers. With this strategy the U.S. Congress approved $20 million in 1981 to build a special plant to produce cruelly homocidal weapons at Painblow in the state of Arkansas and earmarked a budget of $705 million for a chemical weapon program in 1983 and $4 billion for 1984 for the research and production of new chemical weapons in addition to 90 types of chemical weapons and 3 million chemical boms on hand. Those war-mongers are very pleased with this progress because they consider these weapons "quiet" in killing human beings without destroying or damaging materials (for those who would be killed would not be worried about the destruction of property) and at the same time the cost is low (a liter of toxic gas called Sarin can kill 1 million people and it costs only $5.

American imperialists must be clear on one question: in this era it can no longer produce rains and thunder. Last year, the U.S. sent a team of experts to gather and collect evidence in Thailand. This year it pushed the United Nations to send another team of experts. And a group of experts which just arrived in Beijing got a very warm reception. The Chinese were quick to show that they welcomed and supported the Americans' deceitful scheme. As pointed out in the communique of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea: the Kampuchean people, like any other peace-loving people throughout the world, absolutely condemn the production of this mass killing weapon. And the TASS declaration of 19 February also shed some light on these war-mongering cliques so it is understood clearly that it does not matter whether it is a nuclear, neutraon, chemical or any other weapon which the aggressors use to make a war; they cannot escape severe condemnation.

AGRICULTURAL SUPPORT INFRASTRUCTURE, 1982 PLANS NOTED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 3 Jun 82 pp 2, 3

[Article by Sinpangna: Pride in the Fruitful Outcome of 1981 Agricultural Production- Forestry and Irrigation]

[Excerpts] The transformation and economic and social construction in the new phase of our country's revolution is the construction of economic bases, independence, and socialism having agriculture and forest industry as its foundation. Expansion of this base aims at responding to material and spiritual needs of the people of all races, to steadily raise a solid foundation for the protection of our socialist country.

[In 1981] we were able to rejuvenate and expand 14,000 hectares of cultivating area. Intensive agriculture has steadily expanded. The value of last year's agricultural produce amounted to 4.9 billion kip, which is 1.8 times that of 1977. Food supply production was 1,189,150 tons, which includes over 1,154,000 tons of rice. This amounts to 350 kg of paddy rice per person on the average. Industrial production has increased each year. For example, there was a 13.26 percent increase in coffee, 18.25 percent increase in soy beans, 292 percent increase in cotton, 9.09 percent increase in peanuts, and 14.56 percent increase in tobacco. Meanwhile, there have been many achievements in the material and technical base construction for animal husbandry, primarily the Tha Ngon concentrated animal food factory that has highly efficient production. The factory for producing vaccines for preventing animal diseases has been able to produce 5,000,000 doses per year. The chicken-raising station in Dong Dok was improved and expanded. The Nong Teng fish-raising station has been able to produce millions of baby fish per year [as published]. Fish-raising in Houa Phan, Luang Prabang, Xieng Khouang, Savannakhet, and Campassak Provinces has also been revived and expanded. A veterinary network has been set up in all provinces all over the country. Veterinary cadres are being trained regularly. Preventives and antidotes for diseases and epidemic diseases in animals are always available whenever they are needed. This is the reason for the large decrease in animal deaths caused by epidemic diseases, and for the increase in the people's domestic animals each year. There are 880,600 buffalos, which is a 3 percent increase as compared with 1980; 461,500 oxen, a 3 percent increase; 170,400 pigs, a 5.3 percent increase, 49,700 goats and sheep, a 3.5 percent increase, and 5.5 million poultry, a 21.00 percent increase.

One step was made in the expansion of forestry. There is a state enterprise organization for removing state trees, which amounts to 500,000 cubic meters per year on the average. A total of 695,000 hectares of forest has already been surveyed, and a further 75,000 hectares is expected to be surveyed in 1982.

Irrigation is a primary area whose purpose is to help in making decisions concerning other types of work involving forestry and agricultural production. In 1981, irrigation was carried out very well according to the policy set by the party and government, primarily the people's small irrigation ditches.

Meanwhile, the irrigation service works together with the people to build medium-size irrigation ditches in many places, as well as setting up water pumps. The study, survey, and collection of data for planning and building has received a great deal of attention and has served the construction work very well. This has resulted in 120,000 hectares' receiving sufficient irrigation covering up to 26 percent of the rice cultivating area all over the country.

Nowadays, many co-op units are able to produce well. The average income is 500-700 kg of paddy rice per co-op member. In some special co-op units this figure can be as high as 1000 kg per person.

Although the conversion to agricultural co-ops is a brand new problem, and has been confronted with many difficulties, there was much success in converting farmers to the first state of collective socialist mass production. At the present time 442,000 people have joined co-ops. The total amounts to 63,254 families.

The year 1982 is the second year for carrying out the first Five-Year Plan for economic and social expansion. The Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Irrigation has set its policy towards the collective duty of the 1982 plan and the years following. For example, they are set to determinedly and physically carry out the achievements of the 1982 set figures for rice production, which is 1,183,500 tons, or 340 kg per person on the average for the year.

Wood removal should be able to reach 150,000-200,000 cubic meters, and cultivating areas that receive irrigation should be increased to 135,000 hectares. Our aim is to improve the settlements, make good use of the agricultural settlements and agricultural co-ops that have already been set up, and study and set up more agricultural settlements and agricultural co-ops in place where conditions are suitable.

'ENEMY' MACHINATIONS SAID TO LIMIT CIRCULATION OF COINS, SPUR INFLATION

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 29 May 82 p 2

[Column: Conversations with the Editor]

[Excerpts] After I graduated from abroad almost a year ago, I have not yet found any of the bank's att coins, even though I am a Lao and use Lao money.

Why does the government disbursing not use this kind of money as an example to lead people so they will use it? State goods in each shop have decimal points for the att coins at the end. I think [the att coins] will be valuable whenever they are brought out to be used. It was said they could not be produced on time, but why aren't they ready by now? Can't they still be made in time, or is it because the government does not want to use them?

If the government does not want to use them, why do they set the prices on the machines with fractions (with the att coins at the end)?

Banks have a sufficient amount of the att coins for circulation and have already been doing that extensively. A great number of us have received the coins and used them widely. Nowadays, however, from my observation I see that many people do not like to use this type of money. Why? I think it depends on what they think. These ideas are based on different reasons, the primary reason being that they have never used them before, and they are too lazy to be bothered with them (they don't want to bother with such small change). Besides, this is a problem with enemies who create confusion in our economy. They have been using all means to sabotage our economy and our monetary system, and to create inflation, raise the prices of goods, etc.

These are only some of the things I want to point out to you. They are not caused by us, but instead they arise from the situation created by enemies who want to create confusion in the monetary system and economy, as we all know.

Thank you.

ORGANIZATION, ROLE OF VIENTIANE FOODSTUFFS CORPORATION REPORTED

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 29 May 82 p 2

[News Column by S. Chanthavong]

[Excerpt] I interviewed Mr Khamphouk Phommavongsak, assistant chief responsible for the foodstuffs corporation. He is very happy that we continually follow the actual work of his corporation. He agreed to tell us the details of the work and their 1981 achievements. The foodstuffs corporation is subordinate to Vientiane Capital. Its workers serve in distributing foodstuffs to cadres, government employees, and workers, including the people in Vientiane Capital.

There are 266 workers in the corporation, 202 men and 64 women. There are 5 divisions, the central administrative office; vehicles and oil control; the central accounting and budgeting office; statistics, planning and prices; and purchase and exchange. There are three big factories under the foodstuffs corporation: the bread and other sweets factory, the fish sauce and fermented fish factory, and the slaughter house and meat and fish distribution center. There are four vegetable and fruit distribution branches which are directly under the foodstuffs corporation. They are the vegetable and fruit distribution branches 1, 2, 3, and 4. In the foodstuffs corporation we take part in the expansion of three mass organizations, for [words omitted], youth, and women. Among the 107 outstanding people in 1981 who received complimentary certificates from the government there were 84 men and 25 women. On the provincial level, those who received the complimentary certificates included 106 people, 71 men and 35 women. There are 78 people of service level who received complimentary certificates, 48 men and 30 women.

Work and Policy for Cadres and Workers within the Corporation.

For marriage and birth policy, etc. in the past year, our corporation has expanded purchasing in many places and also in other provinces, for example, all over Vientiane City and Province. There are two places for buying fish, Tha Lat and Nam Xouang reservoir. Purchases are also made in Attopeu and Saravane Provinces. In these provinces our organization purchases produce and chicken eggs from organizations and the masses, and encourages cadres' families who do not work to engage in agriculture and animal raising in order to be self-sufficient. It also encourages the conversion of the youth organization of Sikhottabong District to buy produce for selling to cadres, especially in the market, in order to ensure food supplies. In order to serve the people our foodstuffs corporation has set up five locations: the Sikai market, That Louang, Nong Douang, the morning market, and the Suan Non market. The actual results of the work have been calculated and show that 153,975 tons of bread was produced which is 51.32 percent, 41,366 tons of sweets or 68.95 percent, 808,598 tons of fermented fish, 741,611 liters of vinegar, and 7595.35 liters of fish sauce. Last year, 403 buffalo, 675 oxen, 422 pigs, and 15 goats were slaughtered and consumed with Vientiane Capital, and 691,900 buffalos, 144,700 oxen, and 23,615 pigs were slaughtered by the private sector to supply the markets.

Purchase and exchange involved 761.15 kg of chickens, 288.044 chicken eggs, 16,484 duck eggs, 500 preserved eggs, 15,436 kg of all kinds of vegetables, [42,233,450] kg of all kinds of fish, 198 kg of pickled fish, 3829 kg of [tiny white fish], 55 kg of dried fish, 162, 760 tons of all kinds of meat, 110,171 bags of sweets, 43,677 sandwiches, 1,269,940 bags of candies, and 549,050 loaves of bread. Fermented fish exceeded the plan by 124 percent, 59 percent of the plan was met for vinegar, 33.14 percent for fish sauce, 1.37 percent for meat, and fish exceeded the set plan by 1 percent.

After carrying out the actual work we set our plan to be consistent with the advisory of the party and provincial administrative committee of Vientiane Capital which was issued only for a future plan, as well as for the direction of the first Five-Year Plan from 1981-1982. Our corporation will increase other kinds of food distribution and increase the purchasing of other produce from various regions in order to serve cadres, government employees, workers, and people of all races all over Vientiane Capital. The reason for this is to respond to the needs of consumers and to steadily raise the standard of living of the people.

CHAMPASSAK CULTIVATION STATISTICS--The total rice growing area in Champassak Province is 84,300 hectares, with 4 people per hectare on the average. The biggest rice growing area is in Khong District, which has 17,670 hectares; Phontong District has 15,800 hectares, Sanasomboun District has 13,040 hectares, and Champassak District has 10,260 hectares. Mr Thongin, chairman of the provincial administrative committee of Champassak Province, confirmed that in the past few years the people in Champassak have succeeded in good harvesting resulting in a figure of 414 kg of rice per person in 1 year. The outstanding issue is production using intensive agriculture. This way, our farmers are able to apply valuable scientific technology in production. For example, in 1981 production Champassak Province farmers used 13,140 kg of seed rice and 296 tons of chemical fertilizer in their rice fields. Moreover, they made extensive use of manure and other technology. [Excerpts] [Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 10 Jun 82 p 2] 9884

AFGHAN REFUGEE CAMP SUBVERSIVES--Peshawar, 4 Aug (special correspondent)--Due to the vigilance of the law enforcement officials, an attempt at subversion in the Afghan refugee camps was foiled and two members of a terrorist organization were apprehended. The arrested persons had entered Pakistan illegally after receiving terrorist training in Kabul. The accused are named Mohammed Ali and Kadim Ali and they originally belonged to Kurram agency in Pakistan. They were sent before a local magistrate and after their statements were recorded they were given over to the police custody. Both have recorded confessions saying that they had gone to Kabul sometime back on business. In Kabul they had met a ranking personage who, after taking them into his confidence, suggested that if they agreed to carry out subversive activities within the Afghan refugee camps in Pakistan, they would be richly rewarded. They received 3,000 rupees as initial payment and entered Pakistan to carry out their designs. [Text] [GF112022 Karachi MASHRIQ in Urdu 5 Aug 82 pp 1, 6]

KHMER IRREDENTISM NOTED, COALITION EFFORT SAID TO HURT THAI INTERESTS

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 19 Jul 82 pp 29-31

[Article: "Behind Democratic Kampuchea"]

[Text] Concerning the official formation of a coalition government by the leaders of the three Khmer factions on 22 June at Kuala Lumpur, this is considered to be another attempt by the three Khmer factions and Asean to oppose Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea.

By forming a coalition, the three Khmer groups are in the situation of a government without a country to govern. Prince Norodom Sihanouk is the president of Democratic Kampuchea. Khieu Samphan is serving as vice president for foreign affairs. And Son Sann is the prime minister in this government without a country. The government is composed of a minister of finance and economics, a minister of defense, a minister of culture and education, and a minister of public health and social affairs.

Why Did They Join Together?

Concerning the three Khmer factions uniting in a form that all three factions once rejected, the FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW stated that is seems that this is the only way for those countries that are trying to find a way to support the struggle to force the Vietnamese troops out of Kampuchea. But the various countries that support the coalition of the three Khmer factions did not consider whether these Khmer groups were ready to join together. Besides this, a readiness to join together is not enough. There must be sincerity if the goals are to be reached.

Considering the past, it can be seen that both Prince Sihanouk and Son Sann are non-communist leaders while Khieu Samphan, a Khmer Rouge leader, is a Chinese-faction communist. These people were once enemies. And the [Khmer Rouge] used force to drive the others out and controlled Kampuchea from 1975 to 1979.

Thus, concerning the agreement signed in Kuala Lumpur, what this amounts to is that the three groups are pretending to forget their differences and conflicts and uniting in order to oppose Vietnam, which is the common enemy. At the same time, the various differences of the past have just been hidden admidst this show of unity.

Besides the fact that they united in order to oppose their common enemy, the thing that influenced the three groups to unite quickly is exactly as Son Sann said during a recent interview with the mass media:

"We were forced to unite."

The question that arises from this statement by Son Sann is: Who forced the three Khmer groups to unite? It can certainly be no one else but China and Asean, with the United States providing support from a distance. They were trying to pressure the three Khmer factions to unite. After trying for 9 months, during the past several months, Asean, especially Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore, made a great effort. These three countries will provide financial help and food.

In addition to the Asean countries, it is thought that China had great influence in the formation of this coalition. The FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW reported that Mr Huang Hua, the Chinese minister of foreign affairs, recently assured Prince Sihanouk that if the Khmer groups joined together, Peking would provide support. And this s pport from Peking could mean nothing except weapons. At present, Peking has sent at least one shipment of weapons to Son Sann. As for Asean, it has said that it will definitely not provide the Khmer coalition with weapons even though it is weapons that the Khmer coalition needs the most. But, Asean has not denied that weapons from China have been sent to the Khmer groups through Asean. Thus, China is the only country that has constantly and openly provided weapons to the Khmer groups.

How Secure Is the Coalition?

Of the three Khmer groups that have joined together, the Khmer Rouge is considered to be the strongest group. That is, under the leadership of Khieu Samphan, it has approximately 20,000 to 30,000 men and good weapons. It also receives strong support from China. The next most powerful force is the Khmer Seri force of Son Sann, who has about 6,000 to 8,000 men. The Mulinaka faction of Prince Sinhanouk has about 5,000 men. But a diplomatic news source has estimated that it has only about 3,000 men.

From this coalition, it can be seen that the Khmer Rouge is at the greatest disadvantage. It has the greatest number of troops and so it should play the greatest role. But its position [in the coalition] is equal to that of factions whose forces are smaller, that is, the Sihanouk and Son Sann factions. Because of this, this tripartite coalition is probably not very secure. Nevertheless, they have joined together even though nothing favored this. The fact that the Khmer Rouge had to join the coalition shows that the Khmer Rouge knows what the situation is and knows that joining the coalition is best for it.

Prince Sihanouk told reporters that if the Khmer rouge has plans to withdraw from the coalition, it will be the Khmer Rouge that suffers because world opinion will turn and support the government of Heng Samrin in Phnom Penh.

As for Son Sann, he later told the FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW that the "Khmer Rouge will not gain at all by withdrawing from the coalition." "Thus, why did they agree to join the coalition (in the first place)?" "Because they know that if they someday try to split away and carry on alone, they will receive less and less support at the United Nations." And a similar reason played a part in exerting pressure on the three Khmer factions to quickly join hands. That is, the three Khmer factions were well aware of the fact that if they did not unite, they would definitely lose their seat in the United Nations to the Heng Samrin group. And if that happens, these three Khmer groups will find themselves in a very bad situation.

The Next Step of Democratic Kampuchea

The efforts of the various groups has resulted in the formation of Democratic Kampuchea. The next step that Asean, China and Democratic Kampuchea will take together in order to reach the long-term goals is to obtain greater support for Democratic Kampuchea at the United Nations and to reduce the reaction by Vietnam so that Vietnam accepts this and withdraws its 200,000 troops from Kampuchea. This will not be easy to do.

Last year, the United Nations passed a resolution on Kampuchea by a vote of 77 to 37, with 31 abstentions. This has been Asean's only success since Vietnam invaded Kampuchea, even though the seat in the United Nations that Asean preserved for the Khmer Rouge will not play a very important role in pressuring the Vietnamese forces to withdraw from Kampuchea.

As for this year, Asean will continue its efforts at the United Nations, where the next session will open in August. Asean will try to persuade the United Nations to issue a resolution calling on Vietnam to withdraw its forces from Kampuchea and allow the people of Kampuchea to decide their own future. But this attempt by Asean will be difficult because many countries may not vote on the issue of Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations. Besides this, seven of the 10 member countries of the European Economic Community may change their vote this year and abstain this year instead of voting for the resolution, even though the three Khmer groups have united.

What Does Thailand Gain From a Khmer Coalition?

Concerning the formation of the Khmer coalition, it can be seen that China is the only country that is giving arms support to the Khmer groups, particularly the Khmer Rouge. And the Khmer groups can accept each group's situation. China is thus the major supporter, particularly concerning weapons. Asean is providing financial support and food. Because Thailand is the only Asean country that shares a border with Kampuchea, the task of forwarding this aid to the Khmer liberations forces has fallen to Thailand. And this is contrary to Thailand's stated policy of remaining neutral. Concerning this matter of the three Khmer groups, there has been much criticism to the effect that Thailand is taking too great a risk since if it makes such a great effort, it will exhaust itself. And Thailand will not gain anything by helping the Khmer groups build a country. Besides this, Thailand will have to spend money on this without obtaining anything in return.

Looking back in history to the time when things were better and happier in Kampuchea, they were not friends [of Thailand] and they could not be trusted. Also, they secretely struck at Thailand whenever we were careless or when we were experiencing problems. Thus, if the Khmer coalition succeeds in liberating the country, how can we be sure that Kampuchea will remember our help and not secretely strike at us later on?

The thing that must not be forgotten is that by helping the Khmer groups to recover their country, we will be helping to restore the communist party in Thailand too. It must not be forgotten that the three Khmer groups have received great support from China and the CPT is a Chinese-faction party.

As for China, even though its views are identical to those of Thailand and Asean concerning the matter of the Khmer coalition, this does not mean that China will really implement a policy of friendship. At the same time, China will try to spread communist ideals at every opportunity. Thus, China will use the Khmer Rouge as the spearhead in spreading its ideology among the other two Khmer groups. And it will use this Khmer coalition as a tool to spread its influence in this region once again. China successfully used such methods before to spread its ideals in Laos. It did so by infiltrating the Lao coalition government until it reached the point where the Lao government became a communist government. And at present, the Chinese-faction communist party in Burma is infiltrating the various liberation movements in the Shan state.

It is the same in the case of the Khmer coalition. China is trying to use the Khmer coalition as a tool to expand its influence in this region. Thus, it is no surprise at all why China is doing everything possible to see to it that the Khmer coalition succeeds in liberating Kampuchea.

As for the joint support given to the Khmer coalition by the various groups, all of these groups have their own aims. China has the goals discussed above. Asean is doing so because of the fear of invasion by Vietnam. Thailand in particular supports having the Khmer coalition block an invasion by Vietnam outside the country. This appears to contradict what Thai military officials have said. They have repeatedly said that Thailand does not fear Vietnam because Vietnam is not ready to fight Thailand, or it could not defeat Thailand. If Thailand really does not have to fear Vietnam, we should not have to invest money, lose our neutral image or take the risk of serving as a logistics base or rear area for the three Khmer groups so they can oppose Vietnam. And Thailand should not have to increase its forces along the border, which would waste money. Instead, it can use this money to develop the country. This would be better than having a confrontation and increasing the tension in this region. Thailand should really remain neutral and let the Kampuchean problem resolve itself. Whether they come to terms peacefully or through war is their affair. The fact that Thailand supports the three Khmer groups will not stop the war. Instead, it will expand the war. This is because the propaganda that says that, by uniting the three Khmer factions, it will be possible to exert military or political pressure on Vietnam to withdraw is being spread by dreamers who believe that this will be an easy thing to do.

EDITORS HIT KHMER COALITION POLICY IN OPEN LETTER TO PREM

Bangkok PATINYA in Tahi 12 July 82 pp 6, 7

[Editorial: "An Open Letter"]

[Text] Topic: Request that the government review its policy of supporting the Khmer coalition.

To: General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister.

Concerning the recent formation of the Khmer coalition government in Kuala Lumpur, even though this action was publicized as having been taken by Asean, or in accord with the resolution of the United Nations, it was the Thai government that played the greatest role and it was unquestionably the prime mover in this. Concerning the fact that Thailand played an important part in this, even though the government expects that this will give [us] a good image in opposing the invasion by Vietnam, or on the strategic front, by halting the enemy outside the country or that, on the international front, we will gain the trust of neighboring countries and even the great powers, on another front Thailand will lose honor. Thailand can be accused of interfering in the internal affairs of another country. This is an inducement for enemies to invade the country. And this is to the benefit of the other Asean countries and the great power countries while it is to Thailand's disadvantage. Even if it is claimed that Thailand will not do anything unilaterally but will only act in accord with the resolution of the United Nations, it must be remembered that if Asean passes a resolution to go to war with the Indochina countries, who will be the first one to suffer? Even if Thailand is not defeated or even if Thailand does not enter the war, Thailand will have to serve as a logistics base for the Khmer coalition so it can wage war in Kampuchea. This will result in our interference in the internal affairs of a neighboring country becoming even more clear. Furthermore, the Khmer coalition will have to rely on Thailand as a secure base, or as a rear area, in order to carry on the war in Kampuchea. Thus, the thing that is very worrisome is that Thailand's situation in the future will become just like that of Lebanon today, which finds itself in this situation because the Lebanese government allowed the PLO to stay there.

Another thing that must be realized is that the present Kampuchean problem has resulted from the conflict between China and Vietnam. If this dispute should die down and China and Vietnam become close friends again, the problem that will arise is that the approximately 30,000 members of the Khmer Rouge, the killers of the Kampuchean people, will have nowhere to go and will have to ask for asylum in Thailand. When that time arrives, the Kampuchean faction supported by Vietnam will rightously send forces to invade Thailand. This will be accepted by the world community and Thais will certainly find themselves in the same situation as the Lebanese.

Another clear example of a disaster is that Iraq had to send in forces to seize land from Iran because the Iranian government was trying to change the government in Iraq.

Considering the people in the Khmer coalition who are supported by the Thai government, especially Sihanouk and Khieu Samphan (Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge), it is clear that in the past when these people were in control and had power in Kampuchea, they never acted in a friendly way or with good intentions toward Thailand. Clear examples, which the Thai people still remember quite well, are the Khao Phra Wihan, the Siem Organization and the Ban Noi Pa Rai cases.

Besides this, the formation of the Khmer coalition will not end the war in Kampuchea. Instead, this will prolong the war. The other members of Asean will not be affected by the war since they are all located far away from the area. But Thailand, which shares a border with Kampuchea, will be directly and seriously affected by the war in the border area. At the very least, this will cost Thailand a large amount of money and cause it to lose many men and large quantities of resources unnecessarily in defending the border. Also, this will damage the investment atmosphere and cause a loss of morale among the people because of the uncertainty of the situation. These great losses cannot be calculated. At the same time, these losses will greatly benefit other countries in Asean. This is certain.

PATINYA has constantly supported having the Thai government implement a truly neutral policy and called for it to stay out of things in Kampuchea and allow the Kampuchean people to solve their own problems. PATINYA is strongly opposed to Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea. Also, PATINYA is against the government tying the nation's interests to those of the great powers or anyone else, which will improperly place the country in danger. PATINYA has constantly been alarmed by the fact that the attempt to prolong the war in Kampuchea will only harm Thailand even more since there will be constant tension in Thailand because of the threat of war. Also, the country will have to budget money to defend the border, investments here will decline and other countries will use this situation to spread propaganda for their own benefit. Thailand will lose markets because it will not be possible to trade with the Indochina countries. Many types of goods have been designated as war materials. In the present situation in which Thailand is experiencing problems in selling its goods, this will make our economic situation even worse. At the same time, other Asean countries will take this opportunity to serve as middlemen. They will purchase goods from Thailand and sell them to the Indochina countries. This amounts to openly taking the profits that should go to Thailand.

PATINYA feels that the government's policies and actions have resulted in great losses for Thailand and we face much greater dangers. PATINYA feels that the correct thing is that Thailand does not have to be so fearful of Vietnam that it has to intercept the forward troops as is being done at present. Thailand must really take a neutral position and not become involved in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. The problems in Kampuchea must be allowed to unfold by themselves. Those who finally take state power in Kampuchea can then be recognized. As for the great powers that are trying to profit from Kampuchea, let them go ahead and give help; Thailand does not have to get involved. Thailand should trade directly as usual with the Indochina countries. Besides the fact that this will enable Thailand to obtain the maximum profits, this will also eliminate the border black markets. Besides this, Thailand can use the additional money, resources and income earned from trading with these countries to help solve our problems and strengthen the country. If the Indochina countries think about invading Thailand, Thailand is strong and secure enough to handle this.

PATINYA feels that if the great powers or the Asean countries help Thailand, it should be because they feel that Thailand's policies are good policies, that Thailand is strong, that it holds to what is right and has honor and that it is an important force in this part of the world. They should not support Thailand just because they feel that Thailand can be used or because it is declining, which makes it necessary for them to get involved in order to defend their own country.

PATINYA wants the prime minister to know that what has been said above is an honest look at the problems and we have given suggestions with pure intentions and with the best interests of the nation at heart. PATINYA is not "speaking on behalf of Vietnam," "dancing to the tune" of the great powers or acting in the interests of any particular person or group. Also, we have not expressed these views because of any fear of Vietnam, as some scholars have said. And they have said that whoever holds views that are opposed to the government's policies are serving foreigners or that they do not have good intentions. This is a very narrow view, and it will destroy the government's chance to learn about other consequences of the policies. This may be dangerous for the government and the country in general. Besides this, PATINYA is very fearful that, at a time when the government is experiencing domestic problems on all fronts, if it tries to save itself by trying to turn people's attention to foreign affairs, using the border problem as a tool, the result may be that Thailand will suffer the same fate as Argentina in the Falkland Islands case.

PATINYA thus wants to ask that General Prem Tinsulanon consider things from another point of view and that he consider the above suggestions.

RICE PRICES SAID TO BE INADEQUATE, BANKRUPTCIES LOOM

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 19 Jul 82 pp 9-18

[Article: "Farmers' Power: If There Is a Movement Now, the Government Will Not Have a Seat"]

[Text] The Revolution

Farmers from Pathum Thani Province came and held a rally at the Government House on 10 June in order to protest about the fact that the farmers cannot sell their paddy at the guaranteed price even though the government set the price at 3,750 baht per kwian [1 kwian equals 2,000 liters]. The farmers can sell their rice for only 1,500 to 2,000 baht per kwian. The protest ended the next day when a government representative who is involved in rice matters told the farmers that the government has given 5 million baht to the Market Organization for Agriculture to purchase rice in four districts that are experiencing such severe problems that they have had to demonstrate. This is a temporary solution. The cabinet has alloted another 200 million baht to purchase rice from the farmers. This is market intervention in 15 central provinces. The rice will be purchased for 2,800 to 3,000 baht according to the grade of the rice. Even though the farmers who particupated in the rally were not satisfied and not sure about the government's measures, there was no better way out and so they returned to their homes to wait and see what would happen.

The farmers who participated in this protest came from four districts: Khlong Laem, Nong Su, Thanya Buri and Lam Lukka. It has now been 1 month since that day. As for the help that the government promised them, what progress has been made?

Little Money and Slow

Concerning the government's intervention in the market by allowing the Market Organization for Agriculture to purchase rice from the farmers in these four districts, there are still some problems:

1. Concerning the 200 million baht alloted by the cabinet on 16 June, each of these four districts will receive 20 percent, or 40 million baht. But permission to distribute only 7.5 million was given on 29 June. The rest of the money will be distributed later. Added to the 5 million baht that was given the day of the protest, that makes a total of 12.5 million baht. Concerning the remaining 120,000 tons of rice from the second rice crop in the four districts, this money will be sufficient to purchase less than 4 percent of the paddy that the farmers must sell. And if the paddy left over from before is added in, the farmers feel that the government has provided very little money. It seems that the government does not attach any importance to the backbone of the nation or that it does so unwillingly.

2. Concerning distributing the money in installments, the first time, 5 million was given and this was followed by 7.5 million. More will be distributed. Doing things this way has caused the merchants to feel that the government cannot obtain the money necessary to intervene in the market. In the beginning when it was learned that the government had alloted money, the merchants began to take action. But since they have learned that little money has been given, they have not purchased any rice at the government's price. Some families need money now or they have debts and so they have had to sell rice for less than 2,000 baht per kwian. This situation still exists.

"At present, nothing has been done. Since the 10th of last month, nothing has been done. If this was a sick person, he would have died," said a farmer from Khlong 5 Commune compulsively.

3. The reason for the delay is that matters are stalled at the work stage of the officials. The Market Organization for Agriculture purchases rice and turns it over to the rice mills. But the rice mills must first find a bank to put up collateral security. And the mills do not like to get involved in this because there are stipulations concerning what percentage of the paddy must be milled for the Market Organization for Agriculture and how many kilograms must be milled. If the mills purchase rice and do not mill the stipulated amount, the Market Organization for Agriculture will not accept it and the rice mills have to suffer the losses. But if they can avoid this, when the mills purchase rice from the farmers, they can subtract this and that first. It is the farmers who bear the greatest burden as always.

Increased Pricnipal But Still Cheated

At a time when rice prices have fallen and the government cannot provide much help, a government spokesman boldly announced that even god could not help. The farmers will experience increases in production costs, inlcuding increases in the cost of fertilizer, gasoline and wages. Nothing needs to be said about gasoline since the price has increased continually. A member of the Khong 5 Farmers' Group stated that "previously, I remember when rice was 800 to 900 baht per kwian and gasoline was 140 baht per barrel. Now, gasoline is 1,500 baht per barrel. How much is a kwian of rice? Look, what can be done!"

As for the cost of fertilizer, last year it cost 4,600 baht but this year it is 4,800 baht if paid for in cash. If it is purchased on credit, it is 5,300 baht. Wages for working the rice fields have increased to almost 200 baht per rai. Besides this, the cost of insecticides and wages paid for threshing the paddy have increased, like everything else.

In addition to the increased expenses, some farmers who have sold on credit have been cheated by the merchants. The reason that they have sold on credit is because of the falling rice prices. For example, if they sold the paddy as usual, they would receive 2,300 to 2,400 baht per kwian. Merchants have told the farmers that they will pay 2,800 baht but that they do not have the money just now. They have asked the farmers to wait and no contracts have been made. They have taken 10 to 20 kwian from each farmer and then disappeared. The farmers have still not been paid after more than a year. "I was cheated out of 11 kwian last year by a merchant whom I was acquainted with. Even though we are very poor, they still cheat us. New merchants continually come. The government doesn't have detailed knowledge about what is happening," said a village headman in Khlong 7 Commune to PATINYA angrily when talking about the past.

Be Careful of the Farmers' Power

Concerning the protest by the farmers in these four districts last month, even though the protest ended quickly without any trouble, their dissatisfaction is still a danger and it looks as if they are becoming more and more dissatisfied. The rice is piling up at their homes because no one is purchasing any. But the interest on the money they borrowed from private individuals and from state financial institutions will not wait [to be paid] like the [farmers did for] the merchants and it will not decline like rice prices. There is no hope among farmers anywhere and things are ready to explode at any moment if someone ignites the spark. And when that happens, the hidden forces will all unite. The truth that must be accepted is that they eat the farmers rice. We must fight side by side with the farmers. Everyone in the country eats the rice of the farmers.

"At present, they are making contact and they will take action again. But we are worried about the government. If action is taken now, the government will not have a chance to have a seat. I would like the government to wake up as soon as possible before it is too late," said a farm leader to PATINYA in conclusion.

Interview With Kamnan Sanga Wongbangchuat

An important person whom the farmers in Khlong Luang, Thanya Buri, Nong Su and Lam Lukka respect and go to for help and whom even government officials in these four districts go to for help is Kamnan Sanga Wongbangchuat, a former MP in the "Race Track", reform and Kriangsak periods. PATINYA feels that the views of this kamnan, who is a leader of the farmers, should not be overlooked.

[Answer] Never. There has never been such a crisis. Farmers have always received over 3,000 baht per kwian. This is the first year. Don't think that 3,000 is good. We asked for 4,500 but returned with only 1,000 plus. Using animals as an example, it is not a case of horses and mules. It is a case of chickens and buffaloes.There is a great difference between our documents and those of the government. We must receive 4,500 baht in order to be able to exist but the government said it would pay 3,700 first to help. But it has fallen to this level. I do not know what the government is thinking.

[Answer] Not very much. Yields are normal; they have not increased very much. Only expenses have increased. The weakness of the government is that it cannot export rice abroad. There are no measures for the merchants who have registered to take the rice. The rice mills cannot be supervised. And markets cannot be found. On the average, farmers here produce about 50 tang [1 tang equals 20 liters] per rai.Some years, nothing happens because there is no rice to sell. People suffer and no one is to blame. We all suffer but we can bear it. But then when we have rice to sell, the government says that the world market is not good and that our rice is expensive. We cannot listen.That is, we have made comparisons.It can be seen that paddy sells for about 10 baht per tang while rice is selling for 100 baht per tang.

[Question] In addition to these four districts, are the other three districts [in the province] experiencing problems?

[Answer] In Pathum Thani Province, the other three districts have problems too but they have recieved 22 million. Lat Lum Kaeo District alone has received 16 million. They claim that they had rice to sell first. The government did not try to obtain data first. This may involve political pressure or something. We do not know. I do not want to say anything. They have said that they did not give us any money because they saw that there was rice there 2 months before here and so they gave all the help to them. There is no money here. They were given money because they demonstrated. The rice yields in those three districts are not half of what they are here. The yields here are much larger. But we have not talked about yields. We were not given any of the money because the government did not collect any data. But actually, things in those districts are not any better than they are here. The Market Organization for Agriculture has cut much. But it is still better than having to sell at 1,700 to 1,800 baht. But really nothing has improved. However, this has made the market active.

[Answer] There must be a sincere effort. Some money must be found. Rice must be purchased from the farmers. If it cannot be sold, it can be dumped into the sea to end the matter. But the farmers must be given help so they can get out of this crisis. If we talk like this, the merchants will not be able to sleep either. They have expenses too. The government has said that it will purchase large quantities of rice from Pathum Thani and that it will purchase 500 million baht of rice. But it has actually purchased only 50 million. The merchants cannot remain idle. They must make a living too. They must make purchases quickly.But they do not dare.

[Answer] At present, I am helping the government. I am trying to calm the farmers. I have told them that the government is helping us, although not as much as we want. Whatever we can do to help, we do. We are helping the government as much as possible. I would like to look into the heart of the government to see how honest it is. I do not get anything for this. I just lose money. I have spent much money. I have had to go with the district officer in order to calm down the farmers. We do not want to let the government officials do this. Things would be difficult for the farmers. There is no better way than to do the work oneself.

[Answer] The cooperatives cannot do anything. Stated simply, they are paper tigers. We know this. Thailand has had cooperatives for a long time now. There was once a ministry but it was demoted to a division. Now there is the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives.

The same thing is true for the technical experts. The various sectors such as the Rice Policy Committee, the departments of foreign trade and internal trade, the Market Organization for Agriculture and the six departments and four ministries that work in this area do little. That is, they have joined together but the people involved in the work do not have any knowledge. They are not doctors but they want to treat the disease. The patient will die for sure. I cannot guarantee that anything will be solved.

[Question] Protest demonstrations may be to the advantage of other groups.

[Answer] No. I won't let them interfere. We will prevent this. First, they won't be allowed to use loudspeakers. And second, those people won't be allowed to get involved. We will contact the government directly. Our representatives will negotiate with the government. The villagers have joined together and asked us to help. We have helped them and told them what to do.

[Question] And the political parties?

[ANswer] I haven't had any contact with them. I contact the Office of the Prime Minister directly. Some of the political parties want to join with us. They even want to send representatives from various places such as Ayuthaya, Saraburi and Sukhothai to submit proposals. But we want to discuss only the matter of the farmers' problems with rice prices. If there are changes, we can discuss them later.

Hired Farmers: Long-Standing Bitterness

When we speak about farmers, many people feel that the farmers are the backbone of the country. They are following in the footsteps of their ancestors as farmers. Some make progress and some totter depending on the talents of each person. The original condition of farming is farming that relies on nature. When the rainy season arrives, the plowing begins and the harvesting is done in accord with the agricultural season. Stated simply, farming is done in partnership with the gods. After the partnership has been formed, the farmers wait for the gods to bring the rains so they can go to work and there must be just the right amount of rain. Otherwise, if there is too much rain, the rice will be runied. This has been the Thai style of farming since the beginning. And the aim of this work has been to produce enough to eat from year to year. People in former times did not have a lot as they do today and so they did not have to worry and fight among themselves. But today, progress has given rise to needs and working just in order to have enough to eat is no longer enough. People must work in order to have a surplus so that they can obtain other types of goods such as tractors, radios and televisions, which can be used to benefit in various ways. The irrigation system that has been installed has helped solve the water shortage problem at present. And the fact that the world has made progress and is using technology to provide help in farming has resulted in the farmers reaping greater yields. Production has higher goals, that is, to produce more in order to sell it. But the use of technology has increased farm production costs too. The thing that everyone hopes for is that they will at least recover their costs once they invest money. But can this dream come true for everyone? As for mistakes, if too little is produced there will be little to sell or if too much is produced, rice prices will be low. Or if there are no markets, sales will be like they are at present. In such cases, people will suffer losses. And when this happens, it will be difficult to repay the money borrowed form the banks, cooperatives or Chinese. Other problems will follow. These problems will link together to form a chain in the lives of the farmers.

The Troubled Farmers: The Degree of Severity Depends On Their Position

Farmers at all levels are experiencing problems. First, I will talk about those who own their own land. Even though these people have land to work, they have been affected in various cases. There is the case of Mr Thongchai Nonthanakhon, a farmer in Khlong 5 Commune, Khlong Luang District, Pathum Thani Province, who is 40 years old. He is married and has four children. He finished Grade 4 and went to work in the fields after he finished Grade 4. It can be said that he has grown up in the fields since he has worked as a farmer [since he was a child]. Mr Thongchai has 80 rai and a 5-rai plot that he was given to work as an experimental agricultural mud-flat plot. "My fields won second place in the competition this year," said Mr Thongchai in response to a question by PATINYA. And he added that "this competition is held on the provincial level. I was defeated by one other person by only one-half tang. He produced 97 tang while I produced 96.5 tang. I planted the K.Kh. ["Rice Department"] variety, a hybrid variety." And PATINYA has learned that, normally, Mr Thongchai's fileds yield at least 80 tang per rai. "Last year, I got 3,350 baht [per kwian] but this year (at the beginning of the year) I got only 3,100 baht. And at present I cannot sell any at all." Mr Thongchai talked politely with PATINYA at lunchtime after he finished threshing the rice. Another thing that PATINYA learned was that before he was given the test plot, officials from the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives considered his willingness to look after the fields and his willingness to work. The agricultural officials had to be sure that they would not be disappointed after they gave him the test plot. They asked others in the area about his background and they asked him how interested he was. The aim is to have farmers cultivate rice and benefit. "I have encountered many problems this rainy season. I had to hurry to finish the harvesting. If the rice gets wet, it will lose its quality. After I finish threshing it, I have to dry it before selling it." Mr Thongchai added that "those families that do not have a yard or that have only a small yard have other problems because they do not have any place to dry their rice." The rice varieties grown by Mr Thongchai are K.Kh 21, K.Kh 23 (which resists disease well), K.Kh 25 and hybrid K.Kh. Mr Thongchai said that "rice varieties change constantly depending on what the agricultural and district officials recommend." Most of the fields worked by Mr Thongchai are fields on which the paddy is sown without transplanting since these produce better results than fields on which transplanting of seedlings is practiced.

Mr Thongchai siad that "those who rent land are much worse off than I am because the yields are not good and they msut sell it at a low price. If sales are like they are this year, they cannot repay their debts. My situation is better and I do not have so many problems." PATINYA learned that, concerning those who rent land, when they rent land, they must borrow money in order to purchase fertilizer, gasoline and insecticides. And this year, the price of fertilizer has increased to 4,800 baht per ton from 4,600 baht last year. If they buy on time from the cooperative, it costs them about 5,300 baht. Gasoline has increased too. Since investments are great, there are problems since the rice can be sold for only 1,600 to 1,700 baht per kwian. When loan costs are deducted, this is not enough. And what will they do next year? Their debts will increase. Mr Thongchai can produce two crops a year, that is, the annual wet rice crop and the second rice crop. At present, the harvesting is underway and as yet no merchant has made contact. Mr Thongchai said that "last year, many merchants came to this village to make purchases. This year, none have come." He also added that "I sell to those who give me a good price. I am not tied to those merchants. Since I cannot sell my rice this year, I will just hold on to it. Since I am not yet experiencing any great difficulties, I will not sell it yet." Certainly, those who are not experiencing any problems do not have to hurry to sell their rice. But others who are experiencing problems and who have debts hanging over their heads must sell even though prices are low. If they do not sell, things will be even worse. Sometimes, the merchants buy on credit, saying that they will pay later (on faith) but they then disappear along with the rice of the farmers. Those who experience such problems find themselves in difficulty.

While Mr Thongchai is a farmer with a position that is somewhat better than others, he said that he too has problems. As for those who rent land, the government has admitted that in the Central Region, very few people engaged in farming own their own land. Most rent land to farm. Based on inquiries, it has been learned that, in Pathum Thani Province, there are more farmers who rent land than farmers who own their own land. When PATINYA visited Khlong 5, we talked with a farm family from Lat Lumkaeo District in Pathum Thani Province. The whole family came here to find work harvesting rice. The entire family moved here. From questioning them, it was learned that their fields there do not give a good yield. After they finish the harvesting, they have nothing to do and so they go to harvest rice for others wherever they can. When they finish the harvesting in one palce, they go to find work somewhere else until the next agricultural season when they have enough money to return and work there.

Mr Chaloem Khongchin, age 26, is married but does not have any children. He was not a farmer originally but because his wife was a farmer, he too became a farmer. He helps his family too. "I farm in Lat Lumkaeo. At present, I have been employed to harvest rice. The whole family is doing this," said Mr Chaloem in response to a question. PATINYA saw him sitting in a store near Khlong 5 and saw that he had many of his belongings with him like a person who is about to move somewhere. In response to a question by PATINYA, Mr Chaloem said that "for harvesting rice for them, I receive 120 baht per rai. Previously, when rice prices were better, I received 200 baht per rai." His slow response generated sympathy for him. How hard he must work to harvest 1 rai. Does his pay cover his food and labor expenses? Mr Chaloem also said that "I live over there. I rent land, for which I pay 150 baht per rai. Together with my mother-in-law, I work about 90 rai. The fields there do not give very good yields. I have already sold this year's rice." Mr Chaloem openly said that "this year, I harvested 37 kwian and sold it for 1,700 baht per kwian. I lost money. I had to sell it to pay my debts. We have to repay them." Since he mentioned debts, PATINYA had a chance to ask about this. [He said that] "I borrow from the cooperative and from the bank and sometimes from the Chinese. The loan period is 1 year. They charge 5 percent interest but this must be paid on a monthly basis." And when asked about the rice, Mr Chaloem said that "usually, there are problems with rice diseases. And little water. Sometimes, we pump water at night." Those who rent land to farm deserve sympathy. PATINYA learned that Mr Chaloem uses a tractor. He must use fertilizer, gasoline and insecticde like other fields. As for those who rent land, what they cannot seem to escape from are the debts, regardless of whether the debts are with the owners of the fields, the cooperatives or the banks. And a serious problem for those who rent land is the matter of what they can do to get money to pay their debts in accord with the stipulations. After they finish harvesting their own fields and sell the rice, they try to find work in other fields. (Concerning such cases, PATINYA has learned that a new profession, hired farmer, has arisen among the farmers. During the agricultural season, they hire themselves out to sow the fields, and at harvesting time, they are hired to do the harvesting. Regardless of the reason for this, this problem has arisen.) Just before he left to help his relatives put their belongings on the bus to go to fields elsewhere, Mr Chaloem said that "I would like to see rice prices increase so that we can survive." This is the life of a farmer in the Central Region, where yields are thought to be better than elsewhere. No one knows when such problems began.One day when they cannot pay their debts or the owners of the land stop renting land to them, their situation will be similar to that of the laborers. They will use their physical labor to perform the occupation they inherited from their forefathers. And if such troubles increase, this will be a major problem that we should all help solve.

Hired Farmers: Just Laborers In the Rural Areas

While they were once farmers who owned their own land, they have now become renters. [Technically], they may still be the owners, but they are the owners in name only. But now, there is a new trend. The owners of the land have said that they will annul the contracts in order to use the land for other things such as planting gardens, raising fish or subdividing the land. Or the renters have not had the sense to continue paying the rent. And more and more of the children of the farmers who own plots that are too small to be divided have had to hire themselves out. These farmers do not own their own land. They live off their labor, which they exchange for money. This is the same as the laborers in the cities. But there are still few such hired farmers because usually such people go to work in the industrial factories. This gives the hired farmers much bargaining power. They can choose the employer that will pay them high wages. But in the present situation in which the creation of jobs in the industrial sector has stopped and some sectors have even laid off people and stopped hiring people, which has put 10,000 laborers out of work, many of these laborers [form the rural areas] have returned to the rural areas. This has caused people to compete for work in the rural areas. The hired farmers will no longer have any bargaining power. Furthermore, in the situation in which rice is not bringing a good price, this year, the farmers are not hiring many workers. The wages of the hired farmers have fallen. The various troubles have spread everywhere where there are farming activities. The problems will be difficult to solve unless the structure of our agricultural system is changed in order to cut this circle before a crisis develops.

BRIEFS

AID TO PAPUA NEW GUINEA--Australia has agreed to take an early look at the amount of aid it is giving to Papua New Guinea. Papua New Guinea's prime minister, Mr Somare, spent nearly an hour in talks with the Australian prime minister, Mr Fraser, and the foreign minister, Mr Street, at Federal Parliament in Canberra this afternoon. Sources in the Department of Foreign Affairs say Mr Fraser agreed to tell Mr Somare next month when the Australian Government will review its aid program to Papua New Guinea. The sources say it is likely the review, scheduled to be held early in 1984, will be held early next year. A spokesman for the foreign minister's office in Canberra says Mr Somare told Mr Street he will attend the regional meeting of commonwealth heads of government in Fiji in October. [Text] [BK250915 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 25 Aug 82]

HIGH COMMISSIONER TO KIRIBATI--The Federal Government has announced the appointment of Mr (John Marney) as Australian high commissioner to Kiribati. Mr (Marney), aged 46, was educated in Canberra and joined the public service in 1955. He has held appointments with the Department of Foreign Affairs in Bangkok, Moscow, Kuala Lumpur, Port Moresby and Tokyo. He will be the first Australian high commissioner to be resident in Tarawa. DROUGHT WARNING--Prime Minister Fraser has said Australia could be facing the worst drought for many decades. Fraser told Federal Parliament the omens were very bad indeed. The weather pattern is offering no relief over a large part of the nation. The Labor Party spokesman on primary industry, Kerin, described the government's response to the drought as totally inadequate. He said an extra $2 million allocation for drought relief in the federal budget worked out at only about $20 for every drought affected farmer. Meanwhile in Sydney, New South Wales Premier Wran has said it is time the federal government faced up to the fact that the drought is a national disaster. Wran said the drought now in its 4th year was crippling the rural economy. He said that in some parts of New South Wales, crops could not even be sown while rural workers who depended on good harvests and abundant stocks would not be able to feed their families unless urgent arrangements were made for unemployment relief. [Text] [BK191209 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 19 Aug 82]

OFFICIALS HOLD TALKS--Papua New Guinea's prime minister, Mr Somare, is to hold informal talks in Sydney later this month with the Australian prime minister, Mr Fraser. Mr Somare is expected to ask Mr Fraser for more economic aid for Papua New Guinea which will involve reversing a trend for Australia to provide less help. The newly-elected Papua New Guinea prime minister last week told Papua New Guineans that they would have to live more economically to help the country out of the current economic difficulties. Mr Somare said that with the falling prices for its exports, Papua New Guinea was not able to manage on its own. He said his government would maintain the request made by the previous government of Sir Julius Chan for extra Australian aid which now provides about one-third of Papua New Guinea's budget. TECNOMIT SIGNS CONTRACT WITH INDIA

[Text] Tecnomit, the engineering division of Montedison will provide technology, planning services and technical assistance to the Indian company FACT (Fertilizers and Chemicals Travancore) for an effluent treatment plant to be constructed in Cochin, Kerala State. The ecological unit will reduce to the lowest level the ammoniae and related materials coming from waters discharged by the local urea plant and will recycle the recovered products for productive purposes. FACT is one of the Indian fertilizer producing companies for which Tecnomit has in the past supplied processes, engineering and machinery for the construction of 9 ammoniae production plants and 11 urea production plants. The two FACT units located in Cochin have been in operation since 1973 and produce daily 600 tons of ammoniae and 1,000 tons of urea.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON OFFICIAL VISIT TO WASHINGTON

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 28 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] Washington, KOMPAS--Minister of Defense Gen M Jusuf, during the first meeting of his official visit to the United States, discussed a number of questions in the defense field, both involving general matters as well as those concerning bilateral relations between Indonesia and the United States.

In his meeting with President Ronald Reagan at the White House, he reviewed matters concerning developments in several important areas of the world at the present time. Among those areas discussed were the Middle East, Kampuchea, and Afghanistan.

"We obtained President Reagan's views on several areas of the world, which we will present to President Soeharto after we have returned home," said General Jusuf to Threes Nio, a KOMPAS reporter, in Washington on Monday [27 July]. However, he was not prepared to say precisely what President Reagan had said. He only stated that President Reagan is paying close attention to developments in Southeast Asia and that he was happy that relations between Indonesia and the United States were going along well. At the meeting President Reagan received a personal letter from President Soeharto and also expressed the hope that the president of Indonesia could visit the United States next October.

General Jusuf, who was very satisfied with the meeting, pictured President Reagan as a cordial, sincere, and happy person, with a smiling face, who seemed "younger than his years." Although not in the original plan, the meeting with President Reagan also was attended by Vice President George Bush, Secretary of Defense Caspar W Weinberger, and Presidential Adviser for National Defense William Clark.

On this occasion Vice President George Bush expressed his hope that he would be able to visit Indonesia in the not too distant future. Meanwhile, Secretary of State George Shultz, who on Monday [27 July] was away from Washington, had a separate meeting with the Minister of Defense and Security Jusuf on Tuesday [28 July].

Questions which were discussed with President Reagan were later reviewed more fully in a private meeting with Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and at an official meeting of the delegations of the two countries.

Regarding developments in various parts of the world, General Jusuf emphasized the importance of a resolution of the Kampuchean question for the peace of Southeast Asia. He expressed the view that the United States, because of its relations with the People's Republic of China, the Soviet Union, and Vietnam, still has a great opportunity to play a role in the Kampuchean question.

He said that the United States also had a key role to play in the Middle Eastern question, even though he admitted that the Middle Eastern question was very complicated. General Jusuf and his party were provided with a briefing on the latest developments in Afghanistan. He hoped that the question of Afghanistan would be resolved as well as possible, in order to reduce the sufferings of the Afghani people.

Regarding bilateral relations, there was a discussion about the equipment needed for continuing the consolidation of the Indonesian Armed Forces, including the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. In this connection General Jusuf felt the United States had many opportunities in this area, and the discussions which were undertaken by an Indonesian team some time ago will be continued.

In the discussion on bilateral relations the question of training of officers of the Indonesian Armed Forces was emphasized. He said that the Indonesian Armed Forces are now busily engaged in making a major change in the military training system, regarding both combat units as well as the creation of reserve units. He thinks that in military training institutions in the United States there are many points of comparison which can be usefully employed in Indonesia. The minister of defense and security obtained a positive impression that the U S side was willing to help. "Indeed, there are many questions which must be discussed in Congress, but we understand the problem," said General Jusuf.

Both the meeting with Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and the meeting between the two delegations took place, according to the minister of defense and security, "in a good atmosphere and successfully." He pictured Secretary Weinberger himself as a "very realistic" person.

The Indonesian delegation at the meeting at the Pentagon consisted of Minister of Defense and Security M Jusuf; Charge d'Affaires Dr S Wiryono; Army Chief of Staff General Poniman; Air Force Chief of Staff Marshal Ashadi Tjahjadi; Commander of the National Strategic Command Air Marshal Sukardi; Ministry of Defense and Security Assistant for Intelligence Lt Gen Benny Moerdani; the assistant for logistics in the Ministry of Defense and Security and assistant for plans in the office of the Army chief of staff, Major General Supardjo; the commander of the Indonesian Fleet, Rear Admiral Kasenda; and the defense attache in the Indonesian Embassy in Washington, Col (Navy) E Tumengkol.

On the U S side in attendance at the meeting were Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger; Deputy Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci; Assistant Secretary of Defense Fred Ikle; Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs John Holdridge; Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense Dr Wade; Assistant Secretary of Defense West; Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Richard Armitage; Childress, a member of the National Security Council; the military assistant of the secretary of defense, Major General Smith; and the defense attache at the United States Embassy in Jakarta, Colonel Kizirian.

Apart from the official meeting between the two delegations, members of the Indonesian party also held private meetings. Air Force Chief of Staff Marshal Ashadi Tjahjadi, for example, met with the chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force, General Robert C Mathis. The assistant for intelligence in the Ministry of Defense and Security, Lt Gen Benny Moerdani, met with the director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, Lt Gen James Williams. Rear Admiral Kasenda met with the director of the Navy Oceanographic Office, Vice Admiral John B Mooney, and Vice Admiral Samuel H Packer of the Plans, Policy, and Operations Section of the Pentagon.

The visit of Minister of Defense and Security Jusuf to the Pentagon was accompanied by a major military ceremony, which was held at the River Entrance of the Pentagon. Whereas ordinary Indonesians are known to follow a system of "rubber time" (i e, do not always arrive on time], this time the term had to refer to the hosts. General Jusuf, who arrived precisely on time, had to wait 2 minutes before Secretary Weinberger came down from his office.

Minister of Defense and Security Jusuf told a KOMPAS representative that there had been a major increase in the level of Indonesian-United States cooperation in the defense field. Whereas during the administration of President Carter military assistance from the U.S. seemed to be declining, since last year this assistance reflects a substantial increase.

What is usually called "military assistance" from the U.S. consists of credits for the purchase of military equipment and help in the form of grants. Purchase credits, which are called "Foreign Military Sales" (FMS), are loans on which interest is charged. Although the interest rate is still below commercial bank rates, this kind of credit cannot be called a soft loan. On the other hand, what is called the "Military Assistance Program" (MAP) and "International Military Education and Training" (IMET) is aid in grant form which does not need to be repaid. Whereas MAP (which was abolished in 1978) had the objective of helping the armed forces of a country which was at a rather low stage of development, IMET has the objective of helping the training of members of the armed forces of foreign countries.

In this connection Indonesia has received both FMS, MAP (until 1978), and IMET assistance. From available statistics it appears that the total military aid from the United States during the "New Order" period [since the replacement of President Soekarno] reached a high point in 1978. In that year FMS totaled $40 million; MAP totaled $15.3 million; and IMET, $2 million. However, in the following years (that is, during the period of the Carter administration) this total declined. In 1979, for example, total aid was only $34 million ($32 million for FMS and $2 for IMET). And in 1980 the aid reached its lowest point, $31.65 million ($30 million for FMS and $1.65 million for IMET).

It was only in 1982 that the aid again showed an increase, with $40 million for FMS and $2.2 million for IMET. According to present plans for 1983, there will be $50 million for FMS and $2.625 million for IMET.

Apart from the increased figures referred to above, cooperation between the two countries seems to be increasing. Two weeks ago, for example, in the course of the visit of Minister of State for Research and Technology Habibie it was agreed that there would be cooperation in the field of defense technology and industry.

General Jusuf believes that this increase in cooperation has resulted from an increase in the number of visits by high-ranking U.S. officials to Indonesia. Besides that, Indonesia has made a greater effort to clarify our problems.

Answering a question whether the increase in the level of relations means that Indonesia is considered important from the point of view of U.S. defense, General Jusuf said that both President Reagan and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger appear to pay close attention to developments in Southeast Asia. "In the interest of world peace, including peace in Southeast Asia in particular and in Asia as a whole, I think that the role of Indonesia, with its very strategic location, has received a great deal of attention, and its usefulness is very great," he said.

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 29 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] Washington, KOMPAS--The situation in the Middle East and developments in the power of the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China in Southeast Asia were two major questions which were discussed during the second day of the visit of the minister of defense and commander of the Indonesian Armed Forces, General M Jusuf, to the United States.

Reliable sources state that General Jusuf expressed both to U S Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and to Secretary of State George Shultz Indonesia's concern about the situation in the Middle East. As a country, most of whose population are Muslims, Indonesia cannot let the situation in the Middle East drag on endlessly. Therefore, Indonesia urged the U.S. government to seek a way to resolve the Middle Eastern question as quickly as possible.

General Jusuf himself, in his conversation with KOMPAS correspondent Threes Nio in Washington, admitted that the Middle Eastern question is very complicated. High-ranking American officials told General Jusuf that the U.S. Government is trying very hard to find such a solution, and the special envoy of President Reagan, Philip C. Habib, at present is still actively engaged in the Middle East, seeking a place of refuge for troops of the PLO, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The other question which attracted major attention was developments involving the power of the People's Republic of China and the Soviet Union--particularly the Soviet fleet--in the Southeast Asian area. This question was reviewed, both in a meeting with high-ranking officials of the Department of Defense on Monday [27 July] as well as in a meeting with the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General John Vessey, on Tuesday [28 July].

Indeed, time was specially set aside for a briefing at the Defense Intelligence Agency and an exchange of views on "the Soviet Union and PRC threat: presence and activity in Southeast Asia."

Discussion of this question will also be continued in Honolulu during the meeting with the commander in chief, Pacific, Admiral Robert Long.

The minister of defense and security emphasized to KOMPAS the importance of Indonesia's continuing to follow closely all developments affecting the forces of the two countries referred to. The minister considers that the threat presented by the Soviet Union and the PRC at present is "of equal importance." "It depends on our own problems and how far they go to consolidate themselves. For both the PRC and the Soviet Union at present are still encountering great economic difficulties," General Jusuf said.

However, General Jusuf also pointed out that, like the U.S., Indonesia must also pay close attention to the growth of the power of the Soviet Union, particularly in terms of the developments of its fleet. "We have an interest in many matters, because we have areas like the Straits of Malacca and the waters to the North of the Natuna Archipelago, through which the Soviet Fleet is always passing," he said.

For that reason General Jusuf regards his meeting with Admiral Robert Long in Honolulu as very important. This is particularly because the area of responsibility on CINCPAC covers all of these important ocean areas, such as the South China Sea and the Indian Ocean.

Apart from the Middle East question the problem of Kampuchea was also reviewed with Secretary of State George Shultz. According to reliable sources, on this occasion General Jusuf urged the U.S. Government to continue its support for ASEAN in its efforts to find a solution in this region. Both countries hope that the next General Assembly of the United Nations will show a positive attitude and that the seat of Democratic Kampuchea can be maintained.

The meeting between the minister of defense and security and the new U.S. secretary of state was not the first time they met. Previously, as minister of industry, General Jusuf had met twice with George Shultz who, as president of the Bechtel Corporation, had visited Jakarta.

The minister of defense and security felt that his half-hour meeting with the new U.S. secretary of state was very important. This was especially the case in terms of exchanging views and providing information on Indonesia. "In this way we would hear the views of the minister of defense in these terms and the secretary of state in those terms. Thus, we were able to get a complete picture. It was also important for us to provide him with information on Indonesia so that, as secretary of state, he would then be able to understand our situation," General Jusuf said. However, he also stated that the meeting was held at the request of the U.S. side.

Receives the Legion of Merit

Before meeting with Secretary of State George Shultz, Minister of Defense and Security Jusuf was received by the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General John Vessey. In this meeting, which was also attended by Indonesian Army Chief of Staff General Poniman and Indonesian Air Force Chief of Staff Marshal Ashadi Tjahjadi, defense problems were discussed from the technical military point of view, both those involving bilateral relations between the two countries and those involving world security in general.

On this occasion General Jusuf received the "Legion of Merit" medal, the highest U.S. decoration [as published]. And as on the first day the program at the Pentagon on Tuesday [28 July] closed with a luncheon given by General John Vessey to the minister of defense and security and the official party.

During his 2-day visit to Washington General Jusuf was also able to hold unofficial meetings with two former U.S. ambassadors who had served in Indonesia, Marshall Green and David Newsom. "These are all old friends. I was only unable to see Ambassador Masters because he wasn't here, since he is in Singapore." said General Jusuf. He was referring to former Ambassador Edward Masters, whose replacement in Jakarta has not yet been appointed.

General Jusuf also had an informal meeting on his last night in Washington with the Indonesian community in Washington and vicinity. On that occasion General Jusuf discussed the situation in Indonesia, particularly in connection with defense and security matters. He also described problems affecting the Ministry of Defense and Security which are presently attracting his attention, as well as plans for improvements and development of the armed forces in the future.

Departs for Hawaii

On Wednesday morning [29 July] the minister of defense and security and his party left Washington. They left from Andrews Air Force Base. From there, in a PELITA [Five-Year Development Program] Boeing 707 aircraft the minister and his party flew to Travis Air Force Base (San Francisco) and then direct to Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii.

As was the case in Washington, here also the minister of defense and security was welcomed in a military ceremony. For 2 days he was the guest of CINCPAC, Admiral Robert Long. Minister of Defense and Security General Jusuf had a crowded schedule. Apart from his discussions with Admiral Long, the minister also attended an overall briefing on the security situation in the Pacific, particularly in connection with the activity of the Soviet Fleet in the area. He also visited several places he considered important, such as the First Marine Brigade at Kaneohe, the Pacific Fleet at Pearl Harbor, and the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks.

On Friday morning [31 July] local time Minister of Defense and Security General M Jusuf and his party will leave Hawaii enroute to Guam and then directly back to Jakarta.

MINISTER SIGNS INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS

Defense Industry Cooperation

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 27 Jul 82 p 10

[Excerpt] Washington, Monday [July 27]--In order to promote the independence of the Indonesian economy, Minister of State for Research and Technology B J Habibie recently visited several companies throughout the United States to reach agreement on developing a firmer industrial foundation in Indonesia.

Although the main objective of his visit was directed toward the private sector, he spent 3 days in Washington, talking to officials of the Departments of State, Commerce, and Defense. At the Pentagon he signed three agreements regarding defense industry cooperation with the United States Army, Navy, and Air Force. The agreements, according to officials of the Department of State, "are only in the form of general understandings, without mentioning special technology. Minister Habibie did not intend to purchase any specific quantity of goods."

The principal target of the Habibie visit concerned the technology of flight and oceanography. On 2 July he signed an agreement with the Boeing Company in Seattle to help Indonesia develop its capacity to manufacture hydrofoils and certain kinds of aircraft.

Habibie visited facilities at Northrop, General Dynamics, and Bell Helicopter, but he did not sign any agreements with these companies.

Peter Dakan, a Boeing spokesman, said that since last year Indonesia has been considering using the Boeing jetfoil boat for a number of military and commercial applications. "After Indonesia has bought three or four of the boats, we will begin to turn over to Indonesia, in a phased way, the manufacture of a number of jetfoil components," said Dakan. He added that another consequence of the agreement would be to make it possible for Indonesia to develop its capacity to manufacture certain Boeing components, so that they will be able to establish themselves as subcontractors on the world market.

The Indonesian airline, Garuda, at present is operating six Boeing 747 aircraft, Dakan said. The Indonesian government recently bought three Boeing 737 aircraft for ocean patrol purposes.

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 27 Jul 82 p 8

[Text] Jakarta, HARIAN UMUM AB--The P T Nurtanio aircraft factory, beginning in 1987, will have an opportunity to manufacture components for Boeing aircraft, based on a cooperative program signed recently with the American aircraft manufacturer. This was stated in a report received by the Community Relations Section of the BPPT (Technology Development Body) on Monday [27 July].

The cooperation agreement was signed in Seattle in the United States by the minister for research and development, Prof B J Habibie, and the Boeing Company. It provides that, beginning in 1987, P T Nurtanio will be given the right to take part in tenders and to receive orders to manufacture components for Boeing aircraft.

Prof Habibie, who is also president and director of P T Nurtanio, stated that this cooperation is an honor for Nurtanio, which has gained the confidence of a large company like Boeing. The Boeing Company does not produce the entire structure of their aircraft but rather it specializes in the manufacture of the cockpit and wings, while the manufacture of the fuselage, wheels, and so forth is turned over to other aircraft manufacturing companies in the world.

The receipt of an order from Boeing will facilitate P T Nurtanio's efforts to expand its working program in the field of the manufacture of aircraft components, Prof Habibie said.

Another agreement signed by Minister for Research and Technology Prof Habibie which involves cooperation between P T PAL Surabaya [Surabaya Naval Base Company] and the Boeing Marine Division concerns plans for the manufacture of jetfoil ships. This will be of great significance for maritime communications in Indonesia, 70 percent of whose territory consists of sea area.

According to Prof Hababie, at present there is under study the construction of jetfoil ships of 150 tons with a speed of 55 knots. When its production reaches the proper point, P T PAL Surabaya will later be able to build these ships for use in equipping the coastal defense system in Indonesia.

During his visit to the United States in July the minister of state for research and technology and his party undertook extended conversations with the directors of American multinational companies like Boeing, General Dynamics, Northrop, Combustion Engineering, IBM, and a number of oil companies as well as research centers in various places in that country.

In the minister's party, among others, were assistant minister Prof Dr Sukadji Ranuwihardjo; assistant minister Prof M T Zen; former rector of the Bandung Technological Institute, Prof John Sapi'ie; the director of organization and systems analysis of the BPPT, Dr Wardiman Djojonegoro; and the director of development technology, Dr Harsono Pusponegoro. Also members of the party were a number of senior officers of the Indonesian Armed Forces, including the chief of staff of the Ministry of Defense and Security, Lt Gen Yogi Supardi; the secretary for defense industry of the Ministry of Defense and Security, Rear Admiral Kun Djelani; Major General Suryaputera of PINDAD [Army Industrial Directorate], and a senior director of P T Nurtanio, Air Commodore Yuwono.

Before returning home in the middle of August the minister of state for research and technology will make a visit to the Federal Republic of Germany, according to the Community Relations Section of BPPT.

MORE FOLLOWERS OF HASAN TIRO CAPTURED

'Adviser to Governor of Peurelak' Captured

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 3 Jul 82 p 9

[Excerpts] Medan, ANTARA--The Aceh Special Branch Office has again succeeded in capturing a leader of the Hasan Tiro Movement (GHT), Tengku Salim bin Malik (62 years old), who called himself an "Advisor to the Governor of the Peurelak District," a few days ago in Alur Dua Village, Peurelak District, in Aceh Timur Regency.

On the same day, 28 June 1982, another member of the GHT group, Imam Ali Piah, came in to surrender at a post of Task Group "B" of the Aceh Special Branch Office in the Peurelak District. He identified hismelf as a bodyguard of Yasin Ali, "Commander of Region IV." Yasin Ali was also captured last week. Imam Ali came in wearing the GHT uniform.

The capture of Tengku Salim bin Malik was a success for Task Group "B", the special unit formed by the Aceh Special Branch Office to suppress the GHT remnants in Aceh Timur Regency last April. Prior to this the unit had captured Idris Ahmad, "Governor of the GHT Peurelak District," together with two of his followers. After the capture of Idris Ahmad in May, 1982, Tengku Salim promoted himself to be "Governor of the Peurelak District," replacing Idris Ahmad.

Two Task Groups

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 9 Jul 82 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts] Banda Aceh, Thursday [9 July]--On Tuesday, 7 July, Tengku Rahman Batee Puteh, who called himself commander of Simpang Ulim region and was also the chief of customary law in the GHT Peurelak District, was captured. The capture of Rahman Batee Puteh was the fourth success registered by Task Group "B", which is led by Maj (Infantry) Jahdi Husin.

Previously, on 21 May 1982 the Task Group succeeded in capturing alive Idris Mahmud (39 years old), who called himself governor of the GHT Peurelak District, together with three of his followers, who were respectively called Jailani (27 years old), Said Hasan (24 years old), and Marzuki (26 years old).

Seized with them were two weapons and 130 round of ammunition, a typewriter, wornout clothing, three blue berets, a number of documents, and medicines.

Later, on 25 June 1982 the Task Group of the Aceh Special Branch Office registered another success, capturing alive Yasin Ali, who admitted he was commander of Region I of the GHT group. Seized with him was one firearm.

The following capture took place on 28 June 1982, involving Tengku Salim, adviser and governor of the GHT Peurelak District.

According to the Aceh Special Branch Office, in order to wipe out the GHT in Aceh completely, two Task Groups were formed. Task Group "A" on 15 April 1982 succeeded in shooting and killing Ilyas Lebee, who called himself minister of justice; Idris Ahmad, governor of the Batee District; and Yacop Piah, a GHT logistics soldier. When they were intitally attacked by the Indonesian Armed Forces unit they were at first able to resist and to run away. In Ilyas Lebee's hiding place were found a number of GHT documents in a dilapidated lean-to, surrounded by two and one-half hectares planted to marijuana.

Four Leaders Sought

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 12 Jul 82 p 12

[Excerpt] Banda Aceh, KOMPAS--According to information available to the Aceh Special Branch Office, there are four other GHT leaders who are still being sought. They are: Hasan Tiro, who calls himself "Chief of State of Free Aceh;" Dr Husaini Abdullah, "Minister of the Interior of Free Aceh;" Dr Zaini, "Minister of Health;" and Daud Paneuh, "Commander of the Armed Forces of Free Aceh." However, according to the Special Branch Office, these four leaders and their followers are under increasing pressure, since the people of the area are joining in the effort to wipe out the Hasan Tiro Movement.

'KOMPAS' VIEWS SOMARE'S COMEBACK IN PNG

BK131425 Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 6 Aug 82 p 4

[Editorial: "The Return of the Somare Government"]

[Text] Michael Somare has returned as prime minister of Papua New Guinea. He replaced Sir Julius Chan following his victory in the general elections held in June.

In this country of 2.6 million people, political life is marked by tribal loyalty and rivalry. Sir Julius Chan, an economist, was deputy prime minister in the first Somare government. He withdrew from the government, joined another party and succeeded in toppling Prime Minister Somare through a no confidence motion in parliament. Julius Chan's coalition parties were defeated by the Pangu Party led by Somare in the June general elections.

Michael Somare is not merely the prime minister but was one of the prominent leaders of Papua New Guinea's independence struggle and his image as a national leader is the strongest among them.

As a newly emerging nation with a tribal background, Papua New Guinea is faced with two basic tasks simultaneously, that is, to develop an integrated nation and identity while building socioeconomic infrastructures.

In view of their background, the Somare-Julius Chan combination could serve as cooperating leaders to meet these requirements, but as in many other countries this ideal combination cannot be realized. Now Julius Chan is on the opposition benches. Nevertheless as the mover for national integration and identity, Somare's image is stronger. The phase for developing national integration and identity also requires special attention.

Indonesia is interested in the stable development of Papua New Guinea which shares a border with Irian Jaya. Prime Minister Somare and the other leaders are aware that a good neighborly relationship with Indonesia is the strategic key for regional stability to create a climate conducive to national development.

The two countries have developed good relations through realization of the charter of cooperation and through an exchange of visits between leaders and officials. The good relationship between the two countries has repeatedly been disturbed by border issues and border traffic. Elements in Irian Jaya who still do not wish to be integrated into the Indonesian nation have sometimes fled to Papua New Guinea.

There is an agreement between the two sides on how to deal with these problems. There have been misunderstandings on several occasions because of press reports, but these have not shaken the foundations of the good relations and good will of the two sides.

Apart from the border issue, Indonesia provides broad opportunities for cooperation with Papua New Guinea in various sectors, such as agriculture and education. Indonesia is the natural mainstay for Papua New Guinea in its efforts to strengthen and foster its place in the Asian region.

Prime Minister Somare probably is more aware and sensitive to these problems. Therefore, he will seek the best solution to any border issue. And should there be another border issue, it is clear that this will not be permitted to affect the growing strength of the relations and cooperation based on good neighborliness.

ACTIONS IN E. JAVA TO BE STEPPED UP, PROLONGED

BK181223 Hong Kong AFP in English 0811 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Report by Gilles Bertin]

[Text] Jakarta, 18 Aug (AFP)--Indonesian authorities are to step up and prolong order-keeping operations among East Java's 28 million habitants until October following bloody clashes between villagers, backed by plainclothes policemen and soldiers, and gangs of bandits and witchdoctors.

The police have for the first time admitted that order-keeping operations were being carried out since January this year in the Jember and Bondowoso districts where 40 people were reported killed so far.

According to East Javanese police chief General Pamuji, the operations are not against the witchdoctors but are only against the criminal.

The Indonesian press has so far not been allowed to give any detailed accounts of the incident.

The joint army-police operations will continue until October and cover a few more districts in East Java, about 1,000 km (620 miles) from the capital, well-informed sources here said.

Dozens of people have been arrested since the hunt for bandits and criminals started in January following the murder of a policeman by a dozen members of the local "mafia," the sources said.

Plainclothes police, assisted by villagers, have launched "punitive operations" against tukang santet (witchdoctors) practising black magic and bromocorah (bandits), who have created a climate of fear in the Jember and Bondowoso districts with revenge and terror by extortions and robberies.

Local sources said the peasants and villagers supported the punitive expeditions.

Although the mountainous volcanic region is considered to be a stronghold of orthodox Moslems, it is deeply influenced by Javanese or Kebatinan mysticism. inherited from very ancient religions which believe in supernatural powers, inward feelings and black magic.

The anger of the villagers and plainclothes policemen who were believed to have acted without orders from their superiors, was triggered by the murder of a policeman but also by constant lootings of their livestock and criminal acts by witchdoctors, an intellectual from that region said.

The tukang santet, said to possess all kinds of occultic powers and practise black magic rejected by the Kebatinan people, are also fortune-tellers and exorcists.

The witchdoctors, many of whom have been killed during the punitive operations, are sometimes assisted by the bromocorah, men who work for the highest bidder.

The bromocorah, the majority of whom come from Madura Island a few kilometres from the East Javanese coast, are well-known for being hot-blooded. These dangerous fighters always carry a clurit, a traditional sickle-type weapon with a tapering blade, and are said to have close relations with the local "mafia."

They are also hired for vendettas between rival families or villages.

The Moslem opposition in the capital question the real aim of such punitive operations in East Java where the NU [Nahdatul Ulama] faction of orthodox Moslems of the Moslem PPP Party (United Development Party) has a strong support.

NU, which merged with the PPP in 1973, includes the elements most opposed to President Suharto's new order.

Some Moslems believe that the operations are aimed at intimidating supporters of NU and maintaining a substantial military presence in East Java.

It was recalled that 45 people were reported killed in similar incidents in January last year. At that time, an influential PPP parliamentarian (of the NU faction), Yusuf Hasyim, said in addition to witchdoctors and criminals, several ulemas (Moslem priests) were killed for political reasons.

His charges contradicted official statements on the killings published by Indonesian newspapers which are strictly controlled by the authorities.

TRADE CHIEF REVEALS FOREIGN TRADE FIGURES, INTERNAL POLICIES

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 14 Jul 82 pp 2, 4

[Interview with Mr Inhom, Trade Chief Concerned with Trade Circles by a Reporter from SIANG POSASON; date and place not given]

[Text] Trading is an important lever in the period for the transformation and construction of socialism in our country.

To obtain clear information concerning that work, our reporter interviewed Mr Inhom Vinit, acting chief of Lao State Trade, who told us that the Lao State Trade is the only company that deals with foreign trade and distributes goods to and buys from many different localities all over the country.

Mr Inhom said that in the first six months of this year the Lao State Trade has carried out the policy of the party and government, and attentively and actively carried out its work. For example, in buying and exchanging the company has sent goods and capital to different localities depending on the ability of each province for use in buying and exchanging the produce from the people. In the past six months they were able to purchase and exchange 2000 tons of coffee, 17,299 tons of gypsum, 76,860 tons of tin, 48,599 rattan sticks, and a quantity of cardamom worth over 43 million [kip].

As for circulation and distribution, Mr Inhom said that the State Trade sells wholesale to each province periodically, and the provinces provide distribution to different localities. In the past six months they sent goods to different localities calculated to be 41.55 percent of the plan, worth 480,376,098 kip. This included supply goods and industrial goods. The difficult problem in carrying out this work was that the goods did not arrive at the time they were needed.

As for foreign trade, Mr Inhom said that we exchanged goods between other socialist countries such as Vietnam, the Soviet Union, Hungary, Bulgaria, and the German Republic based on the agreements signed by both sides. We sent coffee, plywood, logs, lumber, wood, resin, peanuts, Stick lac, rattan, tin, tobacco, and handicraft products in exchange for machines and indispensable goods. Moreover, the Lao State Trade exchanged and ordered goods from capitalist countries.

Mr Inhom said at the end that in order to implement the plan of the Third Congress of the LPRP, from now on the Lao State Trade will improve the prices in order to encourage production, especially the price exchange between industrial and agricultural goods, and will encourage localities to improve, deepen, and spread the trade base throughout the country. Meanwhile, they will do the best they can to ensure that the transportation and distribution of goods is carried out on time. Foreign trade will be pursued most aggressively with socialist countries.

SRV AID PROJECTS, REPAIR FACTORY DESCRIBED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 13 Jul 82 p 2

[Text] Factory 250 C under Group 64 is located on the bank of the Ma River, Thanh Hoa Province; it is less than 100 km from the Vietnam-Laos border.

The factory was built only two years ago. Housing and other things are being worked on so that the front part of the factory, in particular, will not only be used to repair 250 vehicles a year based on the plan, but also will advance to double that amount. That is the order which is the state law and is also the goal of the factory, which aims to respond to the need of vehicle and all kinds of machine repairs of Group 64 that regularly goes to construction sites and roads to help the LPDR from the north to the south.

Almost all of the cadres, workers, and state employees of the factory are those who once helped building many different important routes within the country, for example, routes 6, 7, 9, 13, and others. On these routes there are many vehicles continually transporting friendship goods, and contributing in the construction and protection of the Lao allies.

In the ceremony for awarding the independence medal first class of the LPDR government to Group 64, Comrade Sanan Southichak, Minister of Public Works and Transportation, said that they helped Laos build many different routes thousands of kilometer markers long, and also they built tens of bridges. It is a very simple matter to calculate superficially only the numbers of roads and bridges they built, and how many kilometers they did in the land and riverine survey. However, it is not as easy as that. The construction sites they built were all thick jungle full of thorns will tall mountains and steep abysses, in the most remote areas. At these places the cadres and workers endlessly and determinedly cleared the land, dug mountains, and filled water ditches and abysses to build many different roads. In some places it is very cold in winter, and very hot like burning fire in summer. However, they managed to make it, especially during the time they worked against the war of aggression, when the American imperialists fiercely bombed and destroyed different routes by airplanes. These comrades did not think of their own lives. When the enemy destroyed [the routes] in the daytime, they would repair them at night. Many comrades were injured and lost their lives, which was the greatest sacrifice of all.

With this brilliant heritage along with the experience of the cadres and workers, recently they have not only paid attention to repairing many transportation vehicles and tractors from construction sites and communications routes in Laos, but also are hurriedly completing the last portion of the AB Fan Bridge which is 50 meters long. This brigade will be built in Ham along route 6 in the northern region of Laos.

Over a year preceding this the factory received orders from Group 64 to build and finish laying out the hardwood used for columns and secondary components in order to help the barge port in Khoua District, Phong Saly Province. This was to convert from pulling the barges with Kano vessels to pulling them with cables: instead, in order to release many automobiles that were crowded there because of a lot of water, and it is urgent work. However, the materials, especially steel from the factory, is not the right size. If we have to wait for the requisition and approval from the higher echelons it would be delayed. There were many discussions concerning the techniques and there were many opinions expressed. Finally, the factory had to make new plans which involved welding 2 pieces of stainless steel together to make it thick enough to the level marked "Fi" which is outside of the pulley.

In this way the factory managed to make it through its difficulties, and to ensure its production rate. It completed the plan 3 days ahead of schedule. This helped to speed up route 42 B for use while there was a lot of water.

Comrade Nguyen Van Nhuan, director of the factory, added that "in 1980 the factory was confronted with so many difficulties that we thought we would not make it, e.g., the lack of skilled workers, and materials and equipment. Also, they had to produce, continue to expand the factory, and complete many different types of construction. For these reasons they struggled until September only to complete 48 percent of the plan. The guidance committee of the factory met regularly to study and organize the competition with the special friendship between Vietnam and Laos, and score achievements to celebrate the heritage of the fifteenth anniversary of the aid to Laos by Group 64, along with other economic measures. Therefore, when we calculated only the last quarter of the year, the fact is that the factory completed 52 percent of the whole year's plan. Moreover, the factory transferred ten thousand Dong of its profits to its government.

If you have a chance to visit factory C 250 now you will see the new physical labor for serving and steadily improving the communications route construction in the neighboring country.

SOUTHERN EX-INSURGENTS DESCRIBE HARD LIFE IN MAQUIS

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 9 Jul 82 p 2

["Talking Together" Column by S. Phoutsadi: "Fate of the Misled"]

[Text] Being angry, hateful, and tired of the deceptive propaganda of the reactionaries who are the henchmen of the imperialists and Chinese reactionaries, and seeing their own fate that they would not make it, on 27 April and 21 May 1982 a number of misled people decided to return to their homeland in Khong and Sanasomboun Districts, Champassak Province. These people brought their weapons with them and gave them to the local administrative authorities. These included 2 B-40 rocket launchers, 1 B-41, 2 CB, 3 AK's, 1 M-16, 1 [Hanley], and 1 AS, along with a number of bullets. It was a good path that led them to progress. The local administrative authorities and their relatives welcomed and praised them highly. Then it was time for these ex-insurgents to disclose their hard life and the evil deeds of the exile groups to reporters, the masses, and their own relatives. Since they had fled from their homes and families, their situation and standard of living was very poor; the clothes they wore were all torn. Each day all they did was steal and loot the people's property. Food was always short. They did not have cloth and clothing. Each day they went to stop and loot vehicles in order to take things from the people. Whichever house they entered they cleaned out everything. It was an extremely hard life. No matter how far the marsh and mountains were, they went there because they were afraid the liberation soldiers would ambush them. If they did not enter a village they would not have food to eat. Another thing they were afraid of the most were guerrillas. There were many times that they almost were killed when the guerrillas ambushed them. As for money, from the day they left to the day they returned they did not see any kip or bank att. Whenever and wherever they looted any vehicles, all of the money went to the boss. The henchmen did not get any. Most of the money was hidden to give to girls. When sickness occurred there was no medicine and no one to take care of them. From what was happening they could see their own future, and they realized that they and the group had taken the wrong way, and had been deceived by the reactionary traitors and were involved in psychological warfare. If they stayed there any longer they would have committed crimes against the country and the people. Their fate would undoubtedly be sealed. Therefore, the best way was to escape from the undesirable fate that was full of guns of the reactionary traitors, and they decided to return to their homeland and to their children, wives, and parents. The local administrative authorities always welcome and forgive and educate and train them to be good citizens, to raise their standard of living, so that together with their relatives they can build and enrich their new lives.

'NEW STRAITS TIMES' COMMENTS ON LEE KUAN YEW VISIT

BK240823 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 23 Aug 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Closer Ties"]

[Text] While it is too early to tell how fulfilling the visit of Mr Lee Kuan Yew will be, the agreements reached and the positive mood that dominated during our prime minister's visit to the republic last December are themselves a strong assurance that both leaders are not likely to allow any let-up in the common effort to strengthen close bilateral cooperation. Indeed the very gesture of Mr Lee's reciprocating the visit is an expression of optimism and faith that another milestone will be reached in firming relations. On the Malaysian side, there could not be any other response but welcome for the effort to continue the fine start made in December. What was significant then was not just the settling of nearly all the outstanding bilateral issues but also the rapidity and spirit of compromise with which it was carried out. These, it can be expected, will prevail as well in the talks here.

Part of the aims of the visit is to establish further working relations between the ministers accompanying Mr Lee and their Malaysian counterparts. This in effect would mean a furtherance of the pledge by both prime ministers that there should be more people-to-people contact, and this not merely on occasions when there are bilateral problems. The establishing of a viable working and social relationship between those in the second echelon of leadership promises not just the swifter resolving of contentious bilateral issues that may crop up in the coming months and years.

During the Singapore premier's brief visit, further proposals put forward are likely to include those which will strengthen economic cooperation. Given the large and varied delegation, it would not be surprising if concrete plans are also made to further joint activities relating to not just political and economic affairs but also cultural and social. Whatever, the climate between the two governments has never been better.

NO CONSENSUS REACHED ON RUBBER GROUP'S MARKET MOVE

BK191335 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Members of the Association of National Rubber Producing Countries [ANRPC] have not reached a consensus on the implementation of a decision to withhold 350,000 tons of natural rubber from the world markets. The minister of primary industries, Datuk Paul Leong, said this in [words indistinct] today after meeting the menteri besar [chief minister], Datuk Sri Syed Nahar Shahabuddin. The ANRPC countries were to have discussed the question in Jakarta last month, but the meeting was postponed. However, a meeting is expected to be held in Kuala Lumpur on Monday.

Datuk Leong says Malaysia will hold firmly to the decision and is prepared to implement it to ensure the stability of the rubber price. The decision to withhold 350,000 tons of rubber from the world markets was for implementation during the second half of this year.

Datuk Leong says: If the move is implemented it will help to stabilize the natural rubber market, which is now weak. Datuk Leong also disclosed that producing countries will discuss the question of reducing production, because this is important to safeguard the future of the commodity.

He said the government is sympathetic to smallholders, who are affected by the poor price and had taken several early measures to help them. The Malaysian Rubber Development Corporation and Rubber Industries Smallholders Development Authority have been directed to buy latex direct from smallholders, while in the long term the Primary Industries Ministry and the Ministry of Trade and Industry will take steps to encourage more usage of natural rubber locally.

SARAWAK SECURITY COMMAND--The Rajang Security Command [Rascom] in Sarawak will not be abolished as long as the communist threats in the 3d, 6th and 7th divisions persist. The chief minister, Datuk Patinggi Haji Abdul Taib Mahmud, says though the security situation is under control, the need to abolish Rascom does not arise for the time being. The chief minister, who is chairman of the State Security Committee, also says there is no question of the government negotiating with communist remnants in the Rascom area since the government does not recognize them. He adds that the government is practicing an open door policy where the terrorists can rejoin society instead of continuing their futile struggle in the jungle. POSITIVE, NEGATIVE ASPECTS OF FEDERAL BUDGET DISCUSSED

[Article by Irshad Ahmad Haqqani: "Positive and Negative Aspects of the Financial Budget for the Fiscal Year 1982-83"]

[Text] It is seldom that the budget presented by the finance minister of a country comes up to the expectations of people from all walks of life. The reason for the mixed reaction to the budget for the coming fiscal year presented by Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan is that he had to keep in mind mutually opposed demands. If, on the one hand, he was expected to accelerate development programs, then on the other hand there were others who vehemently demanded that relief be provided to the most segments of the population possible, and that inflation and price increases be kept under control. That it is impossible to keep in mind the expectations of both these groups at the same time is self-evident. Among those demanding relief were, first, government employees and other salaried persons and, second, groups of people connected with industry and trade, who were clamoring not only for increasing the limit of taxable income but were also demanding a number of other concessions and benefits. As for the government, it was forced to increase defense spending to a certain extent. It required more funds for the payment of interest and loans and the size of development programs had to be increased, which meant that the government required more resources. The path chosen by the finance minister to overcome these difficulties was, in his opinion, the best under the present conditions. Any other course of action, according to him, would have been still less acceptable and more painful.

If we glance at the finance minister's speech, his difficulties and limitations and also his proposals, it becomes clear that the main reason for our economic difficulties is that as a nation we were no longer adhering to the principle of living within our means. Currently, everybody seems to be engaged in a race to raise the standard of living. Even though every group is contributing to this according to its capacity, the major responsibility for the worsening of the situation rests with the well-to-do and wealthy class. A second and equally important reason is that the administrative structure of the country has become so huge and has grown so out of control that a great part of the country's resources is being spent to maintain this huge structure. Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan has announced a 7-percent reduction in all government spending, with few exceptions. But the elephant of administration has become so gigantic that its masters (the people) have to bear the great burden of providing it with huge quantities of food just to keep it alive. Despite tremendous demands by salaried persons and businessmen. the finance minister did not extend the limit of taxable income, even though both these groups had advanced powerful arguments in support of their demand. A salaried individual has to declare the total amount of his salary. He cannot conceal it even if he wished to do so. In these days of inflation and growth in the necessities of life, to demand income tax from a person receiving a salary of 1,000 rupees per month can in no way be said to be fair. Both government and nongovernment employees who receive a monthly salary of 1,000 rupees per month deserve an increase in their remuneration, and rather than be burdened with tax, they should be offered help to pull themselves out of poverty. But the finance minister could not provide any relief to this class of people simply because more than half of the country's income tax is obtained from salaried persons. If the taxable limit were to be increased, the government would be deprived of a significant amount of its revenue, something it is not prepared for under the present circumstances.

Businessmen earning an income of 1,000 rupees a month have to resort to various tactics to escape taxation, and as some observers have stated, by maintaining the present taxable level this class has been shown new ways of cheating the government. Among them, the people who are really honest and do not wish to render inaccurate account at any cost are really in trouble, because they do not know how to pay their taxes, and if they don't pay their taxes they do not know how to appease their pricking conscience. The finance minister has not provided them relief either, because he thinks that they have already concealed quite a lot of their taxable income and if they were given further relief, the government would be deprived of revenue from this sector. The government's position resembles that of a starved person who is never satisfied and is all the time clamoring for more. Therefore, until the government decides to limit its gigantic administrative machinery, people cannot expect to get any relief. The only solution would be to reduce the number of unnecessary personnel as well as the number of offices and prevent the burden of administrative expenses from increasing every year. Remarks by some people to the effect that even though the country is reduced by half, the administrative expenses have multiplied a number of times, are not far from wrong. Government employees must be provided with necessary benefits and remuneration, and whatever increase is incurred in expenses as a result of this action must be borne. But to continue employing more and more people, creating new positions in offices and departments and increasing the number of government employees continuously is not a wise action. Instead, the government should refrain from getting involved in unnecessary official duties. Every effort should be made to get the maximum possible work out of the minimum number of employees. To simplify government procedure, it is not enough to take official measures; revolutionary changes are needed. Alternative sources of employment should be created in industry, trade and agriculture. If the elephant of the administration is allowed to get plumper, then the day is not far off when the government will be forced to use major portion of national resources just to feed it, thus making it still more difficult to provide resources for development projects and social welfare.

[Article by Irshad Ahmad Haqqani: "Positive and Negative Aspects of the Financial Budget for Fiscal Year 1982-83"]

[Text] The second most important reason for the economic difficulties facing our country is the disproportionate use of our resources. The finance minister himself has acknowledged that the rate of consumption in Pakistan is much higher than that of most other countries in the world and that we consume 80 percent of our national income. In this sad state of affairs, development cannot be accelerated and social and economic justice cannot be administered. The finance minister's information that we waste 1 billion rupees on tea, tobacco and imported drinks is neither a new revelation nor does it give the full picture of our profligacy. There is an abundance of luxury articles in the country. The major portion of the 3 billion rupees coming to Pakistan from abroad is spent on consumer goods and for raising the everyday standard of living. Ever since this new source of income was created, if plans had been carefully devised to utilize the money wisely and sensibly, not only would there have been no inflation, rise in prices and increase in unhealthy competition, but abundant resources would also have been made available for progress and development. Even today, 7-8 years after this new source of income came into being, there is no consolidated official plan for putting it to good use. Even the people who have been receiving this wealth have not been able to save it, nor have they used it successfully for productive purposes. In fact, the plight of our nation just now resembles that of an extravagant and careless person addicted to pleasure, one who is not in the least concerned about the necessities of the future and who believes in the proverb: "Give yourself to pleasure and enjoyment because you will not come back to this world a second time." Every group and every individual, except for those who really have no worldly possession, indulges in spending more than its income and outdoes others in the mad race to raise its standard of living higher and higher. We have been declaring aloud our commitment to Islam, but at the same time we are becoming more materialistic than ever. Wealth, money and material ease and comfort have become the religious faith of this nation and people consider every effort directed at this goal as reasonable. Unfortunately, among vast sections of people in this country, an image of Islam has become popular that though it may not envisage love of wealth as an element of religious conviction, at the same time does not prohibit it, either. People possessing property worth millions of rupees and with incomes in hundreds of thousand of rupees are seen to applaud the virtues of Islam day and night and look on their wealth as a blessing from God; they consider the highest standard of living and most extravagant life style as a benevolence of God. But they do not realize that they are violating the teachings of Islam, which advocates simplicity, frugality and moderation. Neither do they ever think of the requirements and necessities of their less fortunate brothers, sisters and children living in deprivation. There are among them some people who help in the name of God and religion but who nevertheless continue to amass wealth through all possible illegal means and consider spending lavishly on themselves and their family as their inherent right.

The entire elite class is engaged in an illegal race to amass wealth, while the authorities do nothing to change this tendency and create an atmosphere of sense and understanding. The bitter truth is that the government is very popular among these extravagant people, and perhaps this is why the authorities cannot take effective measures to change their ways and manners, their extravagance and wastefulness. Prudent people well versed in the true perceptions of Islam and the Islamic way of life know that Islam prohibits materialism, limitless craving for worldly pleasure, abundance of ease and comfort and imprudent use of resources. There is no place for a show of splendor in Islam. Islam advocates simplicity and teaches that minimum use should be made of resources for personal or family requirements. If these true Islamic traits were to be reflected in our national life, most of our economic difficulties would be solved and, at the same time, demands for progress and development could be met and social justice could be provided with available resources.

The finance minister has declared that the measures to be adopted to make up for the loss due to the deficit in the budget are the most appropriate under the circumstances. But the fact is that by imposing a 5 percent surcharge on all imports, he has provided ample incentive for an increase in prices, as a result of which advantages gained by the government will be far less than the difficulties created for the people. To say that because of this surcharge there will be a very negligible increase in prices is, to say the least, unrealistic. We believe that our guess--that as a result of budgetary proposals there will be an increase of 15-30 percent in the price of goods within a few months--will prove to be correct. As it is, due to disproportionate relationship between the rupee and the dollar, imports are already expensive. Now, with the imposition of the surcharge, these prices will be increased two and threefold. By the time these goods reach the customers, it will not be difficult to predict the dreadful increase in prices. The increase in the price of gasoline is attributed to the increase in the value of the dollar. Even though the price of gasoline in the world market has gone down because of an increase in the value of the dollar, it is said that we are not able to obtain it at reduced rates. In the past prices of gasoline products were increased because of an increase in their rates in the world market. But now it is said that because of the disproportionate relationship between the value of the rupee and the dollar, the value of the rupee has decreased and the cost of oil has increased. Hence, an increase in the price of oil. No matter what the government gains as a result of the surcharge on imports and the increase in the price of gasoline, the man on the street will have to pay much more and hence the loss suffered by the people will be manifold.

Juggling of statistical figures is quite another matter. An economic survey shows that in the first three quarters of this year the increase in the wholesale prices of commodities was 3.6 percent, whereas the finance minister says that up to April this increase was 6.3 percent. It is also asserted that inflation has been kept to a single digit. It is difficult to say how true this claim is, but the experience and observation of the man in the street does not enhance his faith in the authenticity of these claims. People have seen the hike in the prices of consumer goods.

The prices of consumer goods in the evening are different from those in the morning, and, similarly, the prices next morning differ from those of the previous evening. Why there is no conformity between one's observations and experience and official statistics is hard to explain. Official sources may have a clue to this puzzle, but the man in the street does not.

Besides the increased hardships arising as a result of the budget, and more to follow in the weeks ahead, there is another difficulty that looms large over their heads. There are reports that after the holy month of Ramadan, the government will gradually increase the prices of most other goods and services. Some policy decisions have already been made, but in view of certain expediencies, their implementation has been postponed. About 1,000 medical items are being decontrolled, as a result of which a hike of 60 to 125 percent in their prices is expected. Mr Ghulam Ishaq Khan, in his press conference immediately after he presented the budget, gave no assurance that in the coming months there will be no increase in the prices of goods and services in the government sector. This indicates that the predictions of circles expressing fears about a rise in prices of edible oil, wheat, cement, tea, electricity and water were not far from the truth. As a result of all these measures, the graph of prices in the next 4-6 months will rise significantly. For the average person, it will become still more difficult to maintain the balance between body and soul. Regardless of the difficulties and preferences of the government and the finance minister, and however much they may believe that they are steering the country's economy in the most prudent way, people in the middle and lower class cannot applaud the government's efforts. For them, the immediate difficulties are more real and important. People as a rule do not care so much for lofty claims and rosy predictions for the distant future. They are concerned with immediate problems and difficulties. If the finance minister prepared the country's estimates of income and expenditures in such a way that there were no possibility of any increase in prices, then it would not have been difficult to draw applause from the people for his financial capabilities. During the coming fiscal year, the government would like to print more than 5.7 billion rupees in bills. The taxes imposed by the government amount to 50 million rupees, which will be transferred as a burden on the public in the form of taxes totaling 150-200 million rupees. This will further intensify the seriousness of the twofold misfortune already facing the people, namely, inflation and higher prices. If, under such circumstances, the people were told that the gross national product would increase by more than 6 percent, this would sound like a melody sung in the distant hills and hardly audible to their ears.

Benefits provided for government employees in the new budget, though at first glance appearing to be quite sizeable, in reality are not. The salaries of the lower grade employees will be raised by 50 to 100 rupees, which is much less than their requirements, expectations and demands. Therefore, since the presentation of the budget, some of these employees have started expressing dissatisfaction at the relief provided to them. The Ministry of Education has the largest number of government employees, and among them, school teachers constitute the highest proportion. Those receiving the rent allowance for the first time will be satisfied to a certain extent with the increase in the new cost of living allowance. But the raise the other employees will receive will not be sufficient to cover the hike in prices resulting from the present budget. How they will cope with the rise in prices already in place is hard to say. The only way to help these people is to strengthen the value of the rupee and improve its buying power. Unfortunately, the chances of such measures appear to be remote. The fact is that whatever has been given to the government employees with one hand is being taken back with the other hand. The sense of deprivation will remain unchanged. If, in the coming months, the prices of goods and services were to register a further increase, then the raise given to them will be no more than a joke. The least that the government can do to alleviate their suffering is to freeze the prices of flour, edible oil, tea, sugar, medicine, electricity and water at the present level and maintain them there at least until the next budget.

The Ushr part of the Zakat and Ushr Ordinance has been suspended for 2 years. It has now been decided to bring it back into force with effect from the next spring harvest. Even though, like zakat, imposition of ushr is nominal, it will certainly be described as a very big step in the right direction. It is important that great attention be given to the attainment and disbursement of the amount collected from ushr. The zakat committees that have been entrusted with achieving ushr came into being as a temporary measure and elections held for the committees recently came under extensive criticism. It is necessary to consider ways and means to improve arrangements for achieving and disbursing ushr. It is estimated that in the initial stage, approximately 100 million rupees can be collected through ushr, about 1.5 times the amount that can be collected from zakat. This large sum should be used for purposes strictly in accordance with Islamic law.

Certain circles have criticized another aspect of the budget in particular. They complain that promises for doing away with interest have not been fulfilled even after the appointed time and there are no indications when this will be done. This criticism carries weight and deserves attention. The importance of ending interest in an Islamic economic system is self-evident. The fact is that Islam gives top priority to eradicating the curse of interest as a first step in ending exploitation, to doing away with the amassing of wealth and to providing social justice. Once interest is eradicated, serious social inequities will automatically diminish significantly. In an Islamic economic system, the eradication of interest is more important than the implementation of zakat and ushr, not less. There is no doubt that the eradication of interest requires more effort and more revolutionary thought and action. As some observers have remarked, progress toward an interest-free economy, after years of careful consideration, does not seem to be too difficult. It has now become clear that if agreement could be made to protect the interests of certain privileged classes, then it should not be difficult to make progress in the direction of an interest-free economy. It must be acknowledged that whatever measures have been taken in the matter have been highly unsatisfactory and of a preliminary nature. The need for bold and sincere progress prevails with full force. If we have to move forward toward the establishment of an Islamic system, there is no alternative but to adopt an Islamic system of economy, and the eradication of interest is the most important factor in this system. Furthermore, it is regrettable that the government spokesmen have not given any reason for not being able to fulfill the promises made concerning interest in January 1979. They have neither apologized nor have they thrown any light on their future aims and objectives in the matter as to how soon progress might be expected. Silence on the subject can only give rise to adverse reations and comments.

PRESIDENT COMMENTS ON HIJACKING--President Gen Mohammad Ziaul Haq has complimented the Punjab governor, the corps commander and the civil aviation authorities for successfully foiling the attempt of the hijacked Indian Airlines plane to land at the Lahore airport. The president, who had been kept informed of the entire situation, also appreciated the alertness and presence of mind of the authorities concerning for handling the incident under the supervision of the Punjab governor (?which forced) the Indian plane to return to India. Indian Ambassador in Islamabad K. D. Sharma told Radio Pakistan's representative that he was extremely grateful to the Pakistani authorities for their wholehearted cooperation in regard to this very unfortunate episode. He admired the efficiency of the Pakistani authorities in handling the situation. [Text] [BK210558 Karachi Domestic Service in English 1700 GMT 20 Aug 82]

FOUR ARRESTED IN ASSASSINATION--Rawalpindi, 17 Aug--The local police have arrested the four alleged assassins of Malik Shehzada Khan Halimzai, a SHOORA [consultative council] member who was recently assassinated here at Rahmanabad Chowk on Murree Road. The SSP [expansion unknown] Rawalpindi, Malik Sikandar Shaheen, told PPI here that the accused persons who belong to MARDAN were handed over to the local police through the political agent. The alleged persons, Nasim Ahmed, Parvez, Sher Mohammad and Dilawar Khan are under interrogation by the New Town police, who initially registered the case. The SSP added that it has been fully ascertained, the murder was a result of a tribal enmity between the deceased and another Malik.--PPI [Text] [GF211145 Karachi DAWN in English 18 Aug 82 p 12]

MRS BHUTTO VISITS DAUGHTER--Karachi, 6 Aug (AFP)--Begum Nasrat Bhutto, widow of executed former Pakistani President and Prime Minister Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, was allowed by the martial law authorities yesterday to meet her daughter Benazir, who is held under house arrest in their ancestral home in Larkana, family sources confirmed here today. It was the first meeting between the two women since Begum Bhutto was hospitalized for treatment of an ulcer in Karachi last month. Begum Bhutto and her daughter are outspoken political opponents of the military regime of President Mohammad Ziaul Haq, which overthrew Prime Minister Bhutto's regime in a bloodless coup in July 1977. They have been in detention since the hijacking in February 1981 of a Pakistani airliner to Kabul by supporters of her father. [Text] [BK070735 Hong Kong AFP in English 0353 GMT 7 Aug 82]

MINDANAO PAPER URGES PEACE TO PREVENT MARTIAL LAW

[Editorial: "Don't Give the President a Chance"]

[Text] When the president lifted martial law, he expressed the hope--which was practically a warning--that we would never have to declare martial law again. From all initial indications, the chief executive appeared bent on his decision not to reimpose military rule unless provoked by circumstances that would justify such reimposition.

This is now the crux of the problem that has been caused by the worsening peace and order situation in some sectors of the Philippines. While opposition is considered necessary in making a nation strong and credible, such opposition should be geared towards peace for all, irrespective of ideological conflicts. One should recognize the fact that the constitution gives the president of the Philippines tremendous powers that can spell the well-being of the country if headed by a compassionate, open-minded leader, but can spell disaster if given to one who considers peace and progress as last priority.

President Marcos has laid down his conditions for reimposition of martial law. Irrespective of one's evaluation of the president as a leader and irrespective of political beliefs, every Filipino should at least agree on one thing: violence must be abhorred in favor of better and more lasting solutions to the country's present-day problems. The president has more than once appealed for sobriety, making it clear at the same time that he cannot--and will not--tolerate loss of lives and loss of national honor through violence; otherwise, redeclaration of martial rule will not be impossible.

It would do well for all at this time to accept the challenge of the president in favor of peace. Filipinos should not give Mr Marcos another chance to declare martial rule. The country has tasted a "smiling" martial law for many years. The smile may no longer be there the next time around. The welfare of the majority should be the common objective of those in power and of those in the legitimate opposition.

HUMAN RIGHTS GROUP DETAILS ATROCITIES

OW132048 Hong Kong AFP in English 1734 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Report by Mario Baluyot]

[Text] Manila, 13 Aug (AFP)--At least (?157) people were killed in seven [words indistinct] executions by military personnel during the first six months of this year, a Philippine human rights group charged today.

A further 549 civilians were also arrested and detained illegally during the same period while some 217,600 villagers from six provinces were herded off into hamlets as part of the Manila government's anti-insurgency measures, the group, Task Force Detainees of the Philippines (TFDP), said.

The cases were set out in a documented report submitted to the Philippine Council for Human Rights (PCHR) meeting to assess results of fact finding mission that looked into the growing number of atrocities attributed to the military.

TFDP also reported cases of disappearances, strafing of villages and bombings which they claimed were part of the growing militarization of the Philippines since President Ferdinand Marcos declared his eight-year martial law regime in 1972.

The first massacre recorded by TFDP was on January 23, 1982. It cost the lives of five civilians from Labo, Camarines, Norte, some 340 kilometers (215 miles) southeast of Manila.

The second reported massacre had seven women and six suspected communist rebels killed eight days later in Roxas, Zamboanga del Norte in southern Philippines. Twelve people were also reported gunned down February 12 at Dumingan Township in Zamboanga del Sur while 14 more died May 25 from 16 bombs dropped allegedly by four Philippine military aircraft.

Other massacres reported by TFDP had eight civilians as victims in Hinunangan, southern Leyte, and seven children aged between 3-18 years in Ormoc, Leyte, both in central Philippines.

The seventh case placed five victims of a June 21 military raid in Pulo, Bulacan, just north of Manila. Press reports said the victims were communist rebels who engaged the government troopers in a running gunbattle.

TFDP attributed these growing military "atrocities" to "the worsening socio-economic and political crises" in the Philippines where, it said, those who were vocal about the problems "are maimed and made mute" while those who fight for restoration of basic rights "are called subversives."

The TFDP report debunked the government's claims of moving towards political normalization by citing what it called "grim statistics that showed a country under siege."

PAPER URGES ALL LEVELS APPLY HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY

HK210307 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 19 Aug 82 p 4

[Editorial: "The Olalia Precedent"]

[Text] In the sense that the arrest and detention of labor leader Felixberto Olalia, Sr., can be invoked in the future, the case is a precedent. It is an important case because it involves a well-known labor leader and because it moved the president to strongly reiterate that the "constitutional processes and the human rights of every citizen will be protected by the government and by the president."

The human rights record of the government as reflected by official acts at lower levels has not been unquestioned. In recent weeks torture was alleged by a suspected subversive, Horacio Morales, a former government official. His allegations moved the Supreme Court to appoint a fact-finding commissioner.

The cases of prominent figures who have allegedly run afoul of the law merit public attention. No less important in the final analysis are the cases of the "unknowns" in the provinces who may not have batteries of lawyers to defend them and who on account of their low social standing may be susceptible to abuse. The phrase "every citizen" is more meaningful when applied to these least protected members of our society.

For obvious reasons that message should be clearly understood and applied by the law enforcers in the provinces.

There the local civil and military authorities ought to strive to attain the elaborate procedure in compliance with due process as it is applied in metro Manila on the cases of eminent figures. For the rule of law demands nothing less.

If it is true that there were lapses in the past, the Olalia case ought to mark a point of departure, for the case has brought again to the fore the significance of human rights in our country.

It is clear the administration cannot afford to get trapped in the morass of rights violations simply because of irresponsibility at the low levels of the bureaucracy.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

HK210311 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 20 Aug 82 p 12

[Text] Enrique Zobel, president of Ayala Corporation, said yesterday that the hesitance of foreign investment in coming to the Philippines was "a question of confidence."

He told the Cebu Business Club in Cebu City: "Chief executive officers of some big foreign corporations who confide in me tell me that it is a question of confidence."

Zobel told Cebu businessmen further: "Big foreign investors need to be convinced that promises will not be broken and rules will not be constantly changed.

"A credibility gap is created, they say, when one government official says one thing and another government official says something else."

The Ayala boss said three principal reasons cited by foreign consultants in government for the low level of foreign investments in this country were: firstly, "inadequate incentives offered by the Philippine Government," secondly, "the uncoordinated efforts by the too many government organizations involved in attracting foreign investors have proved counter-productive" and, thirdly, "excessive red tape at immigration, customs, banking and investment-regulation agencies."

He said further: "The export processing zone system, designed to have an edge over other modes of attracting foreign investments and encouraging exports, has many discouraging factors, according to the president of the Confederation of Philippine Exporters.

"Apart from echoing the foreign consultants' report of inadequate government incentives, our exporters bewail the dismal state of telecommunications facilities and the bad roads leading to and from the Bataan export processing zone. Zobel proposed before the Cebu businessmen the conversion of Mactan Island into a special economic zone like Hong Kong and the five areas in the People's Republic of China, or a tax haven similar to those in the Bahamas or New Hebrides.

He added that Mactan could have its own customs check similar to the Johore (Singapore) setup, and could even issue its own freely convertible currency.

As a result, he explained, Mactan could be a venue for the physical operations of Philippine-based international banking and finance units, with appropriate infrastructure and independent and adequate international communications facilities.

As an added incentive, Mactan may even provide a business registry of convenience for ocean-going vessels and even aircraft.

Clarf Field Air Base in Angeles, Pampanga, according to Zobel, "is in essence a special economic zone with the consent and a concession from the Philippine Republic."

Even in Manila, he quipped, foreigners lease land owned by Filipinos for lengthy periods of time--25 to 50 years.

MANILA PAPER CONSIDERS SUCCESSION BILL

HK230156 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 22 Aug 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Succession Bill"]

[Text] Incisive minds have evidently been probing into the constitutional provisions regarding the role of the executive committee as temporary caretaker of the presidency in the event of the death, disability, removal or resignation of the president.

They have, with penetrating logic, concluded that in any of those events, the executive committee cannot:

1. Declare martial law or suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus.

2. Remove or replace any member or appoint any additional member of the committee.

3. Grant any reprieve, commutation or pardon, remit fines or forfeiture in cases involving security of the state.

4. Revise, abrogate or in any manner alter or substitute any project, program or policy of government previously approved. Two of the evils sought to be avoided by these limitations are the spectacle of the committee as a debating society and the abuse by the committee of its powers. These evils might lead to anarchy.

There is that danger in a collective leadership which though temporary has no tradition or experience of collegiality. Such peril does not exist in the scheme of succession provided for under the 1935 constitution. That constitution, provided for a vice president to assume the presidency if something untoward happens to the president.

It may, of course, be argued that under the present constitution the Supreme Court may be asked to exercise its power of judicial review to determine if a certain exercise of power by the executive committee or a part thereof is constitutional. However, if we take into account the ways of power politics court power may be inadequate or may come too late. In any case, there is no better alternative to legislative action that leaves no doubt about the powers of the executive committee, acting in its capacity as caretaker.

RURAL POVERTY REVELATIONS DISCUSSED

HK260121 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 25 Aug 82 pp 6, 10

[Article by Arlene Babst: "Businessmen, Journalists and Subversives"]

[Text] The Makati Business Club, composed of the biggest corporations in Makati and organized by one of its biggest businessmen, Enrique Zobel of the Ayala Corporation and the Bank of the Philippine Islands, among others, has compiled what it calls its "issues and prescriptions for 1982," a study of the ills and possible remedies involved in the country's growth and development.

The study grew out of the club's series of round-table conferences with other active groups such as the Philippine Economic Society, the Development Academy of the Philippines, the Asian Institute of Journalism, the National Defense College and the Ministry of Budget and Management.

And the dominant impression that emerged from such meetings, according to the club, is that: The main problem of national development is the growing inability of the Filipino people to participate in the planning of development and to share in its fruits.

The study points out that while the Philippine economy has grown rapidly and continuously for the past three and a half decades--a good performance by world standards, it adds--and while the country has attained middle income status with a national average personal income per household exceeding peso 24,000 per annum or peso 2,000 a month in 1980, the 3.8 per cent growth figure for 1981 and sectoral figures for the same year suffered from comparisons with sectoral growth rates of the 1960s and 70s.

Most importantly, the rising GNP has not reached the mass of the people, almost half of whom live below the poverty line.

In actuality, the families which enjoy the estimated peso 25,000 per capita in 1981 amount to only 30 per cent of all families.

The average income in the top 10 per cent is perhaps 20 times the average income in the bottom 10 per cent.

It is one thing when Jse Diokno recites statistics like these for the world; it is quite another when the biggest capitalists in the country repeat the same thing.

In their discussions on five major areas in Philippine development--poverty, communications, security, political economy and the budgetary process--these businessmen concentrated heavily on rural development.

Again and again in the report, they emphasized that the majority of our people live in the rural areas, and that it is there where the poorest Filipinos (mostly farmers) live, and that it is there where national security is most imperilled, and that therefore it should also be there, and not at the cultural center complex, that the greatest infusion of capital and management training is imperative.

Those familiar with Enrique Zobel's passion for land development and agriculture will wonder if he is not after all just the maverick farmer with the peculiar public image of this big business boss of the Ilustrado family that built Makati, this westernized, capitalist enclave where you find all these multinationals, diplomatic representatives of foreign powers (three of which were former colonizers), as well as that upper 10 per cent that has 20 times the average income of the bottom 10 per cent.

Mr. Zobel seems to have a sizeable chunk of the business community sharing his prejudice for agricultural development after all; who would have thought it of Makati?

Now that we know of the Makati businessmen's intense concern with bringing Makati-like progress to the hinterlands of central Luzon, Mactan and Marawi, it is timely to point out that rural development and a more equal distribution of the country's wealth are the very same demands that many a harassed journalist and a suspected subversive have tried to make, only they didn't have the respectability of a Makati businessmen's club.

The club, by the way, on its report's last page, extends some of its respectability to media, by advocating that: "Within the framework of national security, exercising arbitrary authority over the mass media, issuing or withdrawing permits to operate, banning programmes or suspending publications, confiscating papers, books, films, etc., and punishing journalists who do not conform to directives, should be avoided at all costs."

Amen, amen, I say unto you, Mr. Zobel and Co. should one of us also say, welcome to the club?

OUTFLOW OF LABOR SKILLS NOTED

HK260125 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 25 Aug 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Outflow of Skills"]

[Text] If the rate of exportation of skilled manpower continues and is not matched by the training programs, the country will surely run out of skills.

It should be noted that it is easier to export than to train. For training consists not only in imparting basic knowledge but also in experience. That may take years to accomplish.

Probably overseas demand for Philippine skills will continue in the next few years, for as the oilrich countries in the Middle East completes the construction of their plants they will need people from other countries to man the plants and service equipment.

If the outflow of skills is not restricted, many of our vital plants might run out of highly skilled technicians.

If it is amply shown that such will be the inevitable result, the government can restrict exportation and the legal instrument will be the police power of the state.

It is not difficult to imagine a situation in the near future where the foreign exchange earnings of certain prized technicians will be far outweighed by the losses to the economy caused by their employment abroad.

Probably a dilemma need not arise in particular cases because local employers may be able to approximate the wage scales and the benefits offered overseas.

The gloomy scenario that may give rise to legislation enacted in exercise of the police power may also be forestalled by a more vigorous training program in which the government and private business cooperate.

In any case proposed legislation must be backed up not only by complaints of shortage of skills but also by an authoritative study of supply and demand which in turn depends on local business conditions.

AID ASKED FOR DEPRESSED AREA

HK140217 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 13 Aug 82 pp 1, 13

[Text] Political leaders of the Samar and Leyte provinces asked the government yesterday to help their constituents, especially those living in depressed areas, in the wake of reports of a rift between the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) and the Social Democrats (SOCDEM).

The leaders urged the Ministry of National Defense to protect the people in the affected areas and help them economically by giving them "soft loans" so they can start their own backyard projects.

They also called on military authorities to do civic action work and construct roads and bridges.

"We fear that our constituents might be caught in the crossfire because of the rift between the CPP and the SOCDEM," said the leaders who asked not to be identified.

The rift reportedly developed over the issue of support for the CPP and the underground Social Democrats.

The religious radicals reportedly split into two factions, one supporting the CPP, the other the SOCDEM. Members of the SOCDEM call themselves Reformists, while some leaders of the Communist movement seek to overthrow the government, intelligence reports reaching the Defense Ministry said.

The report said most of the religious radicals belong to the SOCDEM faction.

The rift between the two factions has become acrimonious, according to lay leaders in the Samar-Leyte area.

The reported defection of eight priests to the dissidents reportedly triggered the rift. The military is now checking the activities of the eight priests.

In his visit the other day to Samar and Leyte, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile directed military authorities in the area to check on the revelations of northern Samar Bishop Angel Hobayan that the bishop had lost eight of the 27 priests in his archdiocese to the dissidents.

Meanwhile, a farmer in Abra was shot to death allegedly by the New People's Army under Fr. Conrado Balweg while the victim was plowing his field.

The victim was identified as Amante Bagas, a resident of San Ramon East in Manabo, Abra.

Balweg, a former parish priest of Sallapandan, Abra, and director of the Father Arnaldo High School in the same place, joined the NPA in Kalinga-Apayao when government authorities started looking for him for recruiting cadres for the CPP in his school and parish.

MANILA BUSINESS PAPER VIEWS STRIKE BAN ISSUE

[Text] While the labor minister's authority to issue strike bans, as provided by Batasang Pambansa bills 130 and 227, was primarily intended as a precautionary measure to ensure that strikes do not disrupt vital sectors of the economy, it has become more of the labor minister's sole means of stopping violence at the picket lines.

For example, Labor Minister Bals F. Ople recently issued another strike ban, at the Zamboanga Wood Products, Inc. in Zamboanga City. While Ople, in his certification of the labor dispute as one involving the national interest, pointed out that the firm is in a vital industry since it is an export-oriented firm with exports since 1979 amounting to $42.1 million, officials of the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE) noted that the incidence of violence as well as the threat of more violence at the picket lines were what really prompted Ople to issue the order.

The fact that the strike dragged on for nearly four months before Ople issued his order lends credence to the MOLE officials' interpretation. Zamboanga City Mayor Cesar Climaco and the firm's management had even wired President Marcos to stop the strike because of the incidence of violence at the picket lines. In his telegram, Climaco claimed that the strike "almost resulted in violence and a massacre when PC [Philippine constabulatory] troopers broke the picket line."

Ople's return-to-work orders in several other cases also indicated that the labor minister has utilized his authority to do so not so much on "vital industry" grounds as for the sake of "public order." The return-to-work order against the Ding Velayo Export Corp. strike which had dragged on for seven months was also prompted by reports to the labor minister that both the union and management had adopted hardline stances against each other which would inevitably lead to picket violence. That against Feltman Brothers Corp. was also prompted by reports to Ople that violence was likely because a rival union was threatening to break the picket lines of the union which called the strike. Ople also prohibited a strike at Pepsi-Cola Bottling Corp. two weeks ago after union members were implicated in the killing of a truck driver carrying Pepsi-Cola products.

Clearance: The labor minister's order to issue strike bans has appeared to be the government's sole means of stopping picket line violence now because, according to some MOLE officials' interpretation, President Marcos' directive to the Justice Ministry issued June requiring fiscals to first get a clearance from the MOLE before they could file charges against workers in a labor dispute has "virtually made police authorities helpless in picket lines." This is because fiscals now generally refuse to file charges against workers arrested by the police for allegedly committing violence in the picket lines.

A Labor Ministry official noted that Mr Marcos' order after top-level discussions with Justice Ministry representatives, has appeared to be so vague that it would require important clarification from the Justice Ministry. The official noted that, for example, while it is obvious that the police would have to arrest a striker flagrantly committing violence against management such as by breaking company cars, the wordings of the president's directive, make it appear that fiscals could not even file charges against the workers until the MOLE gives them clearance.

RESEARCHER VIEWS ECONOMIC PROSPECTS

[Text] The Philippine economy is not expected to recover from its growth slowdown until 1984, according to economist Bernardo M. Villegas, senior vice-president of Center for Research and Communication (CRC), who bases this belief on a forecast that the long-awaited upturn in the United States economic performance will be delayed.

Villegas' view contrasts with that of another leading analyst in CRC, Jesus P. Estanislao, vice-president for Industrial Economics, who has observed (BUSINESS DAY, July 22) a bottoming out of the domestic economic recession as of the second quarter. Saying "the worst is past," Estanislao gives weight to the Philippine economy's own "internal dynamics" which will provide the momentum for the recovery even while international conditions may continue to be adverse.

Speaking before the Philippine Automotive Association yesterday, Villegas said the economic "recovery will be delayed and the Philippine market will be soft for the whole of 1983." Even with a recovery predicted for the national economy by 1984, however, there would not be much of an improvement that the country's leading corporations can look forward to, if Villegas is to be believed.

"Big business in the Philippines," he said, "will be in trouble" for the next five years. He explained that "the very same advantages of big businesses in the '60s and the '70s are now their liabilities" such as big overheads and large workforces.

There is "no way (big businesses) can recapture their market in the '60s and '70s," Villegas said. This is because, he pointed out, "there is no hope for coconut" on which the Philippine economy is at present too dependent and the majority of the Filipinos rely for purchasing power. Pursuing the issue, he said, coconut is a relatively insignificant factor in the vegetable oil world market compared to African palm and soybean and "coconut prices will not improve until we can talk of productivity (in coconut) at four tons per hectare instead of the measly one ton per hectare now." However, Villegas thinks "towards the end of the decade, the Philippine economy may not be dependent on coconut anymore."

The weak purchasing power of the Filipinos does not reflect the last of the troubles of big business. Although Villegas points out "high interest rate need not be a deterrent to business growth if you know how to find opportunities." Big business, like small companies, complain over interest rates. Villegas thinks Philippine interest rates will continue to be above 20 percent until 1990.

MINDANAO PAPER CALLS FOR PROBE OF BOMB BLASTS

[Editorial: "Probe Those Bomb Blasts"]

[Text] The bomb blasts that rocked Davao City and the provinces Tuesday night are now the subject of speculations by the citizenry. Some are characterized by intelligent analysis of the occurrence, others by outright emotional outburst, and the rest by plain speculations. Because of the absence of any official result of the investigation now being made on the explosions, many have expressed the fear that the case might develop into fullblown violence to the detriment of an otherwise peaceful citizenry.

The San Pedro cathedral grenade-throwing incident in Davao City last year is still fresh in the minds of many who now think that the incident was one of the worst that ever happened in the city. For the public to be treated anew to another series of bomb explosions or grenade-throwing can only be interpreted by many as the unofficial start of more violent things to come. This is where a thorough probe of the incident becomes necessary. One should remember that a frightened city can only breed submissive citizens, and a submissive people can easily lose the desire to take active role in the progress or development of their community. If only for this reason the government and the private sectors should be able to work hand in hand towards investigating the rash of violence in Davao lately.

The people responsible for the explosions must be identified and investigated. The clamor for such probe is not only the right of a community that seeks protection from the authorities; it is also the duty of the protecting government to come up with satisfactory and credible explanation on the recent bomb or grenade explosions in Davao.

An investigation into the details of the incidents can help soothe an already tense community.

ARMY ATTENTION TO ABUSES--A Batasan minority leader expressed yesterday his support to the military for paying more attention to abuses committed upon the people by some irresponsible members of the armed forces (AFP). This policy is welcome in the face of reports of "massive disenchantment among the people towards the government to the extent that segments of the civilian population have been reported turning to subversive elements for justice," minority floor leader Mariano R. Logarta (Pusyon, Bisaya, Central Visayas) said. Logarta, who filed a resolution seeking Batasan support for the shift in policy, said, "The confidence, faith and support of the people are indispensable factors in the stability of government and are a guarantee for lasting conditions of peace and order in the country." In some areas of the country, he said, some people have started to think that "God in heaven and the authorities in Manila are too distant to reach." Logarta asked the Batasan to express the assembly's confidence and full support for the new policy enunciated by Gen. Fabian C. Ver, AFP [Armed Forces of the Philippines] chief of staff. He said the AFP move "is a clear antithesis to repression and a singular contribution to the cause of democracy in the country, without which no government effort can succeed in regaining the people's confidence, faith and support." GOVERNMENT IN CONTROL--Despite the resurgence of bombings in some areas in Mindanao this week, the government is in control of the situation. This was the assessment Monday of Maj. Gen Delfin Castro, commander of the Unified Southern Command (SOUTHCOM) of the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Castro, who was joined here by Brig. Gen. Jose P. Magno, Jr., commander of the Central Mindanao Command (CEMCOM), was briefed by Brig Gen Pedrito de Guzman, P.C. [Philippine Constabulatory Recom Reconnaisance Command] XI commander, on the peace and order situation in southeastern Mindanao following the grenade bombings in Digos, Davao Del Sur; Tagum, Davao Del Norte, and Davao City on August 3. SOUTHCOM is based in Zamboanga City, while CEMCOM is in Awang, Cotabato City. Castro said the terrorists were apparently out to sow terror on the civilian populace. Perhaps, he added, the forthcoming Islamic conference has something to do with the recurrent bombings "wherein the terrorists seemingly want to impress their Middle East supporters."

He said that many times the military had proven its capability to defend the citizenry against the depredations of terrotists. He said that development and progress in Mindanao can be achieved only in an atmosphere of peace. The SOUTHCOM chief said there are many development plans by the government for Mindanao, but they are hampered by the unstable peace and order situation in some areas, he added. COMMUNIST LEADER BREAKS JAIL--Jose Luneta, the secretary general of the Communist Party of the Philippines, has escaped from detention from Camp Bagundiwa in Metro Manila. He broke jail last Wednesday, but the escape was revealed only when he failed to appear at the hearing of the charges of subversion and gun-running yesterday before the military commission No 2. Luneta was the number two man in the Communist Party hierarchy, next to Jose Maria Sison. Philippine Constabulary authorities at Camp Crame refused to confirm or deny the reported escape of the number two communist in the country. Camp Bagundiwa Commander Brig. Gen. (Edgardo Alpaveto) was not available for comment on the reported escape of Luneta. [Text] [HK210051 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 20 Aug 82]

HOTEL SECURITY--Hotel security in Metro Manila is being tightened against the threat of an upsurge of urban terrorism next month. Chiefs of hotel security forces met yesterday and drew up stricter measures to protect hotel guests in the metropolis. (Renaldo Dumaz), the president of the Association of Hotel Security Officers of the Philippines, said the safeguards include meticulous searches of guests for guns and explosives, and the setting up of checkpoints at hotel entrances. The measures were drafted at a meeting of hotel security authorities and police officials in Makati yesterday. The police agreed with the move, but cautioned against causing undue panic among hotel guests in case of bomb threats and discoveries of explosives. The security moves were taken following the discovery of a subversive plot to unleash terrorism, assassinations, and nationwide strikes to disrupt the economy and the nation. BRIEFS

RUBBER DELEGATION--Hanoi, 2 Aug, VNA--Officials of the rubber production branch of Vietnam and Kampuchea met in Ho Chi Minh City on July 31 to exchange their professional experiences. Present at the meeting, on the Vietnamese side, were Do Van Nguyen, director of the Vietnam Rubber Agency, and experts who are helping Kampuchea in rubber production. The Kampuchean side included Nut Thon, director; Nham Henh, vice-director; and other officials of the Kampuchean Rubber Agency; and representatives of the Kampuchean Planning Ministry. The two delegations informed each other of the rubber production of their own country, and discussed measures to continue promoting their cooperation for higher efficiency in rubber production. In the immediate future, Vietnam will help Kampuchea restore and develop production and train managerial and technical cadres. On this occasion, the Kampuchean delegation visited a number of Vietnamese rubber production establishments. [Text] [OW071921 Hanoi VNA in English 1527 GMT 2 Aug 82]

ZIA SAYS NO BILATERAL DISPUTE WITH USSR

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 18 Aug 82 p 3

[Text]

RAWALPINDI, Aug. 17: President Gen. Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq has said he was keen to develop further the bilateral relations with the Soviet Union in all fields as this country was one of our great neighbours.

In a question answer interview given to the weekly 'Hurmat' Rawalpindi, President Zia-ul-Haq outlined the foreign policy of Pakistan and said that one of the basic objectives of Pakistan's foreign policy was to grow friendly ties with the Soviet Union like other neighbourly countries. The relations between the two countries, the President added, were based on the fact that "we have no bilateral dispute, with the Soviet Union".

The President said it was true that there were some differences on principle with the Soviet Union on the Afghanistan issue. The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, he said had not only created a number of problems for Afghanistan but it had also resulted in an enormous burden of more than 2.7 million Afghan refugees on Pakistan.

The President said that Pakistan has been striving hard to solve the Afghan problem through peaceful means. For this purpose Pakistan played a positive and constructive role at the recent talks in Geneva. The President expressed the hope that this process would soon provide a satisfactory and complete solution of the Afghan problem with the help of the United Nations.

Explaining the existing relations between Pakistan and Soviet Union, the President said that co-operation already existed in the economic field between the two countries. Concrete efforts were under way in various other fields at different levels. The Pakistan Steel and the electric power project at Guddu reflect the fruitful economic cooperation between Pakistan and the Soviet Union.

He emphasised that Pakistan was very keen to develop further the economic relations with the Soviet Union and would continue to find ways and means to achieve this object to the maximum level.

He said the cultural exchanges between the two countries were increasing day by day.

In his detailed interview, the President replied questions on the circumstances which led to his assumption of power in 1977, the achievements of his government during the last five years, the machinations of the anti-state elements to disrupt national unity and the government's action to foil them, the process of Islamisation in the country, the law and order situation and the genesis of the foreign policy now being followed by his government.—APP.

INVESTMENT ADVISORY CENTERS IN GULF BEING PLANNED

[Text]

LAHORE, Aug. 18: The Federal Government is actively considering a proposal to set up investment advisory centres in OPEC couptries and other countries where Pakistanis are in large concentration it is learnt here.

The major objective of these centres is to provide guidance and information to the Pakistanis working abroad about the investment opportunities in Pakistan and persuade them to invest a part of their remittances in the projects of national development.

The proposed centres would be supplied with investment literature on feasible industries.

At present there are 1.5 million Pakistanis working in various parts of the world. Of them about 84 per cent are production workers with 43 per cent unskilled and 41 per cent skilled labour.

Provincial break-up of overseas workers is: Punjab 70.4 pe cent, Sind, 14 per cent and NWFO and Baluchistan 11.70 and 3.9 pi cent respectively.

According to official estimates, the potential for continuing immigration is substantial and demand for labour from major labour importing countries has been projected to grow at a rate of 3.7 per cent per annum under a low growth assumption and at 4.6 per cent under a high growth assumption till the year 1985.

According to an official research a migrant consumes 62 per cent of his total income for personal requirements, invests 22 per cent in real estate and devotes the remaining 16 per cent to other forms of investment and saving in agriculture and industries sector.

With the setting up of the proposed investment advisory centres the government hopes that the investment by overseas Pakistanis in the country will get a boost and a major part of their remittances will be diverted to the projects of the national development.—PPI

MINISTER'S PLEA TO FORM ANTI-CORRUPTION BODIES

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 3

[Text]

RAWALPINDI, Aug. 18: Raja Mohammad Zafarul Haq, Federal Minister for Information and Broadcasting today called for mobilising collective efforts to stamp out corruption from society.

"The bribery has permeated the society like a cancer" the Information Minister said," an organised movement should be launched against this social evil lest it is too late".

He was speaking at the certificate/award giving ceremony had under the district council in connection with the Independence Day at Jinnah Hall here.

Raja Zafarul Haq said President Gen. Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq had recently pinpointed bribery as the ugly social evil which is corroding the entire fabric of society. "The government is determined to weild the authority of civil as well martial law to eradicate it," he said.

He called upon the people especially the councilors, lawyers and intellegensia to rise to the occation and wage a crusade to eliminate this menace. He asked them to form vigilance committees to combat this social evil and also motivate and educate the peoples to launch a vigorous and relentless compaign against corrupt elmen's. those people who will be on the vanguard of this movement will be true benefactors of the nation, the minister added.

He expressed his happiness over the massive country wide celebration in connection with the Independence Day which demonstrated the unity and integrity among the entire nation.

He said that Pakistan was providing shelter to over 27 lakh Afghan refugees purely on Islamic and humanitarian grounds, despite international pressures.

Similary, Pakistan always supported the just cause of the Palestinian brotherrs who are subjected to naked aggression by the Zionists.

He said taking into consideration the situation prevailing around Pakistan, the government was taking necessary measures for the defence of the country's frontier, according to the available resources.

ECONOMIC CONDITION

Referring to the economic conditions of the country, the minister said by the grace of Almighty Allah there has been lot of increase in the production of wheat, sugar and vegetable ghee. Besides, the government had constructed large number of roads, hospitals and schools with the collaboration of the elected members in all the four provinces and particularly in Baluchistan.

He said it was also gratifying to note that tht minorities in Pakistan enjoyed equal rights and their honour and property is safe. There has been no communal disturbances as was happening in many other countries including our immediate neighbour.—APP/PPI.

CORRUPTION IN BUREAUCRACY ATTACKED

Lahore VIEWPOINT in English 22 Jul 82 pp 7, 8

[Text]

FROM time to time, public servants are asked to file declarations about their assets to enable the Government to determine whether they are living beyond their means or not.

Successive governments have played this 'goshwara' game when they begin to receive complaints that their functionaries are living it up like they owned the joint. 'Goshwaras' (declarations) are duly submitted, editorials are duly written and everything is duly filed to gather dust in ill-kept archives. Once a decade people are made to believe that now the corrupt will meet their dessert and now their files will begin to move. When the noise has subsided, the corrupt resume their corrupt ways and the people have to pay that much more for making the wheels of bureaucracy move. If it took two rupees to make a file move from one table to another in the same office in 1952, now it takes two grand. The fall in the value of the rupee has been as dramatic as the decline in moral standards in our public offices.

President Ayub Khan threw out 70-plus senior bureaucrats when he started. Gen. Yahya Khan gave the boot to 303. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto sacked 1,300. These dismissals took place not on the basis of any 'goshwaras' but were quite arbitrary. We have never heard of a bureaucrat ever having been found to be living beyond his means on the basis of the declaration of his assets filed by himself. It would be ridiculous to expect so.

The question is: who scrutinises these 'goshwaras'? The bureaucrats themselves. And there is, has always been, honour among thieves. How much does a Grade-23 officer make? You have just to visit his place to see that he is living beyond his means. 'Goshwaras' are just not needed. Physical evidence is proof enough. If you are living within your means, you cannot buy a bicycle, to say nothing of refrigerators, VCRs, colour TVs, carpets and cars and things. That is just not on – not even at four thousand rupees a month. And yet even customs inspectors have all the good things and to spare.

This will go on for as long as we ask bureaucrats to sit in judgment on fellow-bureaucrats. They will continue to protect each other. They will continue to set standards of ostentatious living for others to follow. They will get all the land for house-building and for setting up shops. They will get all agricultural land that remains. For them are car-purchase loans and house-building credit and a 10-kanal house in the GOR. All the rest houses are for them and so are all reservations, allocations and quotas. Left-overs are for relatives and friends and fellow-influentials.

One day a friend suggested that the Bar Association, especially the Income Tax Bar Association be asked to look into the conduct of our bureaucrats. Maybe, the fellow has a point but since the bureaucracy is the only organised political party that has not been outlawed any attempt by the Bar Councils/Associations to look into affairs bureaucratic might be construed as taking a direct part in politics and thus come within the mischief of the Legal Practitioners (Amendment) Ordinance, 1982.

For no good reason at all, one is reminded here of a passage read just this morning in M. Iqbal's 'The Story of Muslim Politics' Quoting from Shibli Numani's 'Al Farooq', Vol. II, p. 35, it says:

"All officers were required to come to Makkah on the occasion of the Hajj, when people from all over the Islamic world gathered in the Holy City. In public assembly the Caliph invited all who had any grievance against any officer to present the same. Even minor complaints were made on the occasion. Inquiries were made and grievances redressed. Every officer was required to make a promise that he would not ride a Turkish horse, nor wear fine clothes nor eat sifted flour, nor keep a porter at his door and would ever keep his door open for those who had need of him. The terms were often entered in the letter of appointment and announced in public assembly".

The Turkish horse must in those days have been the equivalent of our own airconditioned Mazda. If a letter of appointment today stipulates that an officer will never ever buy a Toyota or Mazda, very soon there will be no takers and we will have to import bureaucrats from India in which country, one is told, the species abounds and at much cheaper rates.

REFUGEE SITUATION REVIEWED

Peshawar KHYBER MAIL in English 13 Aug 82 p 8

[Text] A high-level meeting here Thursday reviewed the overall situation regarding the refugees administration in the NWFP.

The Commissioner for Afghan Refugees for the NWFP, Mr Abdullah presided over the meeting which also took some important decisions.

The meeting was informed about the provision of drinking water, kerosene oil, distribution of relief assistance, disbursement of maintenance allowance and the provision of certain other facilities to the Afghan refugees in tentage villages.

The Commissioner expressed satisfaction over the performance of district and agency administrations throughout the NWFP and urged them to further streamline their work.

He stressed upon the administrators to vigorously implement the decisions already taken.

He said that by working in this organisation they were not only accountable to the government and people of Pakistan but also to God Almighty Allah, donor countries and international community at large.

The commissioner underlined the need for quick distribution of relief goods and disbursement of maintenance allowance to the refugees.

He warned that there was no room for dishonest workers in this organisation and such people would be sternly dealt with.

The meeting, which lasted for about four hours, was attended by the three Additional Commissioners of Afghan Refugees and all district and agency administrators working in the NWFP.

TARBELA TO GENERATE 4000 MEGAWATTS in 1990'S

[Text]

LAHORE, Aug. 18: Tarbela will start generating more than four thousand megawatt of electricity power in 1990s with the commissioning of six turbines of 175 megawatt and four turbines of 400 megawatt each, Maj-Gen. Ghulam Safdar Butt, Chairman, WAPDA, told a press conference here today.

He said that for the current year WAPDA had been allocated Rs. eight billions of which Rs. one billion was for the maintenance and modification of Tarbela Dam.

Giving break-up of tthe budget, he said that Rs. 4830 million had been allocated for power and Rs. 2110 million for water. He added that budget for power was meant for the schemes for generation, transmission and grid stations and distribution.

CONSERVATION DRIVE

He said WAPDA is launching a campaign for the conservation of energy by thte existing consumers so that more connections could be given to the deserving ones.

In this respect WAPDA chairman sought press and media could cooperation to educate the people.

He said that WAPDA will consider closing down power supply to the markets, before Maghrib prayers.

He said difficult power situation was faced in the summer and winter when level went down resulting in lesser power generation. That period was not more than six months in a year". In both the seasons WAPDA had to resort to shut downs to meet the demand.

Nearly one third of the total power generated by WAPDA is either stolen or wasted in generation or transmission depriving the Authority of billions of rupees every year, chairman WAPDA said.

He said the Authority had minimised these losses to some extent and that 33.72 per cent loss in 1972-73 had been brought down to 3.03 per cent at the end of June this year.

The Chairman, WAPDA said that four units of 175 megawatts capacity each on Tunnel No. 2 of the Tarbela Dam would be installed at a cost of approximately Rs. 2870 million. The units No. 5 to 8 were expected to be commissioned during the current financial year.

He said that after a review of the potential of the Tarbela Hydel Power Station, a decision was taken to instal two more units on Tunnel No. 2. The scheme was scheduled to be completed by July 1985.

He said that after the consideration of water availability, head losses water hammer, etc. the WAPDA consultants had recommended installation of four units of 406 mw each on Tunnel No. 3. This project would require Rs. 10000 million including Rs. 5000 million as foreign exchange component.—APP/PPI.

5-YEAR RISE IN SIND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION REPORTED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

Continuous increase has been registered in the production of wheat, rice, cotton and sugarcane in the province of Sind during last five years.

Statistically, wheat production has increased by 44.6 per cent, rice by 20.45 per cent, cotton by 28.4 per cent and sugarcane by 64.32 per cent in the year 1981-82 as compared to the production achieved in 1977-78.

The breakthrough in agriculture production has been made possible by advanced planing, keeping in view the guidelines given by the federal government and working out crop inputs requirements in advance and chalking out action plans upto the level of union council to achieve production targets by the Sind Agriculture Department.

Other factor responsible for encouraging results include timely announcement of support prices, greater fertilizer off take, improved agricultural practices, use of increased quantities of quality seed and timely sowing of crops.

With excellent performance in the field of agriculture, Sind contributes 18 per cent of wheat production, 35 per cent of cotton, 47 per cent of rice and about 50 per cent of sugar, cotton and rice not only full meet the requirements of province but also provide a good export potential.

WHEAT: In the year 1977-78, wheat production in the province stood at 14.27 lakh M. tons which has risen to 20.64 lakh M. tons in 1981-82 showing an increase of 44.6 per cent. This was inter alia due to improvement in yield per acre which was 17 maunds per acre in 1977-78 and increased to 21.6 maunds in 1981-82 registering 20 per cent increase. Self-sufficiency in wheat was attained in the year 1979-80.

The old variety Pak-70 which was susceptible to rust has been replaced. A new high yielding regular variety viz: ZA-77 has been evolved by Agriculture Research Institute, Tandojam. Its certified seed of 25,000 maunds is planned to be distributed to the farmers in Rabi 1982-83.

RICE: The total production of rice in the province was 13.15 lakh m. Tons in year 1977-78 while in 1981-82 it increased to 15.84 lakh M. tons showing 20.45 per cent increase like wheat, there has been persistent increase in per acre yield in case of rice. It was 19.07 maunds in 1977-78 and has improved to 23.61 maunds last year (1981-82) thus showing 23.8 per cent increase.

Our Rice Research Institute at Dokri has evolved a new scented variety (Sind basmati), it will be released for general cultivation shortly.

COTTON: Production of cotton has also increased significantly. In the year 1977-78 it was 12.08 lakh bales while last year it has risen to 15.51 lakh bales showing 28.4 per cent increase which is a new record of the province. Per acre yield of cotton has improved from 12 maunds to 13.46 in last 5 years (an increase of 12.1 per cent).

SUGARCANE: Remarkable progress has been made in case of sugarcane production. Five years back (i.e. in 1977-78) the cane production was 42.60 lakh M. tons. This has gone up to an all time record of over 70 lakh M. tons during the current year (1981-82). Cane yield per acre has also improved from 384 maunds (in 1977-78) to 465 maunds this year (an increase of 21.1 per cent).

Sugar production has been placed at 5.86 lakh M. tons this year (against 3.36 lakh M. tons last year) which too has surpassed all previous record.—APP.

SIND REFUSED RISE IN SUGAR QUOTA

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 18 Aug 82 p 1

[Text]

The Federal Government has turned down the suggestion of the Sind Government, to increase the sugar quota by 20 per cent, it is reliably learnt.

The Provincial Government had approached the Federal Government to restore the 20 per cen. cut in quota which was made in 1979-80 owing to sharp sugar shortage in the country, particularly in Punjab.

The Sind Government's proposal had in this regard cited the record sugar production in the province this year, estimated to be about six lakh tons.

According to informed circles, Sind has a net surplus of about 1.80 lakh tons which far exceeds the present storage capacity in the province. So the Provincial Food Department had some time back requested the Federal Governmen. to extend necessary help in hiring more godowns to store the surplus sugar. The federal response is still awaited.

It is said that a huge amount will be needed by the Sind Government to arrange storage of about 1.80 lakh tons of sugar. According to informed circles, generally the Government pays at the rate of Re. one per sq. ft. daily for the godowns.

Government's efforts to export the surplus sugar could not succeed so far due to low international prices and high cost of production in the country.

In view of the serious storage problem and the negative response from the Federal Government, the Provincial Food Department has now approached the Governor to restore the full sugar quota in the province.

In case approval is accorded by the Governor, sugar quota for the urban areas, will be increased to one kilogram per person per month. Similarly, sugar quota for the rural areas of the province, excepting Karachi rural area, will increase to 500 grams per person per month. For the rural areas of Karachi it would be 600 grams per person per month.

It may be mentioned that at present sugar quota for the urban areas is 800 grams per person per month of 480 grams for the rural areas of Karachi and 400 grams for other rural areas.

MINISTER ON WHEAT PRODUCTION POTENTIAL

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 18 Aug 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Islamabad, Aug 17--Minister for Food and Agriculture Vice Admiral Mohammad Fazil Janjua today urged the agricultural scientists, extension workers and growers to raise wheat production and make Pakistan an exporter of the commodity.

The minister was delivering his inaugural address at the 3-day national wheat research and production seminar sponsored by the Pakistan Agricultural Research Council (PARC) at the Planning Division Auditorium. Over 125 delegates are participating in the programme spread over six sessions.

The major topics of discussion at the seminar include breeding and genetics, agronomy, fertiliser and sail chemistry, pathology and weed control and wheat mechanisation.

Recommendations will be made to the government following the panel discussions at the end of the seminar.

Janjua thought the country has the potential to become a wheat exporter. He based his optimism on this score on the observations of wheat scientists.

Several of the reputed scientists feel Pakistan has the potential to triple its wheat production.

According to their projections the attainable target could be 33 million tonnes, up from the present production of 11 million tonnes.

Janjua said despite the damage caused to wheat crop by the untimely rains in late spring this year it is for the first time that Pakistan would export some quantity of wheat, thereby joining the ranks of the wheat exporting countries.

Janjua maintained that the real goal of production was still distant but it would be the effort of the government to achieve it within the shortest possible time. Over the past three years the average increase in the wheat production had been "very much encouraging" and if this performance was maintained" it will be a great achievement and will provide a sound economic basis to the country's economy," he thought. He said in this campaign for raising production an active cooperation of agricultural scientists, extension workers, various agricultural agencies and growers was imperative.

He said agriculture is now among priority sectors and the government was all the time keen to make available maximum resources to accelerate the productive activity in the field as indicated by the Annual Development Programme (A.D.P.) The government had also allocated sizeable amounts of money for agricultural research. It was now the responsibility of the agricultural scientists to make "a tangible breakthrough towards wheat production," he said.

The minister pointed out that the agricultural scientists had an important role to play in boosting the food production. The government did evolve a production strategy on the basis of their recommendations which were implemented by the agricultural department of the provinces, extension workers and growers themselves.

Very Good Crop

Vice Admiral Janjua said it would be heartening to note that the wheat crop over the past years had been very good. Pakistan now occupied an important place in wheat production among the developing countries, a fact recognised by the World Food and Agriculture Organisation. In 1981-82 wheat production was 11.47 million tonnes. A record increase of 36 percent in wheat production over the last three years had brought self-sufficiency to the country. He said that the wheat crop during the current year was also good although the sudden rains affected the production. However, the self-sufficiency would remain unaffected even this year. An estimated 1.3 to 1.4 million tonnes of wheat will be in government stocks at the end of the year after meeting the requirements. He was confident that the next year's target of 12.2 million tonnes would be met.

He said the government will be considerate to the growers and give them incentives by fixing suitable purchase price and providing facilities of quality seeds, fertiliser and agricultural loans.

The minister said that the seed of two new wheat varieties Pak-81 and Punjab-81 would be available for the growers in a large quantity.

The demarcation zones for sowing new and old disease-free wheat varieties, the growing time needed, seeds, fertiliser and water requirements and other factors would be covered by the recommendations to be compiled by the seminar.

Dr Amir Mohammad, Chairman, Pakistan Agricultural Research Council, welcoming the participants said the PARC was concentrating on training of agricultural scientists in the light of the latest research. He said 48 scientists had been trained so far while six more are undergoing this training at present. He said an announcement of package of technology for the agriculture sector in advance had helped raising production. This year it would also be the effort of the PARC and other research agencies to announce the package for the growers' guidance.

He said in future an emphasis on management of inputs, relationship of the growers with the government agencies and further intensive research would be the priorities to raise farm output.--APP

CABINET APPROVES PRIVATE UNITS FOR POLYESTER, CEMENT

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 18 Aug 82 p 1

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug. 17: The Economic Coordination Committee of the Cabinet at a meeting held here today approved proposals for setting up industries in the private sector for the manufacture of polyester yarn and white cement. Ghulam Ishaque Khan, Minister for Finance and Economic Affairs, presided.

The proposal for the manufacture of polyester yarn envisages setting up of a plant in Lasbela district of Baluchistan with a capacity of 2000 tonnes based on chips. The present demand of polyester fabric yarn has been estimated at 60,000 tonnes which has been met largely through imports.

A white cement plant of a 50,000 tonne capacity is proposed to be set up in Dadu district of Sind at a cost of Rs. 305 million.

The ECC also approved a proposal of Messrs Asbestos Cement Industries for the expansion of the existing capacity of their asbestos pipe manufacturing plant at Karachi from 15,000 to 33,000 tonnes at an estimated cost of Rs. 150 million.

A proposal for the expansion of the RCD Ball Bearings Factory at Karachi from 1.3 million to 3.5 million capacity was also approved.

EXPORT OF BREEDING COWS

The ECC meeting was attended for the export of breeding cows, ossein and calcium diphosphate. It is proposed to allow the export of 2000 breeding cows out of a total population of over 4 million cows. The restricted export of breeding cattle is intended to provide incentive to breeders to produce quality cattle to encourage them to enter export market.

The committee noted a gradual decline in the export of calcium diphosphate and directed that the export of crushed bones be discouraged in order to improve prospects of manufactured items in the export market.

GAS SUPPLY

The additional secretary incharge, Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Resources presented to the ECC feasibility studies to increase gas supply in the country. The feasibility studies have been prepared by Messrs Gas Development Corporation of Chicago. The consultants have proposed to increase gas production from the existing and new gas fields viz. Sui, Marri, Kandkot, Dhodak and Pirkoh to the extent of 810 MMCFD by 1984-85 with an investment of Rs. 6375 million with a foreign exchange component of Rs. 3409 million over a period from 1982-85. Even with this investment for production, the supply and demand gap can be bridged only for a 4 years period after the completion of the proposed gas production in 1984-85.

The Finance Minister observed that the energy being the lifeline of economic development and progress, a realistic and practicable energy policy comprising all available resources needs to be prepared on a high priority basis. He directed that the concerned ministries and organisations formulate recommendations on utilisation and production of gas resources within the overall energy policy.

The Communications Secretary presenting a report on the improvement of the working of the Karachi Port Trust brought to the notice of ECC storage and emurrage charges accruing against various public sector agencies amounting to Rs. 40 million. The EEC directed that a deadline be fixed by which the concerned agencies should be asked to clear their dues.

The ECC approved proposals by the federal ministers for food and agriculture and cooperatives, industries and water and power, the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan, the secretaries planning and development, economic affairs, finance, commerce, water and power, statistics, industries, food and agriculture, production, petroleum and natural resources and communications and the additional cabinet secretary.—APP.

PLIGHT OF LAHORE'S UNREGISTERED LABORERS DISCUSSED

Lahore VIEWPOINT in English 22 Jul 82 pp 9-11

[Article by Mahmood Zaman]

[Text]

A CAR stopped at a big city chowk and was instantly surrounded by dozens of shabbily dressed men whose unshaven chins and sleep-starved eyes told you they had had very little rest last night. A flabby gentleman with an obscene paunch and a contemptuous eye comes out and looks at the creatures around his car with a critical eye. He picks two from among the crowd as if he is giving them a commission in the civil service. The rest melt away, some sulking, some sportingly. The lucky two brought their paraphernelia, spades, buckets and all and were driven away by the sahib.

Who are they, where do they come from and what sort of services do they offer? What do they get for their labour?

Unregistered

Most of them are unregistered workers – masons, carpenters, painters, and unskilled hands who assist the 'raj mazdurs'. The better skilled among them are not so unlucky, really, provided they get a job for the day. For instance, if a mason cost you 50 to 60 rupees a day last year, today he will charge you anything between 60 to 75 rupees. Carpenters and painters come at 10 to 15 rupees higher than masons. A labourer – whether skilled or non-skilled – charges Rs. 30 to 35 per day. Masons and labourers prefer working on daily wages whereas carpenters and painters usually seek longer contracts. All of them, however, have to work eight hours a day.

Not organised

'Casual labour' is not an organised body of men. That is why it is not possible to collect even half-way accurate facts about them. One can only try to be as objective as possible. There are more than twenty central places in Lahore where 'casual labour' gathers in the morning. These centres cannot exactly be classified as big or small. However, Tajpura, Ichhra, Rang Mahal, Chauburji and Lakshmi Chowks are some of the bigger labour markets. In some of these, one could find as many as two thousands workers of a morning. According to a very careful estimate, the total number of workers in all the city chowks is 15,000; of them more than 50 per cent are unskilled. They are generally a peaceful lot and nothing untoward has happened anywhere except at Ichhra, where the shopkeepers do not like them loitering around. Sometimes the job seekers are roughly treated by the police. A few of them are even taken to the police station and harassed.

Most of the unskilled workers come on their own but quite a few of them have an understanding with masons and other skilled workers, promising them jobs whenever the latter land lucrative contracts. These people are a pressure group in the labour chowks and, therefore, stand a better chance of employment than their 'independent' colleagues. During periods when construction work is at its peak, the skilled workers or 'mistris' become all-important and unattached workers find it difficult to find jobs on their own. So they go begging to group leaders who have an assured supply of labour. If the 'mistri' is in the mood, he is kind enough to give them the odd job plus a lot of four-letter terms of endearment. They have learned therefore to be respectful to the 'mistri' who has a few contracts in his pocket.

Most of the unskilled workers interviewed by this correspondent detest working with contractors, because of the exploitative terms they offer to 'free' labour. Moreover, since most contractors do government jobs, they have considerable clout with official agencies that matter and any worker who tries to be difficult, can get it in the neck.

Not uncommon

It is not uncommon for a worker to get much less than the contractor had originally promised him but there's hardly anything he can do about it. At the end of the day, a worker often gets as much as would enable him to pay for a meal and the bus fare home. This is the best way to ensure that the poor fellow will turn up the next day. Exploitative as he is, the contractor is a necessary evil because during lean periods it is he who gets you the odd job that enables you to keep body and soul together.

Except for the rainy season, work is available almost the year round. The peak labour period is immediately before and after the rains. The workers this correspondent talked to, said they got work 20 to 25 days a month and that was not too bad, but it was the constant uncertainty about the morrow that was so killing.

Khuda Bukhsh who hails from a village in Narowal Tehsil, has been working for the last 42 years. He claims to be in the nineties but he looks much younger. He lives in the Canal Park and must have carried a countless number of bricks on his head at countless construction sites. He is lucky in that he has no dependents, he syas but even so, he, too, is afraid of the morrow. Will he get work or will he not get work? "This uncertainty is infinitely more difficult to bear than all the hundreds of tons of bricks I have carried in my life", he says with despair in his sunken eyes.

Similar is the experience of middle-aged Azeem who comes to Lahore every day from a village near Shahdara. The difference is that Azeem has a large family – seven people – to support. "Even a day without work is a luxury I can't afford and there have been many such days in my life. But one has to make do with such work as comes your way and be grateful for it", says Azeem.

Akbar Ali is another worker who has many mouths to feed – a wife, four children, ageing parents and three children of a widowed sister – eleven in all. He is a retired army jawan from a village near Multan. When his sister came to live with him for the rest of her life, he felt that his monthly pension was not sufficient for a family this size. So he decided to shift to Lahore in search of better prospects. He had his pension commuted, got other dues, rented a house in Ichhra and joined a firm as a peon. But five to six hundred rupees a month in Lahore, he soon found out, was no better than living on his pension in Multan.

One day he ran into a 'well-wisher' who suggested that he go to Ichhra Chowk to try his luck. For the last three years he has been doing just that. He, too, gets about 26 working days every month and is also trying to ba a 'mistri'. Even so much of the money he makes goes into paying rent for the house his family lives in. "I am better off than I was a peon, but you tell me, sahib, is this life worth living?" he asked.

Different views

Opinions differ regarding a permanent job. Some say that they cannot find one while others maintain a permanent job is not a very attractive proposition. There are those who would want nothing better than permanent jobs even for the sake of a few hundred rupees, as they feel that this would save them from the torture of finding a fresh job every morning without fixed holidays, without other benefits. On the other hand, there are those who would rather have more money than fixed holidays and fringe benefits "which you never get anyhow", as one 'free' worker put it.

Ejaz Ahmad is an educated young man but prefers trying his luck every morning. Hailing from Sohdra, he passed the intermediate examination from Sialkot and became a typist. However, he could not get any job with any government or private office. For two years he kept on applying but in vain.

Comes to Lahore

One day he came to Lahore and again tried his luck. This time he succeeded but his typing skill was ignored and he was given a uniform to wear and sit outside the sahib's office. His mother had great expectations of her only son but the son could hardly eke out a living for himself. One day his sahib sent him to fetch a 'mistry' and a worker for some repairs in the office. When he came to know what the two would get for the repair job, Ejaz decided he had been taken for a ride too long. He took off his peon's uniform and went looking for a job at the Bhati Chowk. "The hell with secure employment. I am my own agent now and I am happy". He lives in Bilal Gunj with his mother and younger brother whom he has persuaded not to go in for higher education but to acquire some skill that will increase his worth in the labour market.

Wants a steady job

But Ilma (probably Ilam Din) wants a steady job. But his grey hair stands in the way. He started as a brick-layer, became a 'mistri' but feels he needs some rest now. He comes from Shakargarh and says that he would settle for an office job, even as a peon. Easier said that done, however. All his efforts in this regard have met with failure. "I have not many working days left in me and I want to leave this daily search for bread. There are many jobs even today in the labour market – though not as many as there used to be in the seventies – but I want a steady job now", he says.

'Mistri' Bashir Ahmad is not much satisfied with construction work these days. A skilled mason belonging to Sahiwal, he has some ten years of experience in the field. He cannot forget the days when, after eight in the morning, no 'mistri', no worker was available at the labour 'addas' and he could afford to say 'no' to friend and foe. But the seventies are a story of the past! Those were the days when new shopping plazas were coming up. New roads and bridges were being constructed and the cost of living was comparatively low. Normally, a 'mistri's' wage was 50 rupees then. Yet he was happy. "But it is terrible these days even at Rs. 75 a day". He worked at the Summit Minar. "Those were the days. The construction boom is over and only 'routine work' is left", he says wistfully.

At least 60 per cent of these job-seekers come from villages and they are 'casual' in the real sense of the term. They come to the city at a time when no sowing or harvesting work is required. During this period, Lahore is literally flooded with casual labour from the countryside. But when harvesting starts in the middle of April and when paddy is sown in the monsoon these villagers again tend to their fields and barter their services for grain and their earnings are certainly higher than the wages they get in the city. Many of the workers whose villages are not very far off, come to the city every day. Their number is not less than 10 per cent of the total labour available. They come from Kamoke, Muridke, Kala Shah Kaku, Shahdara, Bhambhay Jhuggian, Mahmood Booti, Manga Mandi, Raiwind, Lalliani, Kasur, etc. But I have also met a few who come daily from Wazirabad and Gakkhar Mandi. They go back to save some money which could otherwise be spent for a night's board and lodging in Lahore.

Original Lahorites

Of the remaining 30 per cent, original Lahorites constitute only about 5 per cent, while the rest are newcomers. They have brought their families and rented houses here. It can thus be seen that around 90 per cent of the job-seekers in Lahore come from the countryside. Among them are landless peasants as well as those whose holdings have become increasingly uneconomic with the passage of time or whose lands have become unproductive through waterlogging and salinity. Search for the 'good life' may be another, though not very significant factor for the mass exodus of rural labour to Lahore and other urban centres.

A migrant worker told this correspondent that his monthly income was a little more than 900 rupees, out of which he had to pay two hundred for a one-room house with an open verandah and a small store. Eleven people – two ageing parents, a widowed sister and her three children and his own five-member family were living in this one-room 'house' constructed on one-and-a-half 'marlas'. But he considered himself 'lucky'. He had an independent house in Ichhra and that, too, for Rs. 200!

The majority of the workers, however, cannot go back and have to stay the night in Lahore. Their main concern is not where to sleep but the safety of their equipment. So they prefer living in groups with a little store and a store-keeper. Since their main concern is the equipment, they also prefer living near a shop selling construction tools and building material. They also like living in industrial areas among their own class where cheap hotels, 'tandoors' and 'lassi' and milk shops are available. Some live near the labour 'addas'. Under-construction buildings can also be their temporary abodes. At a site where a multi-storey building is under construction, contractors and construction firms usually arrange their lodging and boarding, normally within the same premises. And if a big house is under construction, the owner usually allows workers to live on the premises. The owner obliges them because he wants to ensure not only their daily turn up but also the safety of his construction material. Those who do not get such permission are compelled to sleep on footpaths, on 'tharas' and in public parks.

Baba Kandianwala

As noted earlier, Tajpura is one of the biggest labour chowks where hundreds of job-seekers gather in the morning. Close to the chowk, Baba Kandianwala has a spacious place which he has reserved for storing workers' equipment. The Baba charges every worker five rupees a month for this storage facility and this they happily pay. The Baba, who also manufactures 'kandis' (used for levelling plaster) is not concerned where his 'clients' pass the night. The Baba has at least 250 'clients' most of whom spend the night on the cement slabs placed on the principal drain known as 'Ganda Nala' in Misri Shah. Of course, there are no beds. They put their 'chaddars' on the cement slabs and use their arms for pillows. At night the place looks like a veritable refugee camp.

Everybody is up with the sun. Breakfast is at the nearby 'lassi' shops. Two 'kulchas' and a glassful of 'lassi' or a 'pao' or so of 'dahi' will do. And now another job for another day.

All for Allah.

Another concentration of these workers is on Sher Shah Road in Shad Bagh, where Baba Aziz has set apart a two-storey house for these workers free of charge because his Pir Sahib once commanded him to serve the poor in the name of Allah. Though no beds are available here, too, workers at least have a roof over their heads. Hundreds of them live at Baba Aziz's place which is the only one of its kind in the city. So the plight of the casual labour can well be imagined particularly when it rains.

Unprotected

Casual labour is not protected by any labour laws. They are covered by no social security and are insured neither against disability nor death. No Government department, no official agency is responsible for them nor has any reliable statistics because they are not an organised labour force. There's just one Baba Aziz for the whole lot. Is it one Baba too many or is it nine hundred and ninety-nine Babas too few?

Your guess is as good as mine.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS IN NWFP REVIEWED

Peshawar KHYBER MAIL in English 14 Aug 82 Supplement p VIII

[Article by Omer Amer]

[Text]

The industrialisation of a country is based on a number of factors which include availability of required raw material, marketing, manpower, proper technology, infrastructure like gas, power, telephone means and communication and transportation. The NWFP is rich in raw material for agro-based and mineral based industries and the Provincial Government had taken concrete measures to set up such industries in both public and private sectors.

SARHAD DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY

Since private industrial investment was not forthcoming in the desired volume, Government decided to step into the industrial field itself. This has been done through the creation of Sarhad Development Authority in 1973. The organisation is the Provincial Government's Industrial Development Corporation. The performance of this corporation in planning and executing industrial projects has been very encouraging. Within a short period of its creation, the authority prepared nine large and medium sized industrial projects involving a total investment of about Rs. 560 million. These projects consist of a sugar mill (second largest in the country), four cold storages, two vegetable ghee plants (now transferred to Ghee Corporation), a corn complex, and one of the largest and most modern tanneries in the country. It has also established a Rosin and Turpentine Factory and Goitre Control Project.

The Khazana Sugar Mills which has a capacity to process 3000 tons of cane and 2500 tons of beet per day was completed at a cost of Rs. 265 million. The project was completed in 1976 and has been operational since then. It has been recording the highest recovery in the Frontier and secondary to the Sind sugar factories. The factory has earned good reputation and profit during the last 5 years of its operation. About 1200 people are employed in this factory. In addition to successfully operating KSM, the SDA are also operating Haripur Rosin and Turpentine Factory which was rehabilitated at a total cost of Rs. 8.286 million and Goitre Control Project set up in the Industrial Estate, Peshawar, at a total cost of Rs. 4.541 million.

Six factories based on locally available raw material had been established with the technical assistance of Bulgaria. This include a leather tannery at Jehangira established at a total cost of Rs. 91.804 million a corn complex at a cost of Rs 50.50 million and four cold storages at Peshawar, Mardan, Mingora and Haripur which had been completed at a cost of more than Rs. 128 million. A Brick Plant at D.I. Khan is nearing completion while setting up of a Sugar Mill in D.I. Khan is in planning stage.

The Sarhad Development Authority has embarked upon a well planned programme directed towards transferring its industrial units to other organisations which has helped raising funds for planning new industrial ventures in NWFP. Under the programme, the Rosin and Turpentine Factory, Haripur and the Corn Complex at Jehangira have already been disinvested and transferred to other organisations. The Peshawar Cold Storage and Ice Plant is also being transferred to other parties while negotiations to dis-invest other units, including the Jehangira Tannery, are in progress. This policy is expected to help accumulating capital in order to undertake new industrial ventures by the Sarhad Development Authority.

In addition to industrial development, the SDA has also undertaken mineral exploration. A Mineral Development Wing has been created to undertake exploration of various mineral deposits in the province which is potentially very rich, but due to lack of scientific exploitation, bulk of mineral wealth remained untapped. With the British Government assistance Phosphate deposits in Hazara Division are being investigated. As a result of this a scheme for the development of Kakul Deposits and establishment of a Crushing and Grinding Unit at a total cost of Rs. 36.77 million has recently been approved. The Phosphate extracted from Kakul deposit will be utilized by National Fertilizer Corporation factories. SDA has taken over the antimony mines together with the processing plant in Chitral and in order to develop this deposit Government of NWFP has approved a scheme and work on this is in progress.

Geological exploratory work on Nepheline Syenite deposit of Koga near Buner, Swat has been completed and reserves of the mineral has been estimated at 6000 million tons. This mineral can be used in the production of aluminium, white cement, caustic soda and soda ash in a single Alkali Complex. The second important raw material for these products is lime stone which have already been located in the vicinity of the deposit. A team of geologists from SDA is already working in Kohistan area to investigate mineral deposits there. Presently the team is working on Chromite deposit reported near Jijal. This deposit appears to be very extensive and may prove to be the highest after famous Muslim Bagh Chromite deposit.

SMALL INDUSTRIES DEVELOPMENT BOARD

It has been estimated that 80% of the industrial labour force in Pakistan is employed in small sector industrial units. Government of NWFP have set up a Small Industries Development Board, which is responsible for promotion of cottage and small sector industries by imparting skill and training work, by providing facilities which small industries cannot provide for themselves by ensuring small investure access to bank credit and by providing expert advisory services to small industries. The NWFP SIDB has established 16 carpet centres, 6 embroidery and knitting centres, 7 textile and Patti making centres, 3 wood working centres and 2 wool spinning centres in the province. About 645 persons are imparted professional training in these training centres every year. The passed out trainees have either set up their own project or have been employed in other private units. In order to promote rural uplift and equitable distribution of employment opportunities these centres have been established in less developed areas of the province. Presently there are about 3000 carpet looms in the province in the private sector employing about 10000 to 12000 workers. This has been the achievement of the SIDB in the carpet industry.

The SIDB has established 7 small industrial estates in the province at a total cost of Rs. 15.778 million. These estates are located at Peshawar, Mardan, Abbottabad, Khalabat, D.I. Khan, Bannu and Kohat. The Peshawar and Mardan Estates are fully colonised while Abbottabad, Bannu and D.I. Khan are in the process of colonization. The colonization of Khalabat Estate is nearing completion while preliminary work on the Kohat Estate had already been taken in hand. The Leather Goods Service Centre at Bannu is being established at a total cost of Rs. 15 million with the help of World Bank.

In addition to providing training facilities this centre will also produce quality leather products for local market as well as export. In addition SIDB has established 7 carpet centres in the province for rehabilitation of Afghan refugees. In the field of financial assistance to the private sector the Board has been able to give financial help to 129 parties through commercial banks and IDBP to the tune of more than Rs. 300 million during past 7 years for setting up of new industries. In order to encourage industrial development, the Government has taken several steps through provision of tax holiday in Malakand and Dera Ismail Khan Divisions and in the District of Mansehra and Kohistan of Hazara Division. All the industries establish in Industrial Estates located in the Province and 100 Sq Kilometer area from Nowshera to Jehangira enjoy tax holiday facility. This incentive coupled with availability of reasonably cheap labour and vast power supply from Tarbela and other Hydro-electric Power Stations in the Province would provide adequate opportunities for investment both in the public as well as private sector.

GOVT. TRANSPORT SERVICE

In order to provide people with cheap and reliable transport, 530 buses have been purchased for the Government Transport Service and deployed on various routes in the Province. A new Service was introduced between Dir and Chitral thus linking Chitral with rest of the Province by road. This has solved the transportation problems of the people of Chitral who had to spend lot of money in getting a seat in the over-loaded Jeeps running between Dir and Chitral. For the first time in its history the organisation had showed a profit of about Rs. 5 million during 1981-82.

LABOUR

A colony consisting of 240 quarters had already been established for industrial workers at Mardan while 300 quarters completed at a cost of more than Rs. 15 million at Aman-Garh had already been alotted to the workers. It is expected that 300 quarters at Peshawar would be ready for allotment to the industrial workers by the end of this year. In addition to these it is also proposed to construct 646 quarters at Kohat, Mingora, Mardan, Bannu and Amangarh. In addition to this it is also proposed to develop 100 plots each at D.I. Khan, Charsadda and Haripur & 50 plots each at Sakhakot, and Takht-e-Bhai. These projects are extimated to cost Rs. 61.492 million.

The total number of factories installed at various places in the Province now stands at 287, indicating a 200% increase in the velocity of industrial development over the average rate of annual growth registered during the three decades since the inception of Pakistan.

The overall investment made by the private sector in the field of industry over the past four years has been figured out at about Rs. 500 million with a 20% foreign exchange component. Loans to meet a sizeable portion of the finances involved are being advanced liberally by PICIC, IDBP and the Provincial Small Industries Development Board.

It is estimated that for the next five years there will be 80000-90000 additions to the ranks of job seekers every year. These persons will not find jobs in the agricultural sector or in Government. The only sector which would employ a substantial portion of this number is the industry, commerce and mining sector. It costs about Rs. 15,000/- to Rs. one lakh to create an Industrial Job in the large and medium Sector and for every Industrial Job two are created outside the factory in transport, catering, etc. Thus to mitigate the unemployment situation in the NWFP at least 10,000 industrial jobs should be created every year through an Industrial Investment of Rs. 100 crores per annum or Rs. 500 crores over the next five years.

It will be recalled here that the Human Rights Society of Pakistan is holding an international conference on human rights. The conference would be presided over by Ahmed bin Bella. Haq Nawaz Javinda, Central Vice-President of the Human Rights Society of Pakistan is proceeding on a tour of Saudi Arabia on Aug 19. Haq Nawaz will discuss the problem of thousands of Pakistanis languishing in Saudi prisons with the Governor of Mecca and other Saudi Government officials. It will be recalled here that on the appeal of the Society the Saudi Government has already reduced by half the prison terms of Pakistani captives. Haq Nawaz would be impressing upon the Saudi authorities either to grant full remission to Pakistani prisoners or transfer them to Pakistani jails.--PPI [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 18 Aug 82 p 8]

BAR COUNCIL RESTRICTIONS CRITICIZED--The President has promulgated the 1973 Legal Practitioners Act Amendment Ordinance... Through one change, members of bar councils and associations have been barred from taking direct or indirect part in politics... Particularly hit will be those lawyers who are members of the various banned political parties. Apart from this the Government has referred the Islamic Ideology Council's recommendations regarding a new political set-up for the country back to it. All this shows that there is no immediate prospect of a return to democracy and that the status quo will continue whereas circumstances demand a change and the restoration of the people's rights.--MAGHRABI PAKISTAN, July 17 [Text] [Lahore VIEWPOINT in English 22 Jul 82 p 34]

POET BARRED FROM SIND--Habib Jalib has been externed from Sind for a month. The order barring the poet's entry, residence or presence in Sind with immediate effect was issued by the Government of that province on June 21 and was served on him on 13th of this month in Lahore after he had returned from Karachi after a brief stay. The action was taken to prevent the Lahore-based poet from "acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order in Sind." [Text] [Lahore VIEWPOINT in English 22 Jul 82 p 14]

The Export Promotion Bureau released the list of items which will be exported to Romania. These are: coke, rice, raw cotton, cotton yarn, cotton textile (excluding yarn) woolen textiles, towels, sheets and pillow cases, wool, hand knotted carpets, machine-made woolen/jute carpets, sports goods, leather and leather products, jute manufacturers, canned and preserved fish, chemicals for textile industry, dry fruits and miscellaneous goods such as methanol, spectacle frames, caster seeds, oil cakes, tobacco and other goods, surgical instruments, pig iron, chrome and manganese ore.--APP [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 1]

GHAFFAR KHAN WANTS TALKS--Peshawar, Aug 18--The Red Shirt Leader, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan has made a fervent appeal to the Afghan refugees and Mujahideen leaders stationing in Pakistan to sit together with him to work out a way to end the hostilities in Afghanistan. In a press statement issued from Wali Bagh Charsadda where he is staying with his family, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan said it has been his wish to meet the leaders of Mujahideen operating inside Afghanistan and to discuss with them ways and means with which this unfortunate fighting could be brought to an end. He said his only aim to meet the Afghan leaders was due to deep sympathy with their cause as brethren in faith and he would do everything possible and within his reach to help them bring to a solution of the Afghan crisis.--PPI [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 1]

CIVIL AVIATION AUTHORITY--The Pakistan Civil Aviation Authority is expected to commence its operations from October 1 this year, it was learnt in Karachi yesterday. The authority which will replace the existing department of Civil Aviation will have its headquarters at Karachi. The chief executive of the authority will be a Director-General. It is understood that the first Director General of the authority will be a senior officer of the Pakistan Air Force. It may be recalled that the federal cabinet had approved the setting up of the Civil Aviation Authority last month.--PPI [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 3]

TARBELA TRANSMISSION WORK PROGRESSING--On the third and last phase of Asia's biggest transmission line connecting Tarbela power station with Jamshoro via Faisalabad, Multan and Guddu is in full progress and 65 percent work of the tower foundations had been completed by July 1982. The third phase accounts for construction of 1,216 towers out of which foundations of 847 have been completed. Besides, 627 steel tower structures for this 439 kilometer long section of the transmission line have been erected accounting for completion of over 52 percent work. First and second phases of this project were completed and energised in 1979 and 1980 respectively linking Tarbela with Faisalabad and onward with Guddu via Multan. The 1,221 kilometers long transmission line is scheduled to be completed in June 1983 and will transfer a substantial quantity of Tarbela as enormous power potential to Hyderabad and Karachi to meet power requirements of these areas and also reducing transmission losses.--APP [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 19 Aug 82 p 3]

COURSE FOR AFGHAN TEACHERS--Abboitabad, Aug 12--Alhaj Kifayatullah Khan, Director of Education (FATA), NWFP, has inaugurated here a 10-day orientation course for the Afghan refugees head teachers of primary schools in NWFP. Speaking on the occasion he said that Pakistan Government was, in collaboration with the UNHCR, taking keen interest in the education of Afghan refugee children who had taken temporarily refuge in this country on purely humanitarian groups. Mr Muhammad Mohsin Khan, Additional Commissioner, Afghan Refugee Education Department, said that the number of Afghan school children will reach about one lac by the end of current calendar year. He said that the number of girl students was also rapidly increasing. He said that a number of Afghan refugee students had been given admission into different medical, engineering and other professional colleges and technical schools. He said that the present series of re-orientation courses was designed to educate the Afghan refugees primary school head teachers in modern methods of education, evaluation, discipline and maintenance of school record. GOVERNMENT INTEREST, DEBT REPAYMENT REPORTED

[Article by George T. Nervez]

[Text]

THE national government paid a total of P2.6 billion in interest and amortization on domestic and foreign debts during the first six months this year.

According to the Bureau of the Treasury, interest payments amounted to P1.7 billion, while amortization on domestic and foreign debts reached P885.6 million.

Close to one-half or P663.7 million of the interest payments during the first semester were those due on foreign loans. The rest were interest on treasury notes and bonds and debt instruments issued by government agencies.

THE BULK of amortization payments amounting to P465.9 million were applied to foreign loans. The largest amortization payment on domestic debts was applied on treasury bonds, the bureau added.

The bureau also reported that subsidies to various government corporations and agencies amounted to P788.55 million at end-June 1982. The biggest amount of subsidy during the first semester went to fertilizer during the first semester worth P405.9 million.

During the period, the government also pumped in a total of P4.76-billion worth of equity in public corporations. The single biggest amount worth P1.03 billion went to the National Power Corp.

Another big recipient of government equity during the first semester was the Development Bank of the Philippines (DBP) which got fresh funds worth P600 million. — George T. Nervez

MANIPUR TERRORISTS WARN OFFICIALS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 31 Jul 82 p 7

[Text] A self-styled underground organization--Terrorist Suicidal Service--has claimed responsibility for killing three people including the Education Secretary of the Manipur Government over the past month. The organization has sent letters to some Government offices in Manipur threatening that it would take action against "corrupt people if they do not correct themselves," according to official sources in Calcutta.

The authorities in Delhi have been apprised of this. It is yet to be ascertained whether the organization has any link with the People's Liberation Army and the Kangleipak Communist Party in Manipur.

The letters, one typed in English and the other writtein Manipuri, have stated that corruption has become rampant among the present Ministers and officials and the organization has pledged to destroy "social evils." It has already executed three people for the benefit of the masses, the letters claimed.

Mr B. Singh, an Executive Engineer, was killed by unknown assailants during the last week of June. Dr M. Sharma was fatally injured on July 5 while Mr R. Singh, Education Secretary, was shot dead by some unidentified young men at his residence in Imphal on July 12 last.

The letters have alleged that many people in Manipur are misusing power and authority for their personal gains, thereby destroying "our motherland."

LABOR LAYOFFS FOR 1981 REPORTED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Aug 82 p 1

[Article by Chito Parazo]

[Text]

A total of 78,466 workers throughout the country lost their jobs last year because of the apparently critical finances of the business sector.

Statistics compiled by the Labor Statistics Service (LSS) of the Ministry of Labor and Employment show that these workers were dismissed permanently or laid off temporarily by distressed firms.

Out of the 78,466, LSS sources said, 15,023 were dismissed permanently. More than one half of the terminated workers were from Metro Manila.

Labor Ministry sources said only a few of those who were terminated were able to go back to work.

On the basis of first and second quarter data this year, labor sources said, there is basis to believe that the unemployment rate is increasing.

They said the unemployment situation seems to have significantly worsened due to the economic slump.

The industries most affected by termination cases were manufacturing, 63,640; textile, 19,270; and the fabricated metal and equipment, 13,940.

The common reasons cited for terminating their workers are financial losses, lack of raw materials, high cost of production, and lack of market

CASH DEFICIT REPORTED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Aug 82 p 13

[Text]

The national government incurred a deficit of ₱7,387 million in its cash operations during the six-month period January to June this year, the bureau of treasury reported yesterday.

Government disbursements, excluding loan repayments, reached a total of ₱41,638 during the period, reflecting an increase of ₱10,591 million or 34.12 per cent over the ₱31,047 expenditures recorded for the same period last year.

A major portion was spent for budgetary disbursements which went up by 26.57 per cent from the ₱21,773 million in the comparative period last year.

On the other hand, government receipts from both budgetary and non-budgetary sources reached a total of ₱34,251 million, reflecting an increase of ₱8,134 million or 31.15 per cent over that of the same period in 1981.

Budgetary revenues of ₱19,403 million showed an increase of ₱2,880 million or 17.44 per cent over that of the same period last year.

Collections by the bureau of internal revenue and by the bureau of customs reached ₱10,313 million and ₱5,533 million, respectively, during the six-month period, reflecting an improvement of 14.58 per cent overall.

Non-tax revenue collections amounted to ₱1,958 million or 30.91 per cent more than that collected during the same period last year.

As of the end of the first semester, the national government had a cash balance of ₱16,362 million, up 6.07 per cent than the ending balance of ₱15,426 million during the same period in 1981.

GENERAL VOWS TO END MILITARY ABUSES

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Aug 82 p 18

[Excerpt]

NAGA CITY — Brig. Gen. Rene Cruz, commander of Constabulary and police forces in the Bicol region, vowed here last week that he would countenance abuses committed by any member of his command.

The general gave the assurance before masonic dignitaries from Metro Manila and the Southern Tagalog regions who were gathered here for the constitution and installation of officers of Naga City Lodge No. 257.

He pledged that complaints of abuses committed by his men would be acted upon within 24 hours.

We have even enlisted the help of parish priests and other leading citizens of the community to help us by acting as channels for these complaints, should the complainants feel inhibited to bring their woes directly to us, the general stressed.

Admitting that the New People's Army was giving problems to his command, Gen. Cruz said that his men were not sleeping on the job.

We have launched a massive drive to win the hearts and minds of the people through civic action projects and multi-agency approaches so that they can see for themselves what the government is really doing for them, the general pointed out.

We have opened up our pacification drive in this region with a pledge not to campaign purely through the barrel of a gun but through the compassionate beatings of the human heart, and we are succeeding quite remarkably, he added.

EDITORIAL COMMENDS CLERGY-MILITARY AGREEMENT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

REPRESENTATIVES of the clergy and the military in the Church-Military Liaison Group forged an agreement to the effect that a religious denomination may obtain the release of a clergyman detained by the military by asking for the temporary release through the CMLG. The requesting party and the sponsoring member of the CMLG will guarantee that the detainee will not escape and that he will be made available if his presence is required by the authorities.

The agreement should improve the relations between the religious denominations and the military authorities. It is well known that in some places the relations are racked by misunderstanding.

The initiative was taken by Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile probably in representation of the thinking not only in the defense establishment but also in the important levels of the political branches of government that the church as a group is an important factor in national unity.

Since the influence of the religious groups is pervasive and can take many forms, the rule has been administration politics should not offend religious sensibilities but rather should lean over backward to accommodate religious views to the extent permitted by the laws.

It is said that the CMLG has met 92 times. This indicates that there has been a continual dialogue between church groups and the military for some time. It implies there has been much to talk about.

It has also been reported that the CMLG has regional chapters. This suggests that the group is larger than what we may think.

The group can accomplish much in eliminating whatever adversarial attitudes there may be in some troubled areas.

MANIPUR INSURGENCY ACTIVITIES REPORTED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Aug 82 p 8

[Article by S. Guru Dev]

[Text]

TEMBA, the surviving "ojha" or guru, is back in Manipur; he was earlier presumed killed by Burmese security forces. His return could revive the PLA's morale; it could also lead to bloodshed. Kunjabehari Singh's succession to the leadership after Bisheswar's capture at Tekcham a year ago was smooth. The same "rigid chain of command" and acceptability of the next man can ensure an orderly transition. Khaidem Manikanta was the man of the hour after Kunjabehari's death at Kodompokpi but Temba's return complicates matters. The PLA's discipline is not what it used to be. Manikanta's dissolute ways could be his undoing. Nevertheless, Temba will have to assert his authority, a process not devoid of violence.

Temba is believed to have trained Meitei recruits in the Kachin area of north Burma. Estimates of his "boys" vary but the number could not be large. If the PLA had had a strong tactical reserve, the disasters at Tekcham and Kodompokpi could have been avoided. Kodompokpi was no place to be trapped in by day (Tekcham had, at least, an outcrop of hills). The PLA leaders and their "suicide" squad were an important mission; they were awaiting a courier when surrounded by the security forces. The late Kunjabehari's presence invests the group with the authority of a Tac HQ in army jargon.

Black Day

Kodompokpi was a black day for the PLA but the situation is not irretrievable with freshly trained recruits, as reported, from an area where Muivah, the leader of the National Socialist Council of Nagaland seems to have set up a school for insurgency and jungle warfare in the Semra Tract. Civil and military intelligence reports confirm that Muivah has recruited about 200 Tangkhuls, including 40 women, with a high percentage of educated young men by underground standards. Assamese extremists are also believed to have been trained in Muivah's "school".

The Namthilok ambush in which 21 jawans were killed on the Imphal-Ukhrul road was carried out by a detachment of Tangkhuls assisted by hardcore Meiteis. The Meiteis were probably given "battle inoculation", as the MNF had done with Tripuri tribals in 1979-80 when the bazars at Amarpur and Kanchanpur where looted, a few traders were killed and panic was created in relatively isolated communities. Observers feel that PREKAP—what is left of it—has a tentative understanding with the NSCN. Others in the queue may include Manipur's latest mushrooms, the Young Peoples Army and the Red Guard. They may share the fate of the Kanglaipak Communist Party which surfaced after an orgy of PREPAK factional killings. The KCP maintains a low profile after the capture of its "c-in-c", Y. Ibohanbi Meitei, and two others in June last year.

Do the "mushrooms" symbolize the hopes and aspirations of Manipuri youth? Are they the spokesmen for a restless generation yearning for social justice and an equitable economic order? Is the Meitei also facing a crisis of identity? Whatever the answers, barring the PLA, the others are reminders of the God that failed. They are more akin to the Mafia, with blood feuds, murders and extortions. Bisheswar had respect for Tulachandra, the founder of PREPAK who could have been a restraining influence but was captured early. Hell was let loose after his radio appeal for a peaceful solution. His own brother was murdered; thereafter one lost count of the killings.

Maipak Sharma, or the "jackal" as someone called him, found Assam congenial for a while till his "executioners" like Leishabi picked up the trail. Fortunately, Leishabi's criminal instincts betrayed him in Gauhati and he had to run. He was ultimately gunned down by the Nagaland Armed Police at Ghumukudema near Dimapur. PREPAK's decline is more revealing than understood. One should not forget that PREPAK was the "graduate" school of insurgency. Tula Chandra quit studying to organize the thousands of unemployed graduates from Manipur's incredibly numerous colleges (over 100,000 unemployed if matriculates are included). He and others like Sushila Devi, the notorious "judge executioner", also a dropout, rebelled against a system that perpetuated the "bondage of mind and body". Unlike Bijoy Singh who was arrested in Delhi recently (he was staying in a JNU hostel), Tulachandra kept his ideological options open.

The rash of killings in Manipur left former underground leaders in the region aghast. They have never understood the revolutionary urge in Meiteis killing Meiteis. The insurgency in Manipur is at the cross-roads; its credibility is at stake with the other ethnic rebels. The indiscriminate killings in Imphal have eroded public sympathy. The torture and murder of Sarojbala Devi, a Meitei by PLA members shocked the community. Captured documents spoke of pressures within the PLA and indiscipline. Pure disinformation and malicious gossip, exclaim Meitei zealots. Maybe, but that does not account for the rethinking and reevaluation among their intellectuals. Imphal's petty bourgeoisie remains the PLA's sizable and consistent ally but, ironically enough, the "exploited peasantry" which sparked the liberation struggle is lukewarm about Bisheswar's teachings and the New Dawn.

Bisheswar and his ojhas were schooled in Tibet where they were taught to live off the land, sustained by ideology and anything handy as a weapon. Bisheswar's scepticism and distaste for Muivah's technique is understandable when one contrasts their experience and objectives. Muivah believes in an armed insurrection to ensure Naga sovereignty. Phizo is still an attraction for him. His long years in China as the Naga Federal Government's plenipotentiary and the traumatic shock over the Shillong accord led him to further experiments with Maoism.

Initially Muivah fell foul of the church but recovered ground with the slogan "Nagaland for ture, he is the ranking Maoist Christ." With Bisheswar's cap among the north-eastern insurgents. Bisheswar probably would have found him "cluttered up" and dogmatic. Muivah lacked subtlety whereas he (Bisheswar) deserved praise for dealing deftly with Meitei insularity, calling his creation the PLA (Eastern Wing) and implying thereby that other jurisdictional wings were welcome. Although Muivah now accepts the logic of a collective Maoist punch, he is not enthused by Bisheswar's theory of mobilizing tribals in the north-east under one banner to drive the "Delhi bandits" out. And Muivah would not be alone in feeling so. The traditional Meitei revivalists are self-centred; even the progressives among them, a minority, are non-commital. In the thirties, however, the Meitei Marup, for example, was unambiguous about its objectives. It stood for the old Meitei religion, script and culture.

Maj.-Gen. Nayyar, who has had striking successes in a limited period, regards Ukhrul as the key (Ukhrul, the home of the Tangkhul, has given Manipur two Chief Ministers in Yangmasho Shaiza and Rishang Keishing). Rishang faces a smear campaign as a lackey of the Centre and for "toeing" the army line. The army authorities are embarrassed. Maj.-Gen. Nayyar says that "there's no question of Big Brother muscling in; it is teamwork". The daily conferences with the civil authorities in Imphal, he stresses, are cordial and decisions are taken jointly.

Limelight

If the security forces are in the limelight, there are normal and abnormal reasons for it. Counter-insurgency operations were handed over to them when the Manipur authorities lost control of the situation. Even before the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act was enforced, several Ministers of the Dorendra Singh Cabinet had resolved in his absence (Dorendra Singh was in Gauhati those days mediating on the Assam issue) that the Manipur valley, particularly Imphal, should be declared a disturbed area. The mandate for the security forces stems from the Armed Forces Special Powers Act, 1958.

Counter-insurgency is a continuing education in the north-east: no two chapters are alike. Constantine says: "In Nagaland it began with rebellion with the people getting gradually disillusioned whereas in Manipur it started with everybody, except the dispossessed royalty and their hangers-on, rejoicing in integration with the Indian Union but later inching away, leading to the present convulsions." There is another factor. Take Namthilok. The suspected villages were cordoned off and searched. People were beaten mercilessly but the word in the army lexicon is "harassment".

Allegations of rape introduced a familiar sequence but that does not rule out an objective inquiry. Nor is it enough to produce statements by the alleged victims disowning molestation, countersigned by police and medical or public representatives. The other side of the picture is that security and morale demand exemplary punishment, a response deemed adequate to prevent recurrence or abatement of another Namthilok. One does not subscribe to the old British concept of a punitive expedition in which whole villages were burnt but it goes without saying that villagers found harbouring or helping the underground are asking for trouble, the more so after a gruesome ambush.

PM REJECTS COCO-DIESEL PROGRAM

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Aug 82 p 11

[Text]

Energy Minister Geronimo Z. Velasco is seeking new guidelines for the implementation of the coco-diesel program after Prime Minister Cesar Virata declined to endorse it to the President in the wake of the plunging price of coconut oil in the world market.

The new guidelines sought by Velasco is with reference to the program's implementing rules requiring an executive order which the Prime Minister did not endorse.

Virata's non-endorsement stemmed from the issue covering the proper reference price of coconut oil as the billing basis to the petroleum industry under the coco-diesel program.

An energy ministry spokesman said yesterday that the Cabinet headed by Virata felt the initial price of 24 cents per pound requested by the United Coconut Oil Mills (UNICOM) is higher than the New York price which had been going down from 21 cents to about 19 cents per pound yesterday.

The spokesman explained that a lower reference price based on export parity will mean lower subsidy requirements from the government.

UNICOM has earlier suggested that the coconut oil price should be at export parity less coconut levy computed on the basis of prevailing New York price and peso-to-dollar exchange rate.

It requested, however, that for the first 40,000 tons to be used this year, a minimum of 24 cents per pound be set which translates to an ex-mill price of ₱3.01 per liter.

With diesel price constant, the petroleum industry can only afford to pay no more than ₱2.82 per liter of coconut oil delivered, provided specific tax and special fund imposts applicable to diesel are not applied to coconut oil used as fuel.

Exemptions from the levy, specific tax and special fund imposts for the coconut oil blended with diesel fuel plus a price support of ₱20.292 per liter of coconut oil will be necessary. Thus, the government has to subsidize ₱19.1 million annually for a program requiring 60,000 metric tons of coconut oil.

However, the Prime Minister was not receptive to the amount of subsidy in view of the coconut oil's prevailing market price quoted at New York.

UNICOM maintains that it cannot supply the coconut oil under today's export parity prices since it argues that it would be selling at a loss.

GOVERNMENT OIL FUND DEBT RISES TO 4 BILLION BAHT

BK250317 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 25 Aug 82 p 17

[Text] The government's oil stabilisation fund has soared to more than 4,000 million baht in the red, with the petroleum authority of Thailand (PTT) as its major creditor.

These figures are part of a "confidential" report on the oil stabilisation fund to be submitted to the National Petroleum Policy Committee, chaired by Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon, next Monday.

The report shows that the fund's total accrued payable amount is about 4,600 million baht, while the combined accrued receivable is about 600 million baht, resulting in a deficit of about 4,000 million baht.

Of the 4,600 million baht, the fund owes about 3,000 million baht to the PTT and another 800 million baht to oil companies.

It is expected that 214 million baht of income will go into the fund this month.

The fund was established as a buffer against the impact of shifting world oil prices on the domestic retail market.

The fund has been in the red since it was introduced years ago.

The government uses the fund to subsidise a variety of oil products: 1.30 baht per litre of kerosene, 0.38 baht per litre of high speed diesel oil, 0.15 baht per litre of bunker oil and 1.50 baht per kg of LPG [liquid petroleum gas].

Only two oil products--regular and premium gasoline--provide revenue for the fund. A litre of regular benzine earns the fund 1.20 baht, and a litre of premium gasoline 1.89 baht. Diesel oil and LPG are the two main products that upset the fund, with subsidised LPG being used in motor cars.

The fund has shown little sign of recovery, although the government last December increased the price of premium gasoline from 11.90 to 13.45 baht a litre. This increase has boosted the fuel's contribution to the fund from 0.89 baht a litre to 1.89 baht.

USSR AGREES TO BARTER FERTILIZER FOR CORN

BK300227 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 30 Jul 82 p 21

[Text] The Soviet Union has entered into a contract worth some 1,400 million baht to barter its fertilisers for some 500,000 tons of Thai maize. The agreement was reached between the Russian authorities and the Metro Group, a local fertiliser-marketing firm, it was learned yesterday.

News of the agreement immediately resulted in the domestic price of maize increasing, for the first time in three weeks, to 154-155 baht a picul (60 kgs) yesterday from Wednesday's 151-152 baht.

According to reports, some 300,000 tons of maize will be shipped to the Soviet Union by the Metro Group and the remaining 200,000 tons by the Agriculture and Cooperatives Ministry's marketing organisation for farmers.

All the maize is scheduled to be delivered between September and December this year, and reports say some 5,000 tons are now being transported into Bangkok, the country's export outlet, every day.

The Thai product has been priced at U.S.$122 per ton FOB Bangkok.

The deal will possibly make the Soviet Union the largest buyer of Thai maize this year, moving up from the third rank in 1981 when it purchased 270,000 tons.

Malaysia was the largest buyer of Thai maize last year, with some 500,000 tons, while Singapore came second, with some 470,000 tons.

However, despite the deal and other efforts being made to raise the price of maize, informed sources say maize farmers are unlikely to be happy with the price for the 1982-83 crop, the harvesting of which began three weeks ago.

It is believed that the world market price for maize this year will not be as high as what it was in 1981 as the United States, the world's largest producer of maize, is reportedly turning out a bumper crop.

Furthermore, the freight rates for maize from U.S. ports to Japan and Taiwan, the two major maize-importing countries, have been reduced to U.S.$15-16 a ton, the sources noted.

They recommended that the government take action to boost maize exports to the Middle East which is a potentially good market for the Thai product.

Last year Iran bought 250,000 tons of maize, while Iraq and Saudi Arabia bought 210,000 tons each.

It was also learned that Dr Somphop Susangkonkan, president of the Board of Trade [BOT] will lead a delegation to Japan next month to negotiate maize sales with representatives of the Japan Feed Trade Association.

From there, the team will proceed to Taipei to negotiate a similar deal with the Taiwanese authorities.

BOT has set a target to sell Japan and Taiwan 400,000 and 300,000 tons of maize from the new crop respectively.

'POST' EDITOR COMMENTS ON THACH VISIT

[By the Chongkhadikit]

[Text] When the ASEAN foreign ministers meet in Bangkok on Saturday [7 August] they have to decide not to drive Vietnam into a corner but to leave a way out--which could eventually lead to friendly cooperation between the non-communist and the communist states of Southeast Asia to keep out foreign domination.

This is the attitude of Thais in responsible positions following the recent visit by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach to this so-called "front-line state."

While Thach, in his talks in Thailand as well as in Singapore and Malaysia, our ASEAN allies, kept harping upon the "Chinese threat," he was told in Bangkok in no uncertain terms of the ASEAN fear of the "Soviet threat"--which, he was reminded, had been brought into this region by Hanoi. In supporting the Khmer Rouge in Kampuchea, China is reacting to the Soviet threat.

ASEAN and the Indochina states can work together to rid our region of these threats. The fact that Thach is willing to have further discussions in Hanoi with Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila and National Security Council [NCS] Secretary-General Prasong Sunsiri on peace, stability and regional problems as well as on bilateral issues shows that Vietnam can be receptive.

It is possible that Thach's conciliatory attitude--at least as far as Thailand and Malaysia are concerned--has been dictated by Vietnam's growing economic problems and concern over signs of Soviet expansionism with particular reference to Moscow's attempts to deal separately, rather than through Hanoi, with Laos and Kampuchea.

Thach's bravado about Vietnam having survived three years of suffering from international sanctions and about "keeping the door open" for the Soviets to use bases in Da Nang and Cam Ranh Bay could have been motivated by over-sensitivity on the reality of the problems.

The "sweetness and light" at the official meeting in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has been described by official observers as a tactic in an unchanged strategy. The strategy is to consolidate a Hanoi-dominated Indochina. Although there have been frequent denials from Hanoi of any plans to set up a federation of Indochina, Thach referred several times at his Bangkok press conference to "Indochina" as if it were an entity.

Thach tried to explain the Ho Chi Minh City proposals: partial withdrawal from Kampuchea, a safety zone along the Thai-Kampuchean border and an international conference on Southeast Asia.

He even expressed agreement with "total withdrawal" but added that it was conditional on the "legitimate interests of all parties." Thailand's concern is with the Vietnamese military presence in Kampuchea and Vietnam's concern is the "Chinese threat." Previously, he had mentioned only the "Chinese threat," but it comes up to the same strategy.

Since he raised the name of Pol Pot to try and prove that the recently formed coalition of Democratic Kampuchea (DK) was an "illusion," he was probably equating this organiser of mass murders of his own countrymen with the "Chinese threat."

Will Hanoi withdraw all its forces from Kampuchea if Pol Pot is not around--at least in Kampuchea--any more?

If, say, Democratic Kampuchea President Prince Norodom Sihanouk, suddenly wanted to deal with Vietnam (which he had aided in the past and with which he has since been disappointed for its lack of gratitude) and negotiate a settlement with Heng Samrin--which, from a study of the history of the mercurial prince, is not unthinkable--the problem of the Khmer Rouge armed force will remain. In fact, it could get worse, becoming like the Palestinian Liberation Organisation (PLO) disrupting Thai-Kampuchean border stability and ASEAN-Indochina cooperation with acts of sabotage, subversion and terrorism.

Perhaps, the ASEAN foreign ministers could try to convince their Vietnamese counterpart that the best way to eliminate Pol Pot from the scene--other than assassination or exile to China--is to let free and open general elections take place in Kampuchea under United Nations supervision. The people who have been abhorred by what Thach himself described as "genocide" are most unlikely to vote for Pol Pot and his gang.

If Vietnam is truly honest about its stated desire for neutrality in Kampuchea--which happens to be ASEAN's objective also--then Vietnam should withdraw its forces to allow the elections to take place. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi has given an assurance that if Heng Samrin, considered by ASEAN as a Vietnamese-installed puppet, is elected Thailand would accept him.

Thach would like neutrality not just for Kampuchea but for the rest of Southeast Asia as well. That is what ASEAN would like to see happen.

Marshal Sitthi has told me that China would also like a neutral Kampuchea. In this respect, it was interesting to hear Thach say that Vietnam would not "gang up" with ASEAN or any other countries against China because "China is a friend." This may appear contradictory to the "Chinese threat" statement but it shows that Vietnam is differentiating the "Chinese threat" in Kampuchea from relations with China itself.

The ASEAN foreign ministers will have to make clear to the Vietnamese that while Hanoi is worried about the "Chinese threat," ASEAN is concerned at the "Soviet threat," which has been brought into this region by Vietnam. In fact, it is believed that China supports the Khmer Rouge in raction to the Soviet presence in Vietnam. It would be advantageous to all countries to Southeast Asia to keep out foreign military and political domination and influence.

Thach may not have taken anything home in his bag, and the ASEAN countries may not have obtained any advantage out of his tour, but the dialogue has opened up options not previously considered likely. For one thing, we can talk more and this may lead to important changes in strategy on both sides--if both are sincere about peace and stability in the region.

Already, Thach who had previously refused to discuss the "Kampuchean problem" has discussed it with ACM Sitthi and Sqn-Ldr Prasong. This could mean that he is no longer adamant about the "irreversibility" of the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea.

The fact that Prasong, who had previously turned down Thach's request to meet him, agreed to see him shows that the NSC--and Thailand--is flexible. Thach wanted to see Prasong possibly because the Vietnamese grapevine had informed him of the NSC chief's importance in policymaking with regard to national security and he has spoken up on Kampuchea in a manner which Thach might have found interesting to explore.

At the same time, because of Prasong's tough stance on principles concerning the Indochina states, he wanted to make a personal assessment of the official. The motive may have been to "know thy enemy." Each probably found underneath the other's affable, urbane appearance, a man of steel. Unlike the diplomatic meeting at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, they reportedly got down to brass tacks.

Thach expressed willingness to negotiate further on refugees, both old and new, and on the repatriation of Kampucheans. When they parted, Thach said he would like to be friends with Prasong and Prasong replied that friends should help each other solve mutual problems. He invited Prasong to Hanoi for further talks and Prasong told him he had to ask the prime minister's permission.

MALAYSIAN GROUP CALLS ON THAI MUSLIM FOR FUNDS

BK120326 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 12 Aug 82 p 6

[Text] Narathiwat--A southern separatist movement has called on Thai Muslim people living inside Malaysia to support its subversive activitiesthrough financial contribution, a senior provincial official said.

Maj Chob Mongkolrat, the deputy director of the communist prevention and suppression office here, quoted an intelligence report as saying that the call was made by separatist leader in Kelantan District of Malaysia late last month.

He did not name the secessionist movement but identified the leader as Abdul Azis Awaeraibai who called a meeting of Thai Muslim people in Kua Musae village, Tambon Kua Musae in the Malaysian state.

He told the NATION that the secessionist leader was a former native of Buro village, Tambon Lojud of Waeng District here.

He was quoted as telling the people at the meeting that the fund raised from their contribution will be used to buy food supplies for the movement's members when they sneak into Thailand to carry out their subversive activities.

Maj Chob said the movement leader personally collected contribution from the villages whenever the separatists were ready to initiate an operation inside Thailand.

It was not known what had been the response of the villagers to the terrorists' appeal. Maj Chob said he had already passed on the intelligence report to all the government agencies concerned.

All of the various secessionist movements which seek to seceded the four southernmost provinces of Thailand have suffered a serious setback following a series of successful military drive by the Fourth Army Region.

HAN ON MUSLIM SEPARATIST BASES IN MALAYSIA

BK310648 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 31 Jul 82 p 4

[Text] Narathiwat--Fourth Army Region Commander Lt Gen Han Linanon yesterday called on Malaysia to show "sincerity" in its cooperation with Thailand to crack down on all the insurgency movements on both sides of the border.

In an interview with the NATION, Lt Gen Han said Thailand had proven its sincerity by launching an all-out offensive against the strongholds of the Communist Party of Malaya (CPM) on Thai soil.

He said Thailand had fulfilled its pledge to repress all the insurgency movements on the Tahi territory, including those which are using Thai territory as the springboard to undermine the stability of the neighbouring country.

"As a result of our all-out offensive, we have successfully destroyed all the major strongholds of CPM which aims to overthrow the Malaysian Government," he said.

He said he hoped the Malaysians would prove their sincerity in the same way.

Lt Gen Han quoted intelligence reports as showing that several southern Muslim separatist movements are taking refuge in Malaysia and even using the Malaysian territory as their bases to support their clandestine operations in Thailand.

Some of the secessionist movements which are trying to establish a buffer state between Thailand and Malaysia have been receiving financial support from some Muslim countries in the Middle East, he said.

Malaysian chairman of the Regional Border Committee Maj Gen Hashim is scheduled to visit Thailand tomorrow for talks with Thai leaders and to get first-hand information about the insurgency situation in southern Thailand, according to Lt Gen Han.

He added that the Malaysian chairman will also visit the biggest stronghold of CPM which was seized during the recent militaryoffensive in Na Thawi District of Songkhla. The Fourth Army Region used about 10 battalions of combined troops in the major offensive which was launched early this month against CPM guerrillas operating along the 576-kms long border.

COUNTRY TO SET UP FORCE OF RESERVISTS

[By Sonchai Nokeplub]

[Text] A national committee has been set up to form a force of reservists to strengthen the country's defences.

The project, to coincide with the fifth five-year development plan, would not only make use of the skills of discharged soldiers but would also help to improve the living conditions of the reservists through various economic and agricultural training schemes.

Col Wichai Hongsakun, chief of staff of the First Army Region's 11th Division, told the BANGKOK POST yesterday that the setting up of the committee had been approved recently by the cabinet after years of planning.

The committee is to be chaired by the Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Prayut Charumani and will have four sub-committees for political, economic, psychological and military affairs, Col Wichai said.

Sqn-Ldr Prasong Sunsiri, secretary-general of the National Security Council, has been named chairman of the political sub-committee; Dr Thaloeng Thamrongnawasawat, under-secretary of state for agriculture and cooperatives, will be chairman of the economic sub-committee; Dr Bunsom Martin, under-secretary of state for education, will be chairman of the psychological sub-committee; and Gen Sak Bunthrakun, deputy army commander-in-chief; will be chairman of military sub-committee.

Officials from the various ministries and other governmental organisations have been appointed members of the committee, which will first of all organise voluntary reservists into a group called the "reserved military for national security."

The commanding general of each of the four army regions has been named to head the project in his area, Col Wichai said.

The reservists will be given training in politics, and economic and psychological tactics. They will also attend courses to sharpen their skills in their chosen activities following their discharge from the military to help improve their standards of living, Col Vichai said.

The reservists and their relatives will be given the chance to form into co-operative groupings, with financial assistance and credit from the Bank of Agriculture and Cooperatives which will also be a member of the national committee, he said.

Most of the discharged soldiers involved are former conscripts who have served two years in the armed forces, and most of them are poor, Col Wichai said.

Besides getting a chance to better their lot, the reservists would be of great help to the country in times of emergency, he said.

He said the reservists were familiar with military weapons and were used to military discipline, so they would need little training when called into action.

In the first army region alone, there are about 500,000 reservists, Col Wichai said.

Provincial and district working groups have been set up under the chairmanship of governors and district officers to help organise the project, he said.

Work has already started in several provinces and the response from potential reservists has been good, Col Wichai said.

MOULINAKA LEADERS SAY SRV TROOPS STEP UP ACTIONS

BK250253 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 25 Aug 82 pp 1, 2

[By Jacques Bekaert]

The interview took place in one of the string of villages controlled by this Sihanoukist faction, some ten kilometres inside Kampuchea.

During the interview, Vietnamese shells landed only a few hundred metres from the camp. No one was hurt, however.

"It has been like this almost every day in the past two to three weeks," Col Nhem Sophon said, as the interview resumed following a brief interruption by the Vietnamese shelling.

This correspondent accompanied one of the Moulinaka's patrol units from the main base to the Sihanoukist frontline of defence to observe the resistance force's actions against the Vietnamese.

"Vietnamese troops are about four to five kilometres from here. Once in a while, we encounter one of their patrols. So far, since the founding of our movement in August, 1979, we have lost more than 200 men in battles with Vietnamese troops," he said.

Col Nhem Sophon said that more than 1,000 of his men had died of malaria.

Moulinaka's political director, Chak Sarik, a former director of protocol under Prince Norodom Sihanouk, told the NATION that the movement was in bad need of food and medical supplies.

Chak Sarik has spent most of his time teaching guerrilla and political warfare to the Moulinaka fighters.

"We must be ready for the new dry season. If we have enough food, we could infiltrate behind the enemy line; we could go deeper inside the country and contact villagers. But we need rice to take with us to survive and to offer to the villagers who have very little themselves. Rice has become a kind of weapon, a political weapon, as important as guns," Nhem Sophon added.

At the time of the interview, Nhem Sophon said he had not met the alleged Khmer Rouge defectors who were said to have fled to join the Sihanoukists.

"I heard there are about 400 of them, including about 100 soldiers. I was not surprised by their defections. In fact, about two years ago, when we were really desperate, I urged some of our people to join the Khmer Rouge so that they would have something to eat to survive. These defectors could be our own people who now want to return to us," Nhem Sophon said.

The Moulinaka president said he had several "big schemes" to accomplish to pursue their anti-Vietnamese goals.

"We now have a good intelligence-gathering system to detect what's happening inside the country. There is a lot we could do in the future. But we have to keep it confidential," he said.

He claimed that his men could get as close as two kilometres from Poi Pet.

Nhem Sophen produced some of the new weapons the Sihanoukists received last March from China.

He also produced a rifle similar to the famous AK-47, captured from Vietnamese soldiers. "The only different characteristic of this new Vietnamese rifle is that several parts are made of plastic," Nhem Sophon explained.

He claimed that Moulinaka's force now stands at 1,600 strong with a few thousand more who have undergone military training.

"These people are ready to go out and fight when we receive more weapons," he said.

Moulinaka is one of the three groups of the national Sihanoukist army under the general command of former Khmer Prime Minister In Tam.

POLICE WARN OF REMOVAL OF BCP, SUA BY FORCE

BK070157 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 7 Aug 82 pp 1, 20

[Text] Border Patrol Police [BPP] have warned guerrillas from two warring Burmese factions to leave Thailand or be forcibly swept out.

The Shan United Army [SUA] and the Burmese Communist Party [BCP] were given until yesterday afternoon to evacuate their armed supporters from Thailand.

Failure to meet the deadline, said police, would result in a harsher suppression campaign against the two forces than that taken against the SUA at Ban Hin Tael (now Ban Thoet Thai) last February.

The ultimatum followed meetings on Thursday between the BPP, led by Pol Col Chamrat Chitcharoenrat, and representatives of the two forces at Ban Huai Sala School in Chiang Rai's Mae Ai District. Thai officials told the two guerrilla armies to get their troops out of Thailand and to limit their fighting, which began last month, to Burmese territory.

An informed source also disclosed that Thai authorities promised to release three of the four Burmese communists who were captured on Wednesday in Mae Ai District and to return their weapons provided that the BCP immediately withdraw its troops. One of the captured BCP men is reported to be in a serious condition in Fang District hospital.

Before the meetings on Thursday, Thai authorities received a letter from BCP guerrillas threatening to burn down two Thai villages in Mae Ai District if their four comrades were not released.

High-ranking police officers met representatives of the Shans 30 minutes after meeting BCP leaders.

Police said that the Shans burned down five Lahu villages at Tambon Tha Ton in Mae Ai District on Wednesday and Thursday, leaving 500 people homeless.

According to police, the attacks occurred because the Lahu hilltribes had been aiding the Burmese communists in their struggle against the Shans.

More than 100 people have been killed and more than 70 wounded since the two guerrillas armies began fighting last month. Both sides have sought treatment for their wounded men at Fang District hospital.

As a result of the clashes, Thai authorities have prohibited tourists from crossing the Ban Tha Ton bridge across the Kok River and have also closed three schools in Mae Ai District.

HAN ON CRUSHING OF CPM 'LIBERATION ARMY'

BK040231 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 4 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] Fourth Army Region Commander Lt-Gen Han Linanon said yesterday that the Communist Party of Malaysia (CPM) had been crushed and its so-called "Liberation Army"reduced to small splinter groups which were no longer capable of threatening the security of either Thailand or Malaysia.

Lt-Gen Han was speaking after meeting with Malaysian Second Army Commander and chairman of the Regional Border Committee Maj-Gen Datuk Hasim Bin Mohamad Ali at the Regional Border Committee Office (RBCO) in Songkhla.

The meeting, attended by RBCO Chief Col Wira Malaiwong reiterates the achievement of the Thai forces in seizing three major CPM camps recently.

Preparations were also made for the 27th meeting of the Thai-Malaysian General Border Committee in Kuala Lumpur on August 26.

Describing the capture of the three bases as a great victory for Thai forces, spearheaded by the Fourth Army, Lt-Gen Han said Malaysia had congratulated Thailand on its success and expressed relief that the CPM Liberation Army had been smashed.

The so-called Liberation Army was reduced to small guerrilla groups that were too weak to affect the security of Malaysia and Thailand, he said.

He said most guerrillas had dispersed and mingled with civilian sympathisers in Thailand or Malaysia.

It was necessary for Thailand and Malaysia to cooperate and coordinate in searching and hunting down CPM remnants in the common border area.

Asked about the loss of the CPM and the remaining camps in Thailand, Lt-Gen Han said that while only four or five bodies were found during the operation which began last month, the CPM lost its three biggest camps.

"What they have left are only small, temporary camps," he said.

Asked about the possibility of developing the captured camps into self-defence and development villages similar to captured Communist Party of Thailand camps in the south, Lt-Gen Han said the army had no intention of doing so as the bases were in dangerous zones.

Lt-Gen Han also strongly denied reports quoting him as saying that the continued presence of Malaysian troops at the border was responsible for the tension there, and predicting the withdrawl of Malaysian troops.

"The news reports affected the good relations and caused misunderstanding between the two countries," he said.

He said that when the CPM was crushed and peace was restored, the war atmosphere had diminished and there was no need for so many troops to be stationed at the border.

However, he said it was up to Malaysia to decide if it wanted to station troops along the border.

INSURGENTS RAID CONSTRUCTION CAMP, VILLAGES

[Text] Phatthalung--About 150 heavily-armed insurgents yesterday morning raided a camp of construction workers and two villages. A Tambon doctor was shot dead in the presence of villagers after the insurgents overran one of the two villages.

A defence volunteer was critically wounded and four others captured while the insurgents rampaged through the two villages in Si Banphot subdistrict here. The four captives were later released in the afternoon.

The guerrillas, armed with M-16 rifles and M-79 grenade launchers, declared at the seized camp in Si Banphot subdistrict that they would punish the workers who assisted the military build a road linking Khao Bu and Tambon Tapaen.

They delivered the threat to the gathering of about 200 construction workers and the members of their families at the camp in Si Banphot subdistrict.

Surasak Pinmani, manager of the Siam Civil Engineering Company which undertook the construction work, was also among the people gathered at gun-point.

About 90 of the communist insurgents later stormed Thayung village in Tambon Tapaen. The village was seized after about 10 defence volunteers who had put up a resistance retreated from the village.

Yuk Rattana, the Tambon doctor was killed by the communist insurgents who declared to about 45 families of villagers that those who served as the government's informants would face death.

About 40 insurgents of the group later laid siege to Tai Pradu village, about five kms from Thayung village, and clashed with about 30 defence volunteers.

The attackers seized the village after about 15 minutes of fighting. A defence volunteer was critically wounded during the fighting and four others captured.

The communist insurgents later gathered at the camp of the construction company and retreated to their stronghold on Banthat Mountaing range in Khuan Khanun District here.

Deputy Governor Thavat Phothisunthon said that the raids were to capture weapons from the defence volunteers who provide protection to the construction workers and to kill the spies of the government.

KHMER REFUGEES WANT TO RETURN TO SIHANOUK FOLD

BK250429 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 25 Aug 82 p 7

[Text] Eighteen-year-old Reth Ngon, like many of his fellow refugees at the Khao I-Dang holding centre who heard Prince Norodom Sihanouk's call to return home, will be going back to Kampuchea.

He does not know what awaits him and his family of eight when they go back to join Sihanouk's forces. All he knows now is that he wants to go home.

"So many people are going home, so we want to go home too. I don't know what will happen. It's up to them (Royalist leaders in Kampuchea)," he said.

Before Sihanouk came to speak at Khao I-Dang Camp last month, no one at the camp would have believed that the refugees would volunteer, en masse, to go home.

The only place most of the refugees in this Ta Phraya District camp wanted to go, before Sihanouk's dramatised "return" to his people, was a third country to resettle.

But they have realised that their chances of being accepted by a third country are very slim. And their aimless existence as refugees with nothing to do and nowhere to go, have led them to reach for the only acceptable alternative that came their way--Norodom Sihanouk.

Thus the prince's impassioned call for his "sons and daughters" to return and help regain and rebuild the motherland, gave the refugees a new hope in life.

Most of the 44,196 Khmer refugees were peasants who still regard their monarch with a certain degree of awe and reverence.

The educated Khmers, who are inclined to have doubts about Sihanouk, have long been resettled in third countries.

Indeed most of the 13,000 refugees who have signed up to join the Sihanouk faction of the recently former coalition government, profess a faith that Sihanouk is the man who can reclaim their country from the Vietnamese without handing it back to the much hated Pol Pot regime.

One refugee leader at Khao I-Dang, 62-year-old Som Reth, explained: "Before, we only had leaders that we don't trust, but now we have a coalition under Prince Sihanouk, so now we want to go back."

A former farmer, 34-year-old Tat Vang, who escaped to Thailand with his wife and two children in 1979, has the same faith in Sihanouk.

"We should be able to take back our country," he said optimistically "and I'll do anything Prince Sihanouk tells me. I can just be part of the population or I can be a fighter, whatever he tells me."

About 3,000 Khmer refugees have already left Khao I-Dang for the royalist stronghold of Sihanouk Borei (town), formerly O Samach, opposite Chong Chom in Surin Province.

But the flow has been stopped because the Sihanoukist headquarters is not yet ready to receive such an unexpectedly large influx of people. And some reported clashes with the Vietnamese have shown the village's military leaders that the sudden presence of a large body of untrained civilians in their base could prove quite stifling.

However, both the refugees themselves and Khao I-Dang officials say that as much as half of the camp's population now wants to join the Sihanouk faction, and that more will probably come forward to join the homeward-bound exodus.

Now that the refugees are reasonably safe and well-fed, and are no longer the starving skeletons that first crossed into Thailand after the 1979 Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea, they are beginning to get homesick.

"It's comfortable staying in Thailand, but our hearts are not comfortable. We miss our country, we miss our homes and we miss our relatives," Tat lamented.

But not all who have signed up for repatriation really want to return, because so many want to go back, some simply have to follow the momentum.

Eighteen-year-old Hong Sareth does not want to go back. Both his parents died of starvation in Kampuchea during the Pol Pot era.

But Hong's elder and only brother wants to go back, "so I must go back too. Everything depends on my brother and whatever happens is up to the stars," he said with an uncertain laugh.

Back across the border the Kampucheans have an opportunity to freely make a living. Trade, particularly monetary trade, is forbidden in Khao I-Dang.

Thus, the large majority of refugees has nothing to do if they do not enroll in various occupational courses offered by aid agencies in the camp, or work for one of the agencies.

Out of the 44,000 Kymers at the camp, only about 4,000 work for some agencies, receiving pay in kinds.

Som, the Khmer leader, summed upthe refugees' feeling: "Out there we can be free to do anything, but in here we have to live under many rules. Out there we can make a living. We can fish and sell it to the Thais, and then use the money to buy goods in Thailand and go back to sell it to our own people."

For whatever reasons, be it national aspirations, human needs, or self-interests, the refugees have grabbed a new hope in their uncertain future.

WARRANTS ISSUED FOR 1,600 VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

BK180315 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 18 Aug 82 p 6

[Text] Nakhon Phanom--The number of Vietnamese refugees missing from this northeastern province, registered at about 800 persons in May, has doubled to 1,600 this month and warrants for the arrest of them have been issued, a senior police officer said here yesterday.

Deputy chief of the Vietnamese refugees office here, Pol Lot Col Seri Temiyawet, said these refugees sneaked out of the province to work elsewhere without prior permissions from the provincial authorities.

"When we found out on May 31 that about 800 Vietnamese refugees disappeared from the province, we gave them a chance to return and report themselves to the authorities. Our latest survey, however, found that the number of those leaving the province without legal permission doubled to 1,600 persons," he said.

Pol Lt Col Seri said police were assigned from Nakhon Phanom to search for the fugitive refugees and 28 of them were arrested when they were found working in Bangkok and outlying Nonthaburi Province.

Most of them worked as welders, tailors and watch repairers.

Twenty-five of them were fined 500 baht each before they were sent back to this northeastern province while three others who committed the offence twice were sent to Lat Bua Khao refugee centre in Si Khiu District of neighbouring Nakhon Ratchasima, he said.

The Interior Ministry, meanwhile, requested people to help the government in keeping surveillance for Vietnamese refugees in Thailand.

Interior Minister Gen Sitthi Chirarot said: "We have to be more careful with the entry of Vietnamese into our country." Nakhon Phanom is among the nine provinces where about 40,000-50,000 Vietnamese refugees of the Dien Bien Phu era are confined. There are about 30,000 Vietnamese refugees in Nakhon Phanom alone.

POLICE ARREST MEMBER OF ANANDA MARGA IN BANGKOK

[Text] An Indian member of the Ananda Marga religious sect was arrested in Bangkok on Friday with a handgun, 95 rounds of ammunition and a coil of electric wire, crime suppression division police reported yesterday.

Police identified the Ananda Marga disciple as Anil Sharan, 29, from India. They said he had visited Thailand a few times and last arrived in Bangkok in June.

Anil told the POST from his CSD cell that he bought the gun and ammunition to take them to India to protect sect members from harassment and attacks by communist elements.

"I am not a thief or a robber. I came here on a mission for humanity," Sharan said.

CSD police said they also found in Sharan's rented room in the Thewes area two human skulls, two knives and a large amount of printed material about the sect.

Sharan said that the skulls and the two knives were used for a ritual every full moon.

A police source said that Deputy Police Chief Narong Mahanon ordered the CSD police on alert several days ago following a report that Ananda Marga members were planning to stage terrorist acts--possibly a plane hijacking--or acquire arms, in Bangkok.

On Friday afternoon, a CSD unit saw Sharan go to the Prinya building in the Ploenchit area, reportedly to buy a gun, police said. They then shadowed him to a rented house in Soi Chuai Puang, Bangkhen District, where an Italian girl, also a member of the Ananda Marga sect, was staying.

The policemen then ordered Sharan to come out and searched the house, where they allegedly found a .38 calibre revolver and 95 cartridges among other items.

Police said the Italian girl, whom they identified as Miss Maria Grazia Minotto, 25, was not at home during the raid. They said they were still looking for her and would like to question her.

Police said that before the arrest, Sharan had phoned an American whose Indian name is Dada Peenak Pani in Ipoh, Malaysia. Dada, whom police suspect to be leader of a fanatical wing of the sect and also a saboteur, reportedly told Sharan that he would be coming to Bangkok with 230,000 baht for him.

Police said Sharan had a 20,000 baht bank account in the Bangkok Bank's Khlongchan branch and had about 20,000 baht in several currencies in his possession at the time of his arrest.

He is being held on a charge of illegally possessing firearms.

The sect--which has been accused of terrorist acts in a number of countries--first attracted attention in Thailand when three members--an American woman, a British girl and an Australian man--were arrested in a Bangkok hotel with 1.25 kilogrammes of high explosives and bomb-making instruments in February 1978.

They were sentenced to six months imprisonment by the Bangkok Military Court after they pleaded guilty to the illegal possession of firearms.

BRIEFS

HILLTRIBE GROUP SURRENDERS--More than 7,400 left-wing Mong hilltribes people have laid down weapons and surrendered to the joint military-police-civil 33 force. The group of 1,184 Mong families had been supporting communist guerrillas on Hin Long Kla Mountain in a long fight against the government. Led by representatives of the joint force, the Mong marched down the mountain on Sunday to a new settlement provided by the government at Ban Tabbuoek, Lom Kao District of Phetchabun. The military has helped in building houses in the new settlement. More Mong are expected to surrender and join the government's resettlement programme. BORDER POLICE ARREST WA 'REBELS'--Chiang Mai Border Patrol Police (BPP) units arrested another thirteen left-wing Wa hilltribesmen in Mae Ai District on Saturday afternoon. BPP sources said the hilltribesmen were members of the 500-strong Burmese Communist Party guerrilla group who fled across the border into Thailand after it was routed in a battle with the Shan United Army last month. The sources said the arrests, made at Ban Pong Hai, brought to 23 the number of Wa guerrillas held by BPP units along the Thai-Burmese border. Seized from the guerrillas were six M-16 rifles, some pistols, two M-79 grenade launchers, more than 1,500 rounds of ammunition and a radio transmitter. All were taken for interrogation at Mae Ai District police station, the sources said. A district-level border committee met yesterday to consider legal action against the guerrillas, they added. [Text] [BK160209 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 16 Aug 82 p 5]

MORE WA GUERRILLAS ARRESTED--Chiang Mai--Ten heavily-armed leftist Wa hilltribesmen were arrested in Mae Ai District yesterday morning as Border Patrol Police (BPP) prepared to flush out hundreds of others refusing to leave Thai territory. The arrest was made by BPP unit near Ban Huai Ton Yang and Doi Laem where about 500 Wa guerrilla members of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP) have sought refuge after losing a battle against Shan United Army (SUA) rebels on Doi Lang. The group was ordered to leave Thai soil by August 10, but has so far shown no intention of crossing back into Burma. The weapons being carried by the Wa hilltribes arrested yesterday included an M-60 light machine-gun, six AK-47 rifles, handgrenades and a large amount of ammunition. They were taken to Mae Ai District police station where they were charged with having entered Thailand illegally and being in possession of dangerous war weapons. The arrest comes in the wake of mounting tensions along the Thailand's northernmost border districts of Mae Ai and Fang where the SUA and BCP have reportedly sent reinforcements to fight for control of the Doi Lang highlands. The Royal Thai Air Force early yesterday morning sent up two OV-10 planes to observe the situation along the border. Meanwhile, two BPP platoons moved in to Ban Huai Ton Yang and Doi Laem and built a temporary camp and helicopter landing pad in preparation to drive the BCP from the area. There were no reports of fighting in the area yesterday. [Text] [BK150813 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 15 Aug 82 p 3]

NEW SRV ENVOY EXPECTED--Vietnam's new ambassador to Thailand will be career diplomat Nguyen Khao Ce [name as published], a expert in European and American affairs, diplomatic sources said yesterday. Ce is expected to arrive in Thailand in about a month, following the departure for home of the current envoy, Hoang Bao Son. Son has served three years in Thailand, the normal Vietnamese diplomatic term. The new ambassador will be coming to Bangkok from his current position as head of the Second European Division of the Foreign Ministry in Hanoi. The section deals with Western European countries. He had served previously as head of the North American desk at the Foreign Ministry, and prior to that was part of Hanoi's negotiating team at the Paris peace talks. Outgoing Ambassador Son is expected to leave Thailand in about four weeks, diplomats said. [Text] [BK010106 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 31 Jul 82 p 24]

JAN-JUN RICE EXPORTS--The export price of Thai rice during the first half of this year was over 2,000 baht or 23.54 percent lower than the price of the rice shipped out during January-June 1981, the Board of Trade [BOT] said in its monthly rice report. The report, compiled by Mr Sman Ophatwong, chairman of the BOT's rice committee, noted that Thailand shipped out a total of 1,016,230.45 tons of rice worth 12,524.1 million baht in the first six months of this year. This was an increase of 82,339.36 tons in volume but a decrease of 3,145.5 million baht in earnings from the rice exports made during the same period of 1981. The average export price of Thai rice this year was 6,535.80 baht a ton, down from 8,549.10 baht in the first half of 1981. [Excerpt] [Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 27 Jul 82 p 17 BK]

JAN-MAR OIL IMPORTS--Though Thailand's oil imports during the first quarter of this year dropped by 11.02 percent in quantity, the import bill increased by 1.77 percent from what it was in the same quarter of 1981. According to the Board of Trade statistics, Thailand imported 1,761.46 million litres of crude oil worth 9,293.5 million baht during January-March 1982, compared to 1,979.57 million litres worth 1,131.6 million baht during the like period of 1981. It also imported 321.97 million litres of semi-refined oil worth 1,618.4 million baht, up 5.79 percent in volume and 23.69 percent in value over the corresponding period last year. Imports of refined oil products during the January-March period were 548.87 million litres worth 3,219.1 million baht, a sharp fall of 42.12 percent in volume and 37.5 percent in volume [as published] from the imports of 948.30 million litres worth 5,150.9 million baht during the same period of 1981. Imports of kerosene and fuel oil dropped sharply by 95.84 percent and 45.32 percent respectively. [Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 27 Jul 82 p 17 BK]

MILITARY TALKS WITH U.S.--The Thai supreme commander revealed that the U.S. Government has agreed to supply Thailand a costly but devastating long-range antiship missile known as Harpoon to boost defense capability of the Thai armed forces. He said the United States agreed to the sale of Harpoon after it was assured of Thailand's ability to handle the highly sophisticated missile. The supreme commander already left for the United States with a delegation of high-ranking military officials for a 7-day visit at the invitation of the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. He is expected to negotiate with U.S. authorities over the sale of Harpoon, a deadly missile which can be launched from aircraft and surface vessels. While in the United States, the Thai military officers will also discuss with senior U.S. officials over military assistance to Thailand. ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS--The Interior Ministry has set up a new body to directly handle issuance of identity cards and control occupations of illegal immigrants living in 10 provinces along the Thai-Burmese border, a senior official said yesterday. Deputy Undersecretary of State for Interior Loet Hongphakdi said there are about 50,000 of these illegal immigrants. About 30,000 of them are Burmese refugees, 10,000 Haw Chinese and 10,000 Chinese who were former members of the Kuomintang Nationalist Army. He said, the illegal immigrants have been residing in Thailand for a long time and were all registered. The body, which was set up during a meeting of an ad hoc committee dealing with illegal immigrants, will coordinate its work with a joint command centre for the 10 provinces on the Thai-Burmese border. The joint command headed by Supreme Commander Gen Saiyut Koetphon is staffed with 62 officials involved in the refugee affairs on the part of the Interior Ministry, according to the deputy interior undersecretary of state. The ad hoc committee yesterday turned down a proposal to set up a college for minority people on grounds that the hilltribesmen have already been provided with educational courses by the government. AID TO DROUGHT-HIT AREAS--More than 14 million rai of farmlands in the north and northeast are still facing a serious threat from the prevailing drought which has not eased off despite relief efforts and little rain over the past week. Agriculture Minister Chuan Liekphai said the situation in the north where at least 10 provinces were affected was more severe than any other part of the country. He told a press conference that about 7.3 million rai of farmlands in the north were affected by the aridity but actual damage could not be estimated. He said the Agriculture Ministry had so far mobilized 1,023 huge water pumps to all the affected areas and at least 788,000 rai of farmlands were expected to have been saved by the relief measures. In areas where no water resources were available artificial rain was made from the ministry's four rain-making centres in Lopburi, Nakhon Sawan, Lampang and Khon Kaen. The cabinet yesterday authorized the irrigation department to use 51 million baht of its budget to fund a relief programme to provide water to affected farmers. IMPROVED SITUATION IN SOUTH--Commander of the 4th Army Region Lt Gen Han Linanon says that the situation in southern Thailand has markedly improved following the implementation of the Tai Rom Yen [peaceful south] policy in the region. He says that robber and the crime rate have decreased after the 4th Army Region has carried out its 9th and 11th operations. The commander says that, as the result of the Tai Rom Yen operations, the communists have lost most of their major strongholds. Their forces have been dispersed into small units. Lt Gen Han says that the capture of the communist strongholds will help restore peace in the south because this will also lead to the end of the separatist movements in that region. RADIO AUSTRALIA EXAMINES DEBATE ON TIMOR

BK281048 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1110 GMT 27 Aug 82

[From the "Australian Insight" Program]

[Text] A Portuguese parliamentary mission is visiting Australia to talk to the federal government about the former Portuguese territory of East Timor, now a province of Indonesia. The three-member delegation is headed by opposition member of parliament, Dr (Manuel Tilman), who is himself a Timorese. Political correspondent (John Lombard) reports on the talks held in Canberra:

[Begin recording] Dr (Tilman) and his colleagues spent about 45 minutes in discussion with the Australian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Tony Street, in his office in Parliament House. The talks were described as friendly. At a news conference, Dr (Tilman) said he had told Mr Street there would be a new Portuguese resolution on East Timor which would be put to the United Nations General Assembly meeting in New York next month. Dr (Tilman) said this would be a more moderate resolution than previous ones which had condemned Indonesia's takeover of East Timor in December 1975. He said he had asked for Australia's support.

But although Dr (Tilman) was unable to give details of the proposed resolution, there will be no change in Australia's policy toward East Timor. Mr Street told me later there was no question of Australia voting for any resolution which would question East Timor being an integral part of Indonesia. Four years ago, Australia gave de facto recognition to the Indonesian annexation of East Timor and there is no intention to change that position.

Dr (Tilman) and his delegation had a busy day in Canberra. Early this morning, they had talks with the chairman of the senate foreign affairs and defense committee inquiring into East Timor, Senator Douglas Scott, and later they met members of the opposition Labor Party.

Coinciding with the Portuguese visit has come news that the Australian Government has refused entry to Australia to a representative of the Fretilin Independence Movement in East Timor who had been invited to appear before a senate committee. Jose Ramos Horta, Fretilin's representative at the United Nations in New York, applied earlier this year for entry to Australia to give evidence to Senator Scott's committee, but the Minister for Immigration, John Hodges, refused a visa on the advice of the department of foreign affairs. A spokesman told me Mr Horta had been refused a visa for the past 4 years since Australia's recognition of East Timor as part of Indonesia. He said Australia did not recognize Fretilin as an independent Timorese government in exile and therefore Mr Horta would not be given permission to come to Australia. However, the government's decision has raised protests within Australia.

Ken Fry, an opposition Labor Party member of parliament, claimed the Australian Government had bowed to the pressure of Indonesian fears that Mr Horta would give evidence embarrassing to Indonesia. Mr Horta, he said, had long-standing links with Australia. His sister was an Australian citizen and his father had fought with the Australian commando force in Timor against the Japanese in the Second World War.

The Australian Council for Overseas Aid, a strong critic of Indonesia's annexation of East Timor, was equally critical. I spoke to the council's executive director, (Bob Warren).

[Question] Why should the Australian Government give Mr Horta a visa?

[Answer] Well, we believe that the senate committee, which has been set up to examine all the aspects surrounding the position on East Timor, should have available to it the maximum range of information possible, and for that reason, Ramos Horta is a very important person to talk to. He has a historical knowledge of the situation in East Timor. He sees it from a particular point of view which has a great deal of support in East Timor and we think that as the committee itself is unable to go into East Timor, it especially should be able to listen to the views of a person like Ramos Horta. In the interests of having complete information for a serious inquiry by a parliamentary committee, we believe that he should be allowed into Australia.

[Answer] Well, this is true, and the foreign minister takes a position which is totally defensible within the policy of the present government. (?But here) we have a conflict of interests. Does the policy restrict the information available to parliament according to its policy position on the countries (?which the people) recommend? We think that given the circumstances the parliament should be properly informed and on those grounds and those grounds alone we will press the government to allow Ramos Horta to come in to give evidence to this committee.

[Question] Why should the government change now? It hasn't given Mr Horta a visa since it gave de facto recognition to the Indonesian annexation of East Timor?

[Answer] That's quite right, and the government has also informed Mr Horta that they would not give him a visa in the future. But we believe that on this occasion that there is a very fundamental issue at stake here. Does parliament get proper information, full information and or does it not? Does the government dictate to parliamentary committees their source of information or do they not?

[Question] What is the issue at stake here?

[Answer] We believe that the East Timor question is one that has to be properly investigated from as many points of view as possible and on those grounds we seek Horta's entry to this country.

[Question] No other?

[Answer] No other grounds. They are the only grounds. (Bob Warren) of the Australian Council for Overseas Aid, however, a spokesman told me the government would not change its position.

BRIEFS

AIRCRAFT CARRIER OPTIONS DISCUSSED--The minister of defense, Mr Sinclair, has criticized the report from a federal parliamentary committee which says there is little justification for buying an aircraft carrier for the Australian Navy. Mr. Sinclair said the committee ignored the problem that in wartime, particularly in a regional conflict, Australia may not have the support of its major allies. He said the government was assessing six options for a vessel to replace the aircraft carrier, Melbourne, which was recently taken out of service. The options are three different types of short-takeoff aircraft carriers, a large conventional carrier, a converted merchant ship and no carrier at all. The defense minister also announced that the federal government would not go ahead with the purchase of two British-made minesweepers but would review Australia's need for minesweepers. Mr. Sinclair said negotiations were underway with a New South Wales firm to build two mine-hunting catamarans at a cost of $212 million. That's about the same in American dollars. MEAT TRADE AGREEMENT DETAILED--The minister for primary industry, Mr Nixon, says new conditions to be met by export meatworks will ensure the integrity of Australia's meat trade with the United States. Mr Nixon announced details of the new arrangements today. They will mean that the original list of approved establishments able to export meat to America will be replaced by a new list to take effect from the beginning of October. From that time, the minister will be able to take into account the reputation and proven integrity of any meatworks before issuing an export certificate. Certificates may also be withdrawn while criminal charges are dealt with. Mr Nixon said the government expected to have the report of the Royal Commission into the Australian meat industry by late September and this would have an important bearing on the issuing of export certificates. ABORIGINALS SEND ENVOYS OVERSEAS--Aboriginal land councils in northern and central Australia are to send their own ambassadors overseas. The Federation of Aboriginal Land Councils announced the move in Alice Springs today along with other measures signed to pressure the Australian and Queen Island Governments into granting land rights for Queensland' aborigines. A spokesman for the federation said it would appoint an ambassador to counter the federal government which he claimed was falsely representing aborigines in the international arena. He also said undertakings have been received from African nations pledging to pull out of the Commonwealth Games in Brisbane if police or security forces intervene in aboriginal protest activities. The spokesman said the only way such actions could be averted was for the Queensland Government to grant its aborigines land rights, self-determination and reparations before the games began. ELECTION RESULTS CONTESTED--The results of 44 of the 109 seats contested in Papua New Guinea's general election are facing legal challenges. The complaints stemming from the June election ranged from charges of bribery and electoral malpractice to allegations of incorrect counting of votes and stolen ballot boxes. Among the top members of parliament being challenged is the current deputy prime minister, Mr Pius Wingti, who is currently the acting prime minister in Mr Somare's absence from Papua New Guinea. The new finance minister and former police commissioner, Mr Philip Bouraga, is also facing a challenge. The former deputy prime minister in the previous government, Mr Iambakey Okuk, says he is preparing for a challenge in his highlands electorate, Simbu. EDITORIAL ISSUES FLOOD WARNING

[Editorial]

[Text]

WE came out with a call in these columns nearly two weeks ago for precaution against possible floods. We based our warning on the reports of continuous rainfall in the Northern Burma and hilly regions elsewhere and rapidly rising levels in the big rivers. Heavy rains have persisted since then and our fears have turned into a reality in the Mon State and Karen State. Water levels in the Salween, Sittang and Irrawaddy were also reported the other day to be rising at some places. Pegu is also partly under floods.

According to reports that came out in the local newspapers on Wednesday, more than 22,000 acres of paddy have been submerged in Kyaikmaraw Township, Mon State. A number of villages along Thaton-Pa-an motor road have also been flooded as are crops and homes in Hlaingbwe, Kawkareik and other townships in the Karen State as of 11 July. Tatmadawmen, firemen, Red Cross teams and volunteer groups are engaged in relief and rescue work under the supervision of Party organs and People's Councils. Mon State People's Council Executive Committee members and departmental officials were reported to have taken measures for relief of flood victims and rehabilitation of flood-devastated paddy fields.

Floods can bring extensive loss of private and public property, destruction of crops and damage to roads and rails. We have witnessed such devastation along our river systems repeatedly in the past. Most notably, floods in August 1974 wreaked havoc in the Upper Chindwin, Upper Irrawaddy, Sittang and Lower Salween areas affecting 68 townships, destroying 90,000 acres of crops and damaging more than 40 dams and embankments. Some 2,000 head of cattle also perished in the disaster.

While some areas are already under floods, the threat in other areas is still very much alive. While relief and rehabilitation measures are under way in the affected areas, precautionary measures in the threatened areas must be stepped up to minimize the loss as far as possible. If natural disasters cannot be prevented, then preparedness can check their devastation and minimize the loss. We believe the natural disaster preparedness committees are doing just that right now.

ENERGY MINISTER COMMENTS ON RECENT OPEC MEETING

BK270955 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0708 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Jakarta, 27 Aug (ANTARA)--Mines and Energy Minister Subroto Thursday denied that negotiations between the government with Caltex have come to a deadlock over the sharing of production in the renewed contract. Negotiations still are in progress, he told the press here following a meeting with the head of state. The production sharing contract on a 85:15 ratio with Caltex signed in 1971 will terminate in November next year. The government demands a greater share in the renewed contract.

Minister Subroto reported to the head of state the results of the recent meeting in Vienna of the OPEC observation committee on the oil market developments. Subroto predicted that demand for oil will increase with the rising consumption in the coming winter during the fourth quarter of this year. OPEC output this week averaged 16.9 million barrels per day, well below the OPEC ceiling of 17.5 million barrels.

Commenting on the release of oil stocks by industrialised countries, the minister believed the release will diminish in the third quarter of this year and will continue to dwindle in the fourth quarter. According to Subroto, the committee agreed to maintain the OPEC production ceiling at 17.5 million barrels until the end of the third quarter. The ceiling will be reviewed by the fourth quarter. The committee also agreed to maintain the OPEC check price at U.S. dollar 34 per barrel.

Subroto dismissed reports of Pertamina planning to lower its export price as groundless.

When asked whether the government plans to raise oil fuel prices at home this year the minister said no decision is taken on oil fuel prices at home.

TRADE MINISTER RADIUS PRAWIRO LEAVES FOR BRAZIL

BK201055 Jakarta ANTARA in English 1030 GMT 20 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Jakarta, 20 Aug (ANTARA)--The economic recession now still strongly hitting the world is adversely affecting the economic growth of all countries in the world, particularly poor countries which have no oil resources, Minister of Trade and Cooperatives Radius Prawiro stated in Bandung Wednesday.

The recession, according to the minister, has caused the sharp drop in the volume of industrial products and the price of various commodities, including mining and agricultural products, on the international market. [passage omitted]

Minister Radius Prawiro left for Brazil Thursday to hold talks on bilateral as well as multilateral trade and economic cooperation with key officials of the Brazilian Government.

In the bilateral forum, Indonesia can see the possibility of direct trade with Brazil, involving certain commodities produced by the two countries.

In this connection, Radius mentioned rubber as the main commodity Indonesia could offer to Brazil, and iron, sugar and soybean as the main Brazilian products Indonesia could import.

In the international cooperation, Indonesia and Brazil have common interests, among others in the general agreement on trade and development [as received] (Gatt), the minister stated. He admitted that the volume of trade between the two countries was relatively small.

The Indonesian delegation headed by Minister Radius Prawiro consists of 12 officials of the departments of industry and agriculture as well as leading businessmen associated in the Indonesian Chamber of Commerce and Industry [KADIN].

DROUGHT DEATHS REPORTED IN INDONESIA

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 26 Aug 82 p 3

[Text]

JAKARTA, Aug. 25 (AFP)—A total of 25 people were Tuesday reported to have died as the result of the current drought in Indonesia's province of Irian Jaya, bordering Papua New Guinea, where 10 other deaths have been caused by freak snowfalls.

The famine deaths occurred in the central highland area of Jayawijaya which was being hit by a prolonged drought, the worse in the area for many years, the Eveninger Sinar Harapan (Ray of Hope) reported. It described the situation there as "saddening," saying the men were roaming the jungles in search of edibles.

Some 30 others were admitted to hospital, the paper said.

The paper quoted provincial legislative assembly officials as saying that over 10,000 people were suffering from famine because of the drought, which was affecting six villages.

Another 10 people were also killed as a result of snowfall in the Kuyuwagay district where over 750 hectares plantation crops were damaged, the paper said.

Limited medical and food supplies had been dispatched to the disaster stricken areas. The paper quoted local Christian priest D. Dimara as saying that aid relief had been delayed due to the difficult terrain. The priest expressed fears that the death toll might increase in other villages, the paper said.

The situation could become worse if no immediate measures were taken to overcome the disaster, the paper added.

The paper said local district military commander Lt. Col. Sumaryono had asked the provincial administration to make an immediate survey of the damaged plantations and to plant food-producing trees to feed the people.

TRADE BALANCE WITH AUSTRALIA--The trade balance between Indonesia and Australia in 1980-81 showed a surplus of Australian $57.8 million, 84.1 percent of which was supported by oil exports. In 1978-79 Indonesia's trade balance suffered a deficit of $118.3 million while in 1980, $51.4 million. This was disclosed by Amran Adnan, director of the Indonesian Trade Promotion Centre in Sydney at a meeting with the press following the opening of a seminar on Australian tariff preference and quota systems at Ambarukmo Hotel here today. He expressed satisfaction with the increasing exports of various non-oil commodity exports including rubber with a value of $15.6 million (3.7 percent), coffee $19.7 million (4.7 percent), and tea $11.1 million (2.7 percent). In the meantime, garment exports to Australia in th- past three years also increased, namely from U.S.$2.1 million in 1979 to Australian $4.7 million in 1980, then in 1981 the figure reached $12.1 million, 2.7 percent of the total export value. Despite strong competition from People's China, Thailand, the Philippines and India, he said that various handicraft products including wood carvings, leather and rattan items reached a value of $13.3 million. COMMENTATOR BLASTS CGDK, SIHANOUK

[Text] "The Kampuchea situation now is irreversible." This saying is most correct and true. The establishment of the People's Republic in 1979 was the best choice and most suitable and agreeable for the ideology of the Kampuchean people. It was the only way that could free Kampuchea and its people from the barbaric stone age and the genocide of nation and race from minority groups who were commanded by the expansionists. In the three years when the murderous Ieng Sary Pol Pot group ruled in Kampuchea (1975-1979) they killed over 3 million Kampucheans, their own nationality and lineage. These 3 million innocent Kampucheans were the legacy of the most cruel and barbaric deeds in the history of Kampuchea, and also in the history of the world.

Up to now, even though this regime has completely fallen, in Kampuchea the cruelty which Pol Pot and Ieng Sary had inflicted on the Kampucheans is not finished and will never fade from the world's memory, especially for the Kampucheans themselves. Though these incidents occurred a long time ago the hatred and anger will be doubled in their memories. It is most certain now that whoever still recognizes "Democratic Kampuchea" means he still admires cruel barbarism more than the stone age and more than anything else. These are the people who never accept any truth, no matter how cruel and barbaric, especially the expansionists and Chinese reactionaries of the period who also persuaded the followers of the reactionaries in the ASEAN countries to accept and exalt what they called "Democratic Kampuchea or the [anti-Vietnam alliance]." The creation of these murderous groups as tools for their own advantage is actually a swallowing up of other nations little by little, according to Mao's will.

Norodom Sihanouk is called the exiled king by the capitalists, but the truth is that he is a murderer, a ghoul. He blindly built castles in the air, and now they are trying to set up what they call the "tripartite coalition government," giving the post of national president to Sihanouk, that of the vice president to Khieu Samphan (a hunting dog of the Chinese), and that of the prime minister to Son San (dog of the U.S.). Sihanouk appears to us to have two golden leashes, both China and the U.S. The truth is that Sihanouk is not himself. Both the U.S. and China lure him to use him only temporarily. The other two groups, Khieu Samphan's and Son Sann's, are known by everyone to be obedient henchmen of China in the first case, and the U.S. in the second.

As for ideology, Beijing and Washington have different viewpoints towards the Kampuchean issue. Their conflict is even greater, especially with the three nations in Indochina. This conflict has existed for a long time. Thus, when they pushed these three old horses together to serve them, the fact is that each side expects some gains in return for themselves, and not at all for the three old horses (in short, Beijing is for Beijing and Washington is for Washington). Both Washington and Beijing are playing a Chinese card game and are looking for each other's weaknesses and are waiting for a chance to wipe each other out completely. There must ultimately be only one side left according to the proverb, "whoever is good will survive." However, neither Beijing nor Washington are aware of how much the three old horses they are pulling to work for them would return their interests, because the old horses are dying of old age. With only a basket and a saddle on their backs they would lay down dead before they have a chance to walk. This is the truth. They are so absolutely frustrated and angry about it that they don't know what to do.

Even though they are putting great efforts into using the reactionaries in powerful groups in some ASEAN nations as the driving force and are especially busy with the problem they call "pushing the Khmer reactionaries to put their heads together as a Vietnam resistance group." If they were the three old horses it would only be for a propaganda campaign by Beijing and Washington, and in order to save Democratic Kampuchea to merely keep their [seat] in the United Nations. At the present time both of them realize that the supporters of the genocidal regime have lost a great deal of influence. In fact, the United Nations no longer needs to save the fact of this murderous regime to mess up its account, because they are the cruelest of this age and they do not represent anyone. This is because it is the People's Republic of Kampuchea, Kampuchean People's Revolutionary Party and the Kampuchean People's Council which are the only true and legitimate representative of the Kampuchean people. It is most certain that the Kampuchean situation is irreversible. The involvement of the Chinese expansionists, the American imperialists, and other powerful reactionaries in the Kampuchean problem this time is considered interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

COMPLAINTS RAISED OVER DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NORTHERN PROVINCES, EX-RLG

['Conversation with the Editor' Column: "Are Curricula in Different Schools the Same?"]

[Excerpt] [Questions] 1. Are the policies as well as the curricula of upper secondary or secondary classes in Sam Neua, Xieng Khouang, and Vientiane different? (Of course, you must say they are the same).

If they are the same, why is it that someone who graduates from Sam Neua or Xieng Khouang cannot continue abroad? The highest they can go is here. Sometimes people's names were on the list for study abroad, but the fact is that when [it] reached Vientiane it was changed to someone else to go instead. Isn't this favoritism?

2. The Lao people of all races together succeeded in the national democratic revolution and advancing to the transformation and construction of the new Laos. Suppose there is a person whose father was a leader of a canton of the old regime, and whose daughter seriously took part in the revolution. Will there be a problem of distinguishing them? I am completely in the dark. I hope you can clear this up for me. I wish you luck with your column, and I hope you will always continue it.

Sincerely yours, Petnoi Loukmouang Sam.

[Response] 1. In fact you already know the answer yourself. Therefore, it is not necessary to add anything, but I want to say that the Lao people of all races and ages have their right to freedom, unity, and democracy. Every inch in Laos, their motherland, belongs to all Lao people. Nobody has special rights or a privileged monopoly as Bouangeun Saphouvong composed in the song, "Phao Lao Euy," ["Oh You of the Lao Race"]. One part of her song says, "Lao Theung, Lao Soung, and Lao Loum are all the same nationality. Hurry up, let's unite ourselves and fight for independence and peace for our land. We are all Lao, we are no one else...."

In one part there are words that significantly call for solidarity among all Lao races to unite and love each other. As our leader once said, "Whatever you do, the most important thing is to make over three million hearts become one...."

[Excerpt] I believe that you will not object to what I said above, and that's why the first question was clearly answered. I strongly believe that the issue you raised will not occur in our society, and it certainly will not happen. Do not be misled by bad propaganda. Could it be that it happened to you? Is it really true? Tell us all the details. Do you have any evidence or witnesses? I believe that this is only an attempt to maliciously slander our new regime in accordance with the enemy's design.

Anyone who talks about it like this, whether you intend it to or not, means to create division among us, and finally it will follow the formula of "psychological warfare for internal division by the enemy."

Thus, anyone who lacks solid principles without the true concept of history will not be able to evaluate problems. One must have solid principles of revolution and a revolutionary outlook to be able to clearly observe, assess, and weigh the actions that might happen or have happened already. The problem you mentioned, that one who finished school in Sam Neua or Xieng Khouang could not continue their studies abroad, is not at all true. It does not matter where one goes to school, if he is qualified it is guaranteed that there will not be any problems.

The requirements for those who want to study abroad as far as I know are:

1. to study well;
2. willingness;
3. clear personal record.

The important problem is that if there are any scholarships given from abroad, how many are there and in which countries? You must know the details better than I do because you are a student and many times more knowledgeable than I.

As for favoritism, it does not exist in our society dear; it exists only in capitalism.

2. We uprooted the stinking old regime on 4 December 1975, and up to now it is almost 7 years. Thus, all Lao regardless of sex and age and race who make their living in our land now are all innocent and patriotic, and have become a new people with clean and cheerful hearts.

'NEW STRAITS TIMES' ON OUTCOME OF LEE'S VISIT

BK270849 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 25 Aug 82 p 16

[Editorial: "More Traffic"]

[Text] It would have been achievement enough if, in his brief one-day visit to Malaysia, Singapore prime minister Mr Lee Kuan Yew had just gotten onto the same wavelength with Malaysian leaders with an attendant strengthening of the already considerable ties between both countries. In any event, both prime ministers were able to announce agreement in principle on eight points of bilateral interest. Some, such as the possibility of Malaysia supplying liquefied petroleum gas to Singapore, were a declaration of intention for the end of the decade; Singapore's energy requirements in this instance being dependent on the technical feasibility of piping gas from the gasfields of Trengganu to the Island State. Others, such as the initiation of an air shuttle service by the two national airlines from November, herald an immediate and closer cooperation in the area of tourism.

It makes eminent sense, especially with a world economy that is dragging out its flaccid recovery, for the tourism bodies and airlines of both countries to reduce wasteful competition, particularly when the same area and interests are being promoted. The initial shuttle service between Singapore and Kuala Lumpur contains the possibility of the service being subsequently extended to Penang, Pulau Langkawi and Pulau Tioman. Together with efforts to facilitate travel between the two countries, such as speeding up clearance at customs checkpoints, the prospects are good, not only for revenue flow and generation, but also for a better understanding of each other.

As Prime Minister Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir acknowledged, there was tension after the separation of both countries, but time and the growing confidence of mature nationhood have dispelled much of this. More and more of the peoples of both countries will be tuning in to the same wavelength, both at official and informal levels. There will be an exchange of civil servants for training at Malaysia's INTAN [National Institute of Public Administration] and Singapore's Civil Service Institute. There will be occasions for further economic cooperation, particularly when Singaporean businessmen are encouraged to look beyond Johore for investment opportunities. All these without compromising the individual circumstances and particular sensibilities of both countries, but accepting much that is common and of mutual benefit.

MINISTER SAYS NEW LABOR POLICY TO BE ANNOUNCED WITH NEW POLITICAL SYSTEM

[Text]

QUETTA, Aug 20: The Federal Minister for Labour and Manpower, Ghulam Dastgir Khan has said that the blueprint of the new labour policy was ready but it would be announced with the enforcement of the Nizam-e-Islam and Islamic political system so that the workers could carry on their trade union activities unhindered in a free atmosphere.

Speaking at the convention of the National Labour Federation at the Railway Institute soon after his arrival here today from Karachi on a three-day visit the minister assured the workers full protection of their genuine rights, privileges and employment under the new labour policy. "we neither have enemity towards employers nor the employees", he stated and added endeavour was being made to ensure a respecable place for the employers and protection of the genuine rights of workers.

The minister said almost all the problems had been sorted out except the employers demand for hire and fire on which negotiations were in progress

The minister told the workers convention that the government was making sincere efforts and taking bold steps for introduction of Nizam-e-Islam. The government he said was also rooting out corruption and other social evils.

He said that Pakistan was very rich in resources which, if properly explored and exploited could turn the country into a prosperous land Efforts in that direction have been taken in hand by the present government and every section of the society would be extending its fullest cooperation towards achievement of that goal, he stated.

The minister however, invited their attention to the fact that the ills created by the self seeking politicians during past 35 years could not be removed within days. It required sincere and persistent efforts he added. —APP.

HAQ REITERATES ADHERENCE TO NONALIGNED POLICY

BK010705 Karachi Domestic Service in Urdu 0200 GMT 1 Sep 82

[Text] Nonaligned movement day is being observed in Pakistan and other nonaligned countries today. In a message on the occasion, President Mohammad Ziaul Haq reaffirmed the commitment of the government and the people of Pakistan to the principles which form the cornerstone of our foreign policy. He said Pakistan will continue to play a positive and constructive role as a member state to uphold and promote these principles. President Mohammad Ziaul Haq said in his message that the nonaligned movement must continue to speak courageously and with one voice whenever inalienable rights of the people are trampled upon or when the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a state are violated. He said the movement should continue to exert its moral and political force for the cause of freedom for all people. He said that during the past 21 years, the growth of the movement from the initial membership of 25 to about 100 states amply testifies to the universal acceptance of the principles and objectives of nonalignment.

The president said that besides the threats to international peace and security, the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the nonaligned countries are constantly faced with danger. Under the circumstances, the movement will have to play a vital role in protecting the basic principles of nonaggression, nonintervention and nonuse of force in international law. He said Israel's latest crimes against humanity shocked the conscience of the whole world. Even in our neighborhood, the valiant Afghan people are engaged in a courageous struggle to defend their sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and the nonaligned character of their homeland. Kampuchea has also been made a target for foreign military intervention and subjugation. A racist minority in southern Africa is treading on the birthright of the majority. He said the war against poverty, hunger and disease is no less important. The nonaligned movement will have to play an important role in establishing a new international economic order based on justice and equality.

PLEA MADE FOR REPRESENTATIVE RULE

Lahore VIEWPOINT in English 12 Aug 82 pp 5, 6

[Editorial: "Let the People Decide"]

[Text] WE HOPE the large-scale festivities planned for the anniversary of independence on Saturday, which certainly have a place in a society in proportion to the degree of freedom it enjoys, will not prevent us from devoting some moments to examine what has been achieved in the 35 years of independent statehood and what has been left undone. In most countries national day reviews are confined to a resume of the preceding 12 months or so because they are only concerned with developments on the basis of premises laid down and accepted in the past. In our case it is customary to take the whole independence period together becuase of the unresolved tussle over the motivation behind the formation of the State itself and the recurring attempts to determine the direction it must take. The balance-sheet is far from encouraging. True, the country has come a long way since the troubled days of August 1947. The State has survived, though not without the loss of its bigger half, a series of seemingly insurmountable crises. The administration has flourished, some of its arms to a greater extent than others. There was no industry 35 years ago, today there is a large manufacturing sector. Gross agricultural output has risen: after two decades of endemic food deficits, self-sufficiency in foodgrains has been achieved. More schools, colleges and universities have been opened. And so on and so forth. Some of it does constitute progress, though not all, for growth does not always mean uplift. In almost evey sector time has increased the magnitude of the challenge of progress and not reduced it. The State structure remains a make-shift arrangement. Despite industrial growth dependence on imports continues to rise every year by a wide margin. The increase in agricultural production has been accompanied by an aggravation of social and economic inequalities in the large countryside. And more children every year stay out of school than are admitted. Above all, the fruits of independence have largely been expropriated by a few privileged classes. That some benefits have flowed down to the lowest rungs of the social ladder cannot be denied but the world of the common man – the factory worker, the tenant, the petty shopkeeper, the clerk, the teacher, the widowed housewife – remains dark and uncheerful, unlighted by the glimmer of hope.

The priorities were messed up soon after independence. Nobody could claim to know them better than the Quaid-i-Azam, the Father of the Nation. He defined Pakistan's ideals in his very first address to the Constituent Assembly. The foremost tasks in the new State were, he declared, eradication of corruption and nepotism, uplift of the poor masses, and the building up of a Pakistani nation – in the accepted sense of the term, free from the claptrap the renegades of the freedom movement were to foist on rootless rulers later on. But his unworthy successors persisted in acting to the contrary with a determination that only betrayed their boundless greed for self-aggrandisement. The institutions they were supposed to build and develop were corrupted and pulled down, one by one. Most of these disappeared and the few that lingered on were distorted beyond recognition, beyond redemption. However, the whole story of those lost years need not be recounted. For one thing, it is too well-known, and for another, the problems of the present are far too pressing and grave to permit any digression. Only the lessons of history need to be remembered.

In fact, there is only one lesson. All our problems – the zig-zag movement in search of a workable polity, the drift in economy, the moment-to-moment improvisations in external relations, the sluggishness in the social sectors, and the regression in culture – have stemmed from the repudiation of the inviolable principle of people's sovereignty, the denial of the right of the masses to be masters in their own house, to choose the government that could be described as theirs and for them, and to receive their due share of nature's gifts and the produce of their labour. The present dilemma cannot be overcome without understanding this lesson and deriving the obvious conclusions from it. The problems Pakistan faces today are no doubt grave. We are living under a system which has always been accepted as a transitional one. The custodians of the State have repeatedly promised a new polity. It is possible that the delay in the fulfilment of these promises has been caused by fears of change or lack of faith in the possible alternatives. These reasons of inhibition have no basis in reality. The common people are not only worthy of trust, their capacity for mature answers to various problems need not be discounted. Any other problems, including those created by unpleasant rumblings at home and uncertainties along the frontiers, should not be exaggerated. In any case, they underline the urgency of putting the house in order and cannot furnish an excuse for pushing the issues under the carpet. There is a widespread feeling among the people that on Independence Day they will receive some tidings regarding resumption of our journey towards normalcy in State structure. We fervently hope that these expectations will be duly fulfilled and the power and logic of expectations and the consequences of their non-realisation will be fully borne in mind. Happily a grand consensus, to which we have often referred, is still available. The opportunities of a return to the path of harmony, stability and progress it offers can be ignored only at grave peril to everything that we prize. Time has on many occasions deprived Pakistan of what could have been gained at the opportune moment. We cannot afford to add another instance. Representative rule is not only the people's due, it is the only way to the greatest happiness of the largest number. Let it be so in the 36th year of independence.

MEASURES FOR ESTABLISHING JOINT ISLAMIC ARMY DISCUSSED

[Editorial: "Concept of a Joint Islamic Army"]

[Text] Pakistan's minister for natural resources, Rao Farman Ali Khan, in the course of a speech in Lahore reiterating the necessity of setting up an army of Muslim countries, said that had such an army been present, Israel would not have dared to invade Lebanon. The concept of setting up a joint army of Muslim countries is a very agreeable one, and as a matter of principle, it has been well received by Muslims in general, regardless of their nationality. On the one hand, Israeli aggression stresses the urgency of implementing the proposal for setting up a joint Islamic army. On the other hand, the lack of desire on the part of Muslim countries for using military force against Israel has dampened the enthusiasm for this concept. It is generally believed that if Muslim countries are incapable of taking joint action on an issue on which the entire Muslim world has strong feelings, and against an enemy whom all Muslim countries consider as their greatest enemy, then how can they agree on the issue of forming a joint Muslim army. There can be only two ways of setting up a joint Islamic army. First, every Muslim country should allocate a contingent of its army for the proposed joint army and place it under a joint command. But such an army is possible only on paper. Differences among the Muslim countries are so great that even under the most critical conditions they cannot be expected to place their armies under a joint command without hesitation. The second effective condition under which a joint army can be set up is that not only should this army be under a separate command but that the orders of their own countries should not be binding on these units. But this is a very difficult task. Where will the headquarters of such an army be located? Where will its garrisons be located? How will its budget be met? And the most important factor is, how will this army be provided with modern weaponry? In the present era, the number of soldiers does not have any significance. If the Muslim countries so desire, they could form the largest army in the world. It is not at all difficult for them to recruit 3-4 million men. But in the modern age, the number of soldiers is of secondary importance. What is really important is the training of any army and the standard of arms and ammunition. And under the present circumstances, furnishing the army with arms meeting modern standards appears to be difficult, because big powers provide arms on cash payment only to those countries who are prepared to abide by their political aims and objectives. Besides, even if such an army were to be set up, the question of determining the conditions under which it could be used is of equal importance.

In view of such practical difficulties, the only practical solution appears to be that at the outset efforts should be directed at forming a small army whose goal would be to preserve the unity of Jerusalem and wage a holy war for the liberation of Palestine. Different Muslim countries should provide manpower, arms and money according to their means. To make it an effective force, its military command will have to be free from political differences. Such an army, even if it were to be composed of just 2-3 divisions, could play an effective role under critical conditions. But because of the absence of a political determination and a bold and independent policy, which are essential for taking such steps, it seems unlikely at present that this concept will go much beyond discussion.

NATION SEEN AS GREATEST TARGET OF ANTI-ISLAMIC WORLD POWERS

Karachi JASARAT in Urdu 27 Jul 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Vaysal Abad: "'Arafat Would Be the Last Person To Recognize Israel; the News of Recognition of the Jewish State Is Doubtful; If This Happens, the Whole Dispute Between Israel and the Islamic World Would End; If MRD [Movement for the Restoration of Democracy] Is Sincere to Muslims, It Should Condemn the Soviet Aggression Too; If Elections Are Held on Nonparty Basis, the Country Would Be Divided Into 68 Provinces"]

[Text] Faisalabad, 26 July (JASARAT Correspondent)--The leader of Tehrik-e Islami of Pakistan, Mian Tufayl Muhammad has expressed his doubt about the accuracy of the reports of PLO's recognition of Israel, saying that this thing is unbelievable. If Yasir 'Arafat recognizes Israel, the dispute between Israel and the Islamic world would end. He said that in his opinion, Yasir 'Arafat would be the last person in the Islamic world to recognize Israel. He said this while addressing the journalists in the evening today at the office of the Majlis-e Dawat-e-Islami. He said that he doubted the accuracy of the sources through which the news of Israel's recognition had come. Responding to a question, he said that MRD's stand on the Lebanese and Palestinian Muslims was inconceivable since the MRD people were silent over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. They were against the Afghan refugees entering Pakistan. If those people were so sincere to Muslims, they should condemn the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and openly support the Afghan freedom-fighters. They should demand to send armed forces to Afghanistan since Afghanistan's Muslims were fighting for Pakistan. Afghanistan's defense is in fact the defense of Pakistan. Replying to a question, he said that the People of other political parties who accused Jamiat-e Islami of supporting the regime had their own representatives in the provincial and central councils, whereas Jamiat-e Islami had no one in these institutions. Opposing elections on nonparty basis, Mian Sahib said that such elections would cause disruption in the country and divide it into 68 provinces instead of 4. Regarding the roundtable conference, he said that he had no information about it. He would think over it if invited. In response to a question, he said that the Muslim League alone had been ruling the country upto the present. Only its names were changed. The Muslim League lost half of Pakistan. Presently, it had several branches with various names, and each one of them regarded itself as the true Muslim League. Miam Tufail said that the greatest target of the anti-Islamic world powers and Israel was Pakistan. Pakistan's government and people should well recognize this fact.

COUNTRY ADVISED TO AVOID TRAP OF FOREIGN LOANS

[Editorial: "The Curse of Foreign Loan]

[Text] Dr Mahboobul Haq, chairman of the Planning Commission, addressing a news conference the other day, said that the major portion of the foreign aid Pakistan is currently receiving is being spent on the payment of previous debts and the interest incurred on these loans. According to his statement, more than three-fourths of the foreign aid Pakistan is receiving is being used to pay these debts. He is therefore proceeding to the United States to arrange a rescheduling of the payment of these loans. When the decision was made to develop the national economy with the help of foreign loans, some far-sighted people warned the government of the calamity that could befall our country because of such laons. The United States in particular had engineered plans to trap developing countries in the name of such aid, the trap was not so complicated that it could not be detected by others. But knowing everything, we got ourselves trapped. We thus labelled as "aid" the loans borrowed at interest and accepted all the terms and conditions connected with these loans. In other words, we accepted the trusteeship of the Unites States and organizations set up by it, such as the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, and devalued our currency a number of times. Not only at the time of independence but even up to 1960, the rate of exchange of $1.00 was just 4.75 rupees, whereas today circumstances are so changed that the rate of exchange for $1.00 has increased to more than 12 rupees. At first, for 3 Pakistani rupees you could get 4 or 5 Indian rupees. Today, it's just the reverse. The situation today is that Pakistan is head over heels in debt. For payment of this debt, Pakistan has to obtain billions of rupees in additional loans. Hence, the burden of debt is continuously increasing and it appears that the day is not far off when the total amount of the new loans will not be sufficient to pay the principal and interest of the previous debts and Pakistan will be forced to obtain short-term loans of high interest rates from big Western banks in the international market.

We have the immoderation of the past before us. Foreign loans were obtained to solve all problems, whether small or big. In this way, the bureaucracy and a special class of people led extravagant lives. Other countries who used foreign aid even simply to kill insects faced similar problems. But it is no use to enumerate the mistakes of the past or to deplore them. If serious efforts are made to redress the situation and, at least for the future, a procedure is worked out so that no room is left for foreign loans, and a final unequivocal decision is made not to obtain foreign loans at high interest but on easy terms only, then Pakistan can still be pulled out of the economic misery into which loyal experts of the World Bank and the U.S. capital have dragged it.

If the Government of Pakistan were to stop payments on loans immediately,and were it not to get fresh loans, only about 20% of the so-called aid it is receiving would be affected. This after all is not such a huge amount that it could not be provided by the Pakistanis living overseas and other friends of Pakistan. An increase of 10 or 15 percent in the amount of money being sent by Pakistanis living abroad would suffice to make up for this deficiency. Once a decision is made on this issue, it should not be difficult for the government to reach an agreement with the creditors on the question of paying the loans over a long period. The crux of the matter is that Pakistan should now try to disentangle itself from these loans. Instead of seeking new loans, Pakistan should try other sources for increasing its income. Foreign loans have shattered the economy of a wealthy country like Mexico and of countries rich in natural resources, such as Argentina and Brazil. If Pakistan wants its economy to have a strong foundation and wants the value of its currency to be increased and to free itself from the curse of inflation, and if the self-respect of the people is to be awakened so that they depend on their own ability to solve the problems facing them rather then depend on aid that limits their progress, then above all it will have to free itself from the curse of foreign loans.

CHANGE IN FOREIGN AID POLICY ADVOCATED

[Editorial: "The Blessings of Foreign 'Aid'"]

[Text] The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission said that 80 percent of the foreign aid Pakistan is receiving at this time goes to repay loans and interest. How many of Pakistan's problems will the remaining amount solve, and in what way will it speed the pace of progress? There is no doubt that when one is left with just 300,000,000 to spend, even after obtaining a loan of 1,500,000,000, it is like the proverb: What will the naked woman wear while she washes her only clothers? But who is responsible for this state of affairs? We can put the blame only on those economic experts who have always considered the cure for every ill to be foreign loans, or those politicians and rulers who on the basis of their own maladies have considered it necessary to make the national economy subordinate to Western and especially American institutions. Foreign loans are considered essential for even the smallest project in Pakistan, because this way the work goes forward without any labor, selflessness or mental effort, and the gentlemen involved also gain unlimited financial benefit. But just as those who drink the wine of loans give no thought to the fact that they are cheerfully bringing on drunken starvation, so our leaders too have never given thought to what a great problem for the country these loans, which are not being used to establish the economy on a concrete basis, will become in the future.

How many industries have been established from the many rupees obtained from the America and Western countries? Those countries have not allowed any fundamental industries, including the steel industry, to be established in Pakistan, and this has been their treatment of not just Pakistan but of the whole world. India established its steel industries and other basic industries only with the help of the Soviet Union. Egypt and Iran too received aid only from the Soviet Union to establish these industries. Why this was so despite our extreme friendship with the United States and even more help, and why this "aid" was limited to using up the extra crops and excess production of the Western countries is not too difficult to understand.

At the time when, with the loan of a few million dollars, Pakistan entered the club of those fortunates who receive foreign aid, Pakistan's leaders seemed very happy with those few million dollars. Now even after receiving thousands of millions of dollars in aid we see them sitting holding their heads in dismay. Out of $1.5 billion of aid, $1.2 billion are going to pay off old debts, but it is being proposed to cure this by means of additional loans, so in a few years even a loan of $5 billion will prove insufficient to pay old dues.

We feel that the only cure for this situation is to rethink our entire policy towards foreign aid. Whatever work can be done by means of our country's individual strength and national resources should be done without taking a single cent from outside the country. The policy of depending entirely on Western countries for the nation's development should stop, and preference should be given to whatever country is willing to provide aid on concrete and easy terms.

IBRS, IDB TO HELP FINANCE KARACHI WATER SUPPLY

[Article by S.M. Azad]

[Text] The World Bank and the Islamic Development Bank (IDB) have expressed their willingness in financing State-1 of the phase four of Karachi Water Supply Scheme costing Rs 220 million to augment water supply and help meet the critical shortage.

If this proposal is finalised, it will help increase water supply to the extent of 70 million gallons daily (MGD).

The scheme aimed at supplying settled water and chlorinated water fit for human consumption.

Official sources told Morning News that the World Bank was also actively considering financing Rs 346 million Stage-2 filter water supply of Hub Dam Scheme. The Islamic Development Bank has already sanctioned Rs 100 million for this scheme.

The work on the first stage costing Rs 200 million for augmenting water supply by 89 MGD was nearing completion.

The World Bank team, during its last visit to Pakistan held discussions with the officials here on the question of financing the water supply scheme and also showed positive interest in providing funds for it.

With the completion of these projects the water supply position to this sprawling city is expected to ease to a very large extent.

The first stage of Hub Water Supply Scheme which is expected to be commissioned soon will help ease the pressure to some extent but the shortage will persist. Even after completion of this scheme there will be immediate shortfall of 44 million gallons for regular supply and additional 61 million gallons for special supply.

In view of the existing shortage special efforts are being made to conserve the water supply and effect improvement in the present system. Sub-soil wells dug in the bed of the Malir river at Dumlottee which used to supply water to the city are being renovated and an additional supply of 4 MGD is shortly expected.

Water shortage is the most chronic problem facing Karachi. At present the net supply to Karachi is 180 million gallos daily for a population of 6 million.

Water shortage has led to rationing of this critical input to manufacturing establishments.

Not only the present supply is much below the requirements, the distribution system is defective resulting in pipe bursts and inequitous distribution.

GRASSROOTS DEVELOPMENT EFFORTS FAULTED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 16 Aug 82 p 4

[Article by Nazim: "The Missing Link in Local Government and Grassroots Development Planning"]

[Text] During British rule it was possible to introduce some aspects of local government (then called local self-government) while the central authority remained alien and imperialist. The jurisdiction of local bodies was clearly defined, and locally elected representatives enjoyed considerable freedom of action within the prescribed limits. There was, for instance, a flourishing primary education system, which was entirely in the hands of local bodies, while an arrangement with the provincial government allowed standards to be maintained through a provincial government inspectorate under the control of an elected district education committee. These harsh contradictions were considerably reduced with the introduction of Government of India Act 1935, and the establishment of Provincial autonomy. Local bodies acquired more powers and functions, so much so that it can be said that there was more local government in the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent before Independence than there is in Pakistan today. Indeed the institution of local government was systematically destroyed in Pakistan by the retention of a central, colonial cadre (the ICS/CSP) which established its hegemony over the district in the shape of the deputy commissioner, who has always been a federal agent. Local government and the deputy commissioner do not go together, they are a contradiction in terms. In the same way there can be no local government in isolation from the rest of the institutions in the country. Local bodies are an integral part of the federal and provincial governments in an independent country. Thus with no democratic institutions functioning at the federal and provincial levels, and the continuation of a martial law framework, it is difficult to conceive of a viable and popular local body. Indeed there has been no real attempt to introduce local government in the country – most such efforts have merely aimed at extending the arm of the federal/provincial authority to local areas, and to inducing local bodies to carry out the wishes and directives of that authority. This cannot be described as 'local government'.

The fate of attempts at decentralised planning and development at the grass-roots level has also been more or less similar.

These observations are prompted by recent remarks made by the Federal Minister for Local Government, and the long 100-point questionnaire issued by his Ministry. In a press briefing the Minister is reported to have said that for the "first time" in the history, of the country development planning at village level and district level would be introduced according to the recommendations of the local councillors. Inaugurating, according to him, a 'first-ever' 3-day course on planning strategy, he said that the fundamental fault of 'Basic Democracies' was that their development plans were designed to benefit the feudal lords and the influential people of the local areas, whereas under the present strategy of development planning it was the government's basic concern that the benefits of development plans should reach the general masses.

Now the feudal structure in our rural areas still prevails, the big landlords still lord it over the small farmers and landless peasants. It is the big landlord, the big feudal who continues to dominate the rural scene. In the circumstances it is impossible to visualise any fundamental change, unless a radical democratic order replaces the present feudal structure. During Ayub's time there had been numerous seminars and training courses for boosting the cleverly-designed and sinister Basic Democracies scheme, which was basically authoritarian, and an extension of Ayub's personal rule backed by the civil and military bureaucracy. There was a lot mentioned about decentralised development planning and district plans, and provision was even made for the purpose in the Basic Democracies Order 1959, wherein it was stated that District and Divisional Councils may formulate plans, that Basic Democracies should be associated with the planning and implementation of development schemes, and that all new schemes of various departments relating to a division should be seen and approved by the Basic Democracies Divisional Council. Indeed development schemes were required to be cleared through the District and Divisional Councils. All this, of course, was mere paper rhetoric, for actual decentralised planning never took place. Even Ayub was not the first to talk about local planning. The First Five Year Plan had suggested that rural development plans in particular should originate in the villages and proceed upwards.

The Basic Democracies system as a local government agency, and as a local planning authority proved to be a colossal failure, as was the previous so-called 'grass-roots' agency, the Village-AID (Agricultural & Industrial Development), which emerged and collapsed during 1952-61, and after 1961 merged with the Basic Democracies programme. A third paper rhetoric about local development and planning also came in 1961 in the shape of the 'rural works programme' under an agreement with the U.S.A. which provided counterpart funds under PL480 to the tune of the rupee equivalent of six hundred million dollars during a 4-year period. Money was poured into the rural areas, and it was said it helped Ayub in his elections held during that period. All these programmes, which were mainly calculated to sustain and prolong a dictatorial regime, certainly did little to develop the rural areas or promote agricultural and industrial development, or nourish democratic local government institutions. First things must come first: Democratic and representative institutions under the 1973 constitution must be restored first.

KHWAJA SAFDAR LASHES OUT AT WALI, ISRAR AHMAD, CRITICIZES NDP'S ROLE IN PAST

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 16 Aug 82 p 7

[Text] LAHORE, Aug. 15: Khwaja Safdar, Chairman, Majlis-e-Shoora, said today Pakistan was the result of consistent struggle of the All India Muslim League under the leadership of Quaid-e-Azam, Mohammad Ali Jinnah and any attempt to distort this historic fact was tendentious.

He was speaking at a reception hosted in his honour here yesterday in connection with the Independence Day. Federal Labour Minister, Ghulam Dastgir Khan, and some members of the Majlis-i-Shoora, also spoke on the occasion.

Castigating the leaders of the defunct National Democratic Party for attributing independence to the so-called sacrifices offered by their elders, Khwaja Safdar said, there could be nothing far from truth. He also deplored a recent statement by Dr. Israr Ahmed, that it was not the Muslim League which had created Pakistan, and said that Doctor Sahib should go through history to know the facts.

The Shoora Chairman said that some leaders of the defunct NDP, while observing Bhabra Day, had claimed that the independence of the nation was the result of the Civil Disobedience and Non-cooperation Movements launched by their elders which compelled the British rulers to quit the Sub-Continent, and that without the efforts of their elders, Pakistan would not have been created.

These elements, Khwaja Sahib said, had so deep rooted hatred for Pakistan that they even did not like to pronounce the name "Pakistan" from their mouth.

No Pakistani, the Shoora Chairman said, could be oblivious of the treacherous role of the NDP leaders in the referendum held in the NWFP only one month prior to the creation of Pakistan. And no one either, he said, could deny the historical fact, that these people not only exercised their right of vote against Pakistan but also attempted to stop others who were going to vote for Pakistan. They attacked the buses of the supporters of Pakistan and did not allow them to reach the polling booths. Their polling agents, he said, raised all sorts of frivolous objections on the votes cast in support of Pakistan.

Khwaja Safdar said had these elements been successful in their attempts, this Muslims State would not have come into existence and crores of Muslims in the Subcontinent would have been completely at the mercy of the Hindu majority and leading a life of misery and slavery like the Indian Muslims today.

Despite these elements strong opposition to Pakistan, Khwaja Safdar said, the Quaid announced complete amnesty for them in the traditions set by the Prophet Yousuf and the Holy Prophet (Peace Be Upon Him). Pakistan he said, was the only country which adopted such a policy towards its adversaries.

In Pakistan, he said, the minorities were living side by side with the Muslims majority but during the last 35 years, there was not even a single instance in which a Muslim ever did any harm to a member of the minorities. This, he said, was due to the golden teachings of Islam and the Quaid-e-Azam and the Muslims and the minorities were living in perfect harmony. Contrary to that, he said, there had been thousands of communal riots in India where the blood of the innocent Muslims was being shed mercilessly and this process did not seem to end.

The Majlis Chairman congratulated the nation for celebrating the independence day in a befitting manner and said this was the symbol of a living nation which always valued and loved its freedom. He said certain elements were critical of the Independence Day celebrations in view of the situation in Afghanistan and Lebanon. He was of the view that the happenings in these countries should deepen our love for freedom.

Speaking on the occasion, Ghulam Dastgir Khan said the Independence Day reminded the nation of the unprecedented sacrifices of life, property and honour offered by the Muslims of the Sub-Continent to achieve this separate homeland.

The Minister said certain elements were raising their voice against the Quaid and the Pakistan Ideology, in a bid to create doubts about the Quaid's integrity of of character and the basis of this country.—APP

ANTIOBSCENITY LAWS CALLED 'NON-ISSUES'; MORE IMPORTANT PRIORITIES URGED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 16 Aug 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Topsy-Turvy Priorities"]

[Text]

WE seem to be spending more of our time and energy these days on non-issues than on those which are of far greater concern to the nation. A dispatch from our representative in Faisalabad says that the Council of Islamic Ideology and the Law Ministry have been directed to draw up effective laws against obscenity,and that an Ordinance, titled, "Eradication of Pornography and Obscenity Ordinance", drafted for the said purpose, was now receiving final touches before its promulgation. The law is said to be applicable to all media employing verbal or pictorial means to project material likely to titillate amorous or erotic sensations among readers or viewers of such stuff. The object of the exercise is to purify various sectors of art and culture from unethical and un-Islamic manifestations. It is indeed a laudable objective, but it conveys the impression that our stage plays, art galleries, roadside hoarding, T.V. shows and advertisements through the video-box, newspapers and magazines in the country were so bristling with such unedifying contents that the promulgation of a special Ordinance had become unavoidable.

Locally produced films are already subject to clearance by the Film Censor Board which takes extra care to ensure that nothing likely to be morally corrupting escapes its scissors, if the entire film is not banned. Likewise, pre-censorship of the Press is already in operation to guard against publication of sensuous material. Foreign magazines like Playboy and such other publications are held back by the Customs authorities. Writing under the headline 'High price phoney erotica' early last week, one of our regular columnists had pointed out that old copies of Indian film magazines with a semblance of sensuality were smuggled into the country and sold openly at the stands at prohibitive prices in Karachi. Barring this, nothing of that nature has been seen anywhere else. There was a time when strip-tease shows were common in Karachi, but that now lies buried under the debris of past years.

These are times of armed dacoities, thefts, burglaries, and hold ups which have deprived the people of their sense of security. This is a matter that should have engaged immediate and far greater attention of the authorities to overhaul the law and order machinery of the government. But the casual manner in which it was dealt with by the Federal Minister for Interior in his address to traders in Lahore the other day has left everyone both astonished and despondent. He is reported to have observed that a 1,00,000-strong police force cannot underwrite the security of 8.5 crore people in the country who should make collective efforts to protect themselves. Nothing could have given more of a jolt to undermine people's confidence in the power wielded by the authorities.

Our roads continue to take almost their daily toll of human life, but little is done to rectify this abhorrent situation. Highways in the twin-cities of the Capital are smooth and safe for limousines of the high-ups to drive at full throttle, but by-roads lie profusely pocked with potholes and streets remain frequently inundated with overflowing sewerages or leaks in the underground water pipes. It is high time the government rearranged its list of priorities and gave more thought to the physical discomforts of the citizenry than to the moral uplift of the masses, tormented with multiple problems who are by no means a depraved people.

SOVIET-PAKISTAN COOPERATION EXPANDING

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 16 Aug 82 p 5

[Text]

MOSCOW, Aug. 15: "Thirty-five years ago our country rose from the ashes of communal differences and colonial oppression, and today develops as a free state which unites more than 60 million Muslims of South Asia", said Iftikhar Ali, Ambassador of Pakistan to the USSR, at a function marking Pakistan's national holiday held at the Moscow Friendship House.

The fight for self-determination, the Ambassador continued, was won in a fierce struggle and at the cost of numerous sacrifices. Our history was not an easy one. It was necessary to overcome the aftermath of colonialism: the absence of an industrial base, low level of agricultural development and illiteracy of the population.

Emphasising the role which the Soviet Union has played in strenghthening Pakistan's economic independence, the Ambassador mentioned as outstanding examples of the assistance of Soviet specialists the steel plant in Karachi, the Guddu thermal power station, and the tractor plant currently going up near Lahore. At present a considerable number of Pakistani students are being trained at Soviet higher educational establishment. The trade and cultural co-operation between Pakistan and Soviet Union is also developing successfully.

The Soviet Union, went on the Ambassador, constitutes for us an example of a country which has managed to successfully solve most complicated tasks within an exceptionally short period of time.

In conclusion the Ambassador of Pakistan expressed confidence in the further expansion of Pakistani-Soviet economics, technical and cultural co-operation.

Yuri Gurov, Vice-President of the Soviet-Pakistani Society for Cultural Relations also took the floor at the meeting. He stressed that the Soviet Union welcomed the establishment of the independent Pakistani state and pursued with regard to that country policy of peace, friendship equality, non-interference in domestic affairs, assistance in doing away with the consequences of the colonial yoke and ensuring economic, social and cultural progress.

The speaker declared that the USSR was ready to continue helping Pakistan in building economic projects which constitute the basis of the country's independent development.

Supporting the nations' struggle for national independence, the USSR comes out for the further development of relations with coexistence, mutual trust, respect, and expansion of economic, technical and cultural co-operation, stressed Yuri Gurov in conclusion of his speech.—APP

POSITION ON SPECIAL FUNDS FOR FORMER RULERS STATED

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 9

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug 23: The State and Frontier Regions Division has contradicted a report appearing in a section of the Press yesterday alleging that the Nawabs were staging a comeback and some of the ex-rulers were being allocated "special funds" for their subsistence.

Clarifying the position, the Government said: "The factual position is that the privy purse and all other privileges, such as guards of honours, exemption from appearance in courts and being sued without permission of the Central Government, Railway concessions, Customs facilities, diplomatic passports, flying of personal flags etc. of the rulers were abolished under article 4F of the Presidential Order No. 15 of 1972.

"Further recognition of successors to the rulers after the death of recognised rulers also came to an end under article 3(C) of the said order. Hence the institution of Nawabzadgans was abolished.

"However the ex-rulers and their such dependents, who used to be paid some allowance out of their privy purse before coming into force of Presidential Order No. 15 of 1972, have been granted maintenance allowance in lieu of privy purse. Maintenance allowance, under article 5 of the said order for their lifetime only, is on compassionate grounds.

"The rulers of Amb, Kalat, Kharan and Makran died after promulgation of Presidential Order No. 15 of 1972. Their successors have neither been recognised as rulers nor granted any maintenance allowance after their death.

"Only their dependents, who used to receive some allowance out of the privy purse of the rulers, are being paid some maintenance allowance for their lifetime only.

"The Press report is obviously based on the provision made in the Budget for payment of maintenance allowance to some ex-rulers viz Amir of Bahawalpur, Amir of Khairpur, Jam Sahib of Lasbela, Wali of Swat, Nawab of Dir and Mehtar of Chitral and the dependents of the few deceased ex-rulers mentioned above.

"In fact, under Presidential Order No. 15 of 1972 the Nawabi system stands abolished and all privileges stand withdrawn. This is in keeping with the Government's policy. The news item is, therefore, not only incorrect but also misleading."

MRS BHUTTO MAY HAVE CANCER

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 26 Aug 82 p 3

[Text] ISLAMABAD, Pakistan, Aug. 25 (UPI)--The widow of Pakistan's executed Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto confirmed Tuesday she has applied to the military government for a passport and permission for treatment abroad of suspected lung cancer.

Mrs. Nusrat Bhuto told reporters she has sent a petition to the Ministry of Interior supported by medical documents.

She said she did not know how long she would be staying abroad and expressed a wish to return to Pakistan after the treatment.

Mrs. Bhutto, 55, took over the leaderhip of the left-leaning Pakistan People's party immediately after the execution of her husband on April 4, 1979 for his involvement in a murder case.

Political observers have said it would not be easy for the current government to allow Mrs. Bhutto to go abroad, but Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi, chairman of the People's party, told reporters she should be permitted to go abroad for treatment.

Since the death of her husband Mrs. Bhutto has been in and out of jail for her political activities.

ADMINISTRATION CHARGED WITH CORRUPTION, LAWLESSNESS

Karachi JASARAT in Urdu 26 Jul 82 p 3

[Editorial: "When Will the Administration Wake Up?"]

[Text] Tehrik-e Islami's [Islamic Movement] assistant amir Maulana Jan Muhammad Abbasi has said that the administration has failed altogether. Crimes are increasing. Especially, there is no control over dacoity, murders, mugging and robberies. He said that during the past 2 years, approximately 7,000 people have been murdered. The rate of corruption is continuously increasing.

Bad administration is the weakest point of the current martial law government. This very weak aspect may have serious consequences for this government. The increase in crime and the very failure of the administration itself are no less troublesome, but the thing that worries us more is that the government does not seem to be bothered at all about this matter. The people who should pay attention to this situation appear to be quite contented. It seems that they consider it unnecessary to take any steps in this regard. Negligence of these responsibilities is very tormenting for the public.

There are robberies and thefts and citizens are mugged, beaten and killed, but no guardian of their life and wealth is questioned as to why all this is happening.

At least, the superintendent of police, the deputy superintendent of police, police officers and other police authorities of Sind continue to hold their respective posts in spite of all these dreadful incidents as if these police stations and regions are their inheritances. What is the cause of this stupor? The public may not know in fact, but they do have the impression that President Ziaul Haq's government and martial law are totally powerless and inactive in front of the corrupt and rotten administration. In order to alter this impression and bring the current situation under control, the federal and provincial interior ministers, the interior secretary and [Inspector General] IGs of all provinces, especially of Sind, should be relieved of their duties so that there may be a change in the present senselessness shown by the administration.

HIGH FOOD PRICES RESULT OF EXPORTS

[Editorial: "The Price of Food Goods"]

[Text] The conditions of food production in the country described by Pakistan's Minister of Food and Agricultural, Admiral Janjua, certainly point towards progress, but the country must do much more. Experts, both Pakistani and foreign, say that with only a little effort Pakistan could supply most of the food needs of the Middle East. The Minister of Food has also said that in addition to the slight surplus in wheat production there has also been more sugar produced than needed. Planning to increase the production of milk and meat is being undertaken on a large scale, and foreign countries are also being given permission to start dairy farms. Pakistan's most pressing economic need is to increase its foreign exchange resources. The more local resources are developed for this, the closer will come the day of true freedom for the country, but national needs should also be considered along with exports. For example, certainly we are earning a great deal of necessary foreign exchange from the excessive export of rice, but the price of rice inside the country is still sky-high. The people of Pakistan must pay double the price which people in other countries pay for Pakistani rice. The price of sugar too is higher than in the rest of the world. The price of meat and milk is taking off with the speed of a rocket. The same is true of lentils. Coarse grains, which used to be cheaper than wheat and which were considered food for animals or poor people, are now more expensive than wheat. Food is not a luxury. Every rich and poor man needs it equally. So keeping the price of food moderate is our greatest necessity.

PROPOSED EMIGRANT ADVISORY CENTERS OPPOSED

[Text]

The Federal Government, says a report, is considering a proposal to set up investment advisory centres in OPEC countries and other parts of the world where Pakistani emigrants are working in large numbers. These centres would provide guidance and relevant information to the Pakistani workers abroad in order to persuade them to invest more of their savings in developments projects at home. The proposal for the establishment of advisory centres pre-supposes that the efforts made so far in this direction have produced no results. This is confirmed by the findings of an official survey that the emigrant workers consume 62 per cent of their income, spend 22 per cent on real estate acquisition and invest what remains in industry and commerce.

It is not only desirable but imperative in their own as well as national interest that the emigrants save more and consume less as far as possible. The statistics may also mislead one to believe that it cannot be difficult to persuade the overseas Pakistanis to reduce consumption from the present level of 62 per cent, and in this belief proceed to establish advisory centres, etc., etc. But the question demands closer examination. The emigrant worker, however adventurous and earning conscious, is not an essentially economic being who only needs to be acquainted with investment opportunities. His habits and choices are determined by a host of phenomena which must be identified for any savings and investment campaign to be fruitful.

In the first place, it must be recognized that the Pakisani worker has not emigrated in pursuit of some mission. He denies himself the comforts of family life and the joys of his native environment in quest of riches to raise the standard of his living as high as that of his employer or superior in Pakistan. In any event, exposed to a dazzling exhibition of all the articles of life western technology can produce and OPEC wealth can buy to waste, he can never be persuaded not to wear better western-made (and, perhaps, cheaper) clothes, not to acquire a television set and a record player or not to build a new, good house. His urges and aspirations are simply natural which cannot and need not be suppressed. This, however, does not mean that an average Pakistani emigrant worker is invariably inclined to spend every single penny he can earn. Since he is earning and standard conscious, he must be concerned about future also and he does not have to be told that he has to save some of his wealth to secure a good living on return him. But in the matter of securing a good living at home his choice will be influenced not merely by the size of his savings but also by his experience and native environment. Of the 1.5 million Pakistani workers abroad, 43 per cent are unskilled workers who cannot conceive of any future other than return to their lands, better equipped mechanically, or setting up a small grocery or general store in home town. The 41 per cent skilled workers would automatically return to their trades and set up small independent businesses. So these 84 per cent will have their own notions about investment and will be hardly inclined to part with their savings in any Government sponsored projects. The remaining 16 per cent, white collar workers and professionals, should be investment minded. But why are they keeping aloof so far like the investor at home?

This class of Pakistani emigrants not only possesses considerable entrepreneurial enthusiasm but is also capable of making intelligent choices. Obviously, it is inhibited either because its evaluation of available opportunities is negative or it is scared of the bureaucratic controls and the tedium of investment procedures. Investment sentiment, wherever it may be, is almost instinctively aware of its opportunities. It will be absurd to suggest that these Pakistanis who visit their families and friends every six months or annually, need any information and enlightenment on how to employ their savings for productive purposes. The worthwhile thing to do will be to find out why they are not coming forward instead of making more wasteful investment in advisory centres abroad.

QUAID MEMORIAL FUND ASSETS SHRINKING

[Text] Fixed assets of the Quaid-i-Azam Memorial Fund Board have shrunk to a mere six million rupees.

To ensure that the assets do not dwindle further, the Federal Government made a grant of Rs one million this year to the QAMF Board to meet the recurring expenditure on the maintenance and upkeep of the mausoleum.

The mausoleum's annual budget averages about Rs 1.8 million. The Government's one million rupee grant will be supplemented by earnings from Rs six million in bank deposits and securities etc.

This is the first time that a grant has been made in the Federal Budget for the mausoleum.

In the absence of such a provision in previous years, the maintenance expenditure was being met by withdrawals from the fixed deposits etc.

The mausoleum was completed on Jan 15, 1971. However, expenditure on all construction works and supporting items till June 30, 1975 was Rs 16,320,757.

On the other hand total receipts at the close of the fund-raising drive were about Rs 15.2 million--Punjab Rs 3,191,750; Sind Rs 1,241,200; NWFP Rs 1,022,558; Karachi (then Federally administered) Rs 2,068,795; Baluchistan Rs 787,310; former East Pakistan Rs 1,120,708; overseas Pakistanis and foreign countries Rs 247,251; and former princely states Rs 562,136.

By the time the mausoleum project was started on Feb 8, 1960, the Fund amount had swollen to nearly double the original amount.

Besides the Federal Government grant, the Government of Sind has also provided Rs 250,000 in the 1982-83 budget for the landscaping of the peripheral area of the mausoleum.

The other provinces were not asked to contribute towards the capital or recurring budget of the mausoleum, it is learnt.

PLAN LAUNCHED TO BOOST TRAINED MANPOWER

Karachi DAWN in English 11 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug 10: The Government has launched a comprehensive plan for the education and training of the emigrants and their families to meet the requirement of trained manpower in the country and abroad, Mr. Ghulam Dastgir Khan, Minister for Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis, told a convention here on Monday.

The Minister said that educational institutions were being set u abroad for disseminating knowledge and information on Islamic culture among the children of overseas Pakistanis. He further said that the Government plan was to prepare trained manpower in technical trades and crafts to make up the shortage within the country and also to meet the requirements abroad.

The Minister was delivering his inaugural address at the 3-day national convention held at the Allama Iqbal Open University, Islamabad on Monday morning. The convention would explore ways and means of improving the conditions of migrant workers as regards education and Pakistan's cultural identity.

He informed the convention that there were about 15,50,000 Pakistanis in different countries of the world who include doctors, engineers, technicians and unskilled manpower. He said these Pakistanis faced various problems about the education of their children. He said that Pakistan's new generation abroad was unaware of its history, culture and Islamic values.

Mr Ghulam Dastgir Khan said that the Government was making all efforts to resolve the problems of the emigrants. The Government on the one hand had opened Pakistani schools abroad and on the other hand a contact had been established with the Pakistanis' social and cultural associations abroad to supply such material to media for the guidance and information of the Pakistanis on their history and cultural heritage. Such efforts, he said, needed expansion on positive and productive lines.

He expressed the hope that the conference proposals would provide help in this task.

The families of the emigrants faced a problem that there was no individual or institution to look after them in the country, he said. He said that the overseas Pakistanis Foundation and the Ministry of Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis had given a task to the researchers to give their findings on the subject.

He said that the Government effort was to ensure an effective role to these people to contribute towards their weal and the welfare of the country.

The Minister hoped that through these efforts the emigrants on their return home would be motivated and engaged in different productive activities for the uplift of country.

ULEMA ASKED TO HELP CHECK POPULATION GROWTH

Karachi DAWN in English 11 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug 10: Federal Labour and Manpower Minister, Ghulam Dastgir Khan said today the present growth rate of population in the country would decline if Ulema and the various Islamic bodies like Council for Islamic Ideology and Islamic Research Institute could explain to people its necessity.

The Minister was speaking at a national convention organised by the Allama Iqbal Open University in connection with "Education and Cultural Identity of Pakistanis Working Abroad."

The Minister said that over 16 lakh Pakistani working abroad would be given all possible help on their return to Pakistan. A number of welfare schemes had already been launched by the Government. Besides, the Immigrants Act had been amended to provide facilities to and raise social status of the Pakistani working class.

The Government, he said, would not allow any Pakistani to work abroad at less than fixed wages. He said efforts were in progress to produce more qualified persons with latest technical knowledge. Six technical institutes at a cost of Rs 6 crore would be set up soon at Quetta, Karachi, Islamabad, Hyderabad, Loralai and Lahore.

The Minister described the functioning of Overseas Pakistani Foundation as not much encouraging but hoped it would improve.

EROSION OF CONFIDENCE IN POLICE CHARGED

Karachi DAWN in English 12 Aug 82 p 7

[Editorial: "The Police and the People"]

[Text] ONE would understand the compulsion of a senior police officer to vindicate his department at a time when the people feel concerned over what they perceive to be a significant rise in serious crime. But the Radio news conference of the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Karachi, has thrown up simplistic answers that circumvent the real issues. It is no satisfaction to learn, through statistics that seem dubious, that the rate of crime detection in Karachi in terms of robberies and dacoities was immensely better than in Tokyo, London and New York. Suprisingly, in contrast with this claim we are told that the efficiency portrayed in American crime serials could not be expected from a police that lack the required resources. Irrespective of what hunger for gadgetry the TV serials might generate, the performance of our police has to be assessed in the context of our requirements. It is, also, not a matter entirely of statistics. It is easy to casually brush off, as the DIG did, the "looting of a couple of petrol pumps in a week in a population of 60 to 70 lakh". More crucial is the sense of insecurity that has evidently increased among law-abiding citizens and the apparent failure of the police to inspire confidence in the ordinary citizen. That something is seriously amiss was testified to by a high-level meeting last month on the law and order situation in the province. Chaired by the Governor, the deliberations were prompted by a recent surge in armed hold-ups and highway robberies. That decisions were taken to reorganise the police force in Karachi, Hyderabad and Sukkur showed that new strategies were found necessary to deal with the crime situation.

However, a number of basic issues have been ignored in offical responses that reflect, as we had stated in a recent comment, a purely defensive reaction. Without going into the social and economic factors contributing to an increase in crime, the specific character of our police force and its relationship with society is to be seriously pondered. It is painful to observe that the colonial mandate of the law-enforcing agencies, meant originally as an instrument of repression, has not wholly changed. After Independence, the police should have developed a harmonious working relationship with the people. What has happened is that the public image of the police has further declined. A law-abiding citizen would normally shudder to go to a police station. Methods of investigation and interrogation are known to be primitive. Logically, the police should not be expected to remain untouched by the spread of corruption in the bureaucracy. The DIG has disclosed that the services of 240 police officials, including 25 inspectors and sub-inspectors, were terminated in the past six months on various charges, including refusal to register complaints. But the standard police behaviour transcends the familiar taint of corruption and inefficiency. It smacks of overlordship and insensitivity to accepted human values. This has eroded the sense of social responsibility of the citizens. Unless measures are taken to erase this equation, an increase in the size of the police force, armed with better weapons, walkie-talkies and faster vehicles, will not meaningfully affect the situation. The police officials repeatedly point to paucity of resources. Technically, the argument is valid. But what return does society get for whatever is spent on the police? As it is, the Sind budget for the current fiscal year has provided more for police administration (Rs. 283 million) than for the administration of health services (Rs. 174 million). Finally, it is not the cost but the return in terms of law enforcement that will make the difference. And for that, the very mandate and the moral purpose of the police will have to be altered.

ZIA PROMISES BLUEPRINT OF ISLAMIC SET UP IN 1 YEAR

Karachi DAWN in English 16 Aug 82 pp 1, 13

[Text]

RAWALPINDI, Aug 15: President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq yesterday promised the nation a blueprint of a political system based on Islamic principles, by the next Independence Day.

In an inspiring flag hoisting ceremony on the Independence Day in the Presidency, here, the President, while addressing the nation, said that the country was created in the name of Islam and after a long struggle by the Muslims of the Indo-Pak Subcontinent, and thus it was a gift from the Almighty.

He said that propelled by the Islamic spirit, the Government would evolve a political system becoming of a country created in the name of Islam.

The flag hoisting ceremony was attended by the Chairman of the Majlis-i-Shoora, Khwaja Mohammad Safdar; Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee, Gen. Mohammad Iqbal Khan; Vice Chief of the Army Staff, Gen. Sawar Khan; Air Chief Marshal Mohammad Anwar Shamim, Chief of the Air Staff; Federal Ministers, diplomats, Federal Councillors, civil and military officials, Ulema and a large number of school-children.

In his address, the President said that a political structure, based on Islamic tenets, was being evolved in line with the Government policy to take a stride forward in the direction of the purpose for which the country was created.

Achievements

The President said that though he was not for recounting the achievements of his Government, his Government had advanced in the direction of restoring the self-respect of the individual and had given the Pakistani tinge to the society in Pakistan.

He said that during the last five years, the Zakat system had been evolved affording some help for the widows, destitutes, and other deserving people. Respect of the citizens had been restored and the worker today was earning an honest living without fear.

However, he said, he was not the judge of the Government's achievements, and it was for the people to point out the unlit corners in the Government efforts.

He said he was also aware that in spite of its best efforts, the Government, perhaps, could not give complete security of "chadar and chardewari" and, perhaps, might not have fulfilled all the dreams of the masses. But, he said, the effort had certainly been made, resulting in an advance towards the welfare of the nation, according to the tenets of Islam.

The President said he was very hopeful about the governmental efforts even as he knew that weaknesses that developed in years could not be cured overnight. He said the Government realised that the efforts directed towards reforming society should be stepped up, and that was why it was making its best efforts following in the footsteps of the pristine Muslims.

He said the Government was not, in any way, comparing its efforts with those of the Khulfa-i-Rashideen, but it really believed that it would continue to strive to attain the level of social development which was current in their times.

Social reform

The task of social reform, the President said, could not be achieved without concerted efforts of the entire nation. He called upon the nation to dedicate the whole year to social reforms and rid society of evils, and created a polity based on the principles of Faith, Unity and Discipline.

He said the Pakistanis owed it to themselves to create the Islamic atmosphere where the rights of the rich and the poor, the big and the small, were equally protected; where students respected their teachers and the teachers imparted education the way they should; where the Muslims offered their prayers in greater numbers; and where every Pakistani had the great Muslim character.

He said the nation had to launch Jehad against poverty, ignorance, illiteracy, deprivation, narrow mindedness and had to create a society which gave protection to the minorities.

The President also said that today the nation should pledge their determination to reform society.

He said the Government had its own plans which would be made public shortly about how society could be reformed. He said the public should, however, fight during the next one year against bribery and nepotism. On the part of the Government, it would see to it that the nation got a political system based on Islamic principles within a year, which would provide the people with a judicial system where an ordinary man got justice easily.

He said the economy of the country also had to be rid completely of the interest system, and for that the Ulema, researchers and experts should help the Government.

President Zia-ul-Haq said that the national flag, the national anthem and the national language were the symbols of integrity and solidarity of the country.

He said all of these symbols had a glorious background spread over centuries. The light of Islam gave new life, spirit and determination to all those who came in its fold.

Islam spread over the subcontinent providing hope and determination to the Muslims who were blessed with many qualities, but could not muster their own social and geographical identity.

The President, paying rich tributes to Ulema and religious scholars, said they provided guidance to the Muslims at such a time and held aloft the banner of Islam.

The President said the nation was extremely grateful and saluted the unknown freedom fighters who waged a gigantic struggle for the glory of Islam and creation of Pakistan.

They made the dream of Pakistan come true with their supreme dedication and faith.

The nation saluted and owed its gratitude to the Shuhada, who, by rendering supreme sacrifices, contributed to the honour and glory of the nation with their blood, he said.

National flag

President Zia said: "The national flag is a symbol of our past glory and inspiration for the future, it makes us take pride in our past and beckons us to build a bright future.

He said: "The national flag belongs to all of us and we have to hoist it, keep it fluttering high and ensure its full protection."

He said the respect and love for the national flag, enshrined in our hearts, would strengthen our determination to protect our cherished freedom.

The President said that the creation of Pakistan was a miracle.

Pakistan's goals

The President urged the people to study in depth the objective of Pakistan and try to acquire the spirit essential for achieving the goals of Pakistan.

The people of Pakistan should try to abide by the principles as laid down in the Kalima which was a real definition of Pakistan. Only then could Pakistan become the fortress of Islam and the objective of its creation could be achieved, he added.

The President exhorted the people to ponder over their state of affairs and their contribution to achieve the desired objective which was the creation of an Islamic welfare state.

The people should take a lesson from the past and move ahead towards building a better and bright future.—APP.

INDEPENDENCE DAY FERVOR--STRONG NATIONAL SENTIMENT REPORTED

Karachi DAWN in English 16 Aug 82 pp 1, 11

[Text]

If the operations of Pakistan Railways over the last three decades are taken as the sole indicator of country's economic performance, it would seem that all this time we have been moving in the reverse direction.

During this period under discussion while the length of railway tracks running around the country has remained almost static at about 1476 miles, their age has made it dangerous for the locomotives to cross 50 MPH limit reducing the pace of commuting by trains to the level of travel by donkey carts.

On the other hand while the population of the country increased by manifolds over the last thirty years the number of passengers travelling by train has declined significantly and it has remained almost stationary at 128 million annually since 1965-66.

The situation in respect of goods transportation is rather more shocking. In 1967-68 PR carried 14.88 million tons of goods while in 1980-81 the tonnage came down to 11.37 million tons. The table depicts the fluctuations in the volume of transportation goods that occurred between 1967—68 and 1980-81. And it can be seen that from 1975-76 when the PR carried 15.31 million tons — the highest ever in the last 14 years — a gradual decline has occurred in goods carriage.

The number of locomotives and passenger as well as goods wagons is also declining with the passing of each year making it impossible for the PR to meet the growing demands of country's passenger and goods transportation needs. In view of the shortage of trains and bogies, it is being contemplated to introduce the system of bookings three months in advance for passengers. And already it has been observed that goods booked by train usually reach their destination after a lag of thirty days on an average.

It is interesting to note that while the operations of PR have contracted considerably over the last several years, the organisation itself has been expanding in respect of its personnel and the expenditure incurring on its maintenance has shot up many times during the last 33 years. In 1949 the PR had a total of 94,099 employees while by 1981 this population of employees had increased to 1,30,536. On the other hand the total financial expenditure on the employees was around Rs. 82.2 million in 1949 which by 1981 had expanded to Rs. 737 million.

According to PR sources while the number of trains increased by a little over 100 per cent in the last 33 years, the number of officers in the organisation increased by about 299 per cent and the number of workers improved by about 38.16 per cent.

The Federal Minister for Railways, Lt-Gen Saeed Qadir while answering a question in the last session of Majlis-i-Shoora gave the following reasons for the deterioration in the operations of PR specifically with respect to decrease in the tonnage carried by the Railways: 1) Structural changes in the pattern of traffic away from the port to internal production points. 2) Deterioration of transport capacity due to increase in the number of overage assets and abandonment of line capacity works. 3) Competition from road for long distance haulage. 4) Introduction of the pipe line for transportation of oil from Keamari to Mahmudkot.

It is also stated that allocation for the PR had continued to decline gradually during the Fourth Plan period. In the Fourth Plan the allocations declined to 17 per cent of the total allocation for transport sector as against 58 per cent in the first Plan.

At the time of independence Pakistan had only one organised mode of long distance transportation and that was Pakistan Railways. Transportation systems by air and by road were developed in later years. But in growth and efficiency these two modes of transportation overtook their older rival very early in the day. And now with the addition of National Logistic Cell in the country's communication system, the Railways appear to have accepted a permanent back seat.

In the opinion of experts, bringing the PR to its top level of operational efficiency and hauling it up to its real place in the communica-

Years	Total Tonnage (in Thousands)

1972-73	12,520
1973-74	11,501
1974-75	14,148

1978-79	11,958

tion scheme of things, would call for the mobilisation of a colossal amount of resources and would require concerted efforts spread over a long period. In view of this a section of officials indifferent to country's long term needs and interested only in dazzling the nation with their short term successes albeit of doubtful value, is reported to be opposing any move that aimed at putting the PR back on its tracks. But there is reported to be another section of officials which is well aware of the magnitude of transportation chaos that would break-out ten years hence, if the PR is allowed to die of neglect.

It is argued that for a poor country like Pakistan there is no alternative to Railways for economical transportation. Air transportation and commuting by road would always remain expensive and costly. And if the Railways is allowed to gradually shrink its operations, it would only add an unnecessary component to the cost of living of an average Pakistani curtailing his mobility and the mobility of goods which serves as an essential catalyst in the economic growth of a country.

Those who view the problem with a degree of sympathy tend to get discouraged by the prospect of raising the huge amount required to repair the Railways. And there appears to be no easy way out of the corner in which the PR has landed itself. Other priorities are so pressing that no diversion of finances from these priorities could even be contemplated.

It is probably for this reason that during the last thirty years a number of ambitious plans were prepared to improve the operations of the PR but abandoned as enough resources were not available to finance these Plans.

A beginning could, however, be made with a humble step, say some Railways experts. In this connection they suggested that commuting time should be reduced as a first step by adding more double tracks and diversions at more regular intervals so that no unnecessary time is wasted in train crossing operations. Secondly the overage parts of the tracks should be replaced at the earliest so that the trains could run at least 75MPH. If these two problems are solved within a reasonable period of time, the eight hundred trains would be able to haul more passengers, more goods and at a faster pace. Meanwhile the Islamabad Carriage Factory could help replace the overage coaches and wagons in an orderly and planned manner.

No amount of improvement in the equipment and machinery would help if the managers managing the Railways run it inefficiently, therefore, it is essential that a system should be evolved which could expose the inefficient manager immediately. There is a tendency in our society to blame the worker for the inefficiency of the officer. It must be kept in mind that the efficiency of the worker and his productivity is directly related to the ability of officer to inspire the former to give his best under the worst possible conditions.

Moreover, inefficiency among the officer class gives rise to corruption. It is the officer class which encourages nepotism, graft and pilferage. And again, the behaviour of the officer class determines the degree of discipline among the workers. So, if the working of about 800 officers is closely monitored, it is argued, the PR's operational efficiency would improve manifold within a short time.

All this will require a relatively smaller amount of finances and could be accomplished within a reasonable period of time. And afterwards, the Railways could look after its own needs, generating its own development finances and grooming an efficient workforce.

RED CROSS TEAM TO INSPECT AFGHAN JAILS

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 10

[Text]

LONDON, Aug 23: The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which returned to Afghanistan after a two-year absence recently, hopes to inspect the country's jails.

Four ICRC delegates, including a doctor are currently in Kabul holding discussions with the Afghan authorities in this regard.

ICRC hopes it would get a list of prisoners held in Afghan jails and permission to visit them.

Although there is no official estimate of the number of Afghan imprisioned since Soviet troops invaded this country in 1979, but Mujahideen Organisation claim there are at least 12,000 of their supporters in jail, many of them on political charges.

Informed sources here said the return of the ICRC's team to Afghanistan follows the release of five Soviet soldiers who were held by the Mujahideen organisations. The five Russians were turned over to the ICRC and are now interned in Switzerland.

The sources said the Afghan Government formally approached the ICRC to return to Kabul last June after a batch of Russian was set free.

Final arrangements for the ICRC's visit to Afghanistan were worked out during Afghan Foreign Minister, Shah Mohammad Dost's visit to Geneva in June at the UN sponsored talks with Pakistan about a peace settlement in Afghanistan.

PAKISTAN-CHINA COOPERATION STRESSED

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 7

[Text]

FAISALABAD, Aug 23: Mutual cooperation between Pakistan and the Peoples Republic of China in the field of science and agriculture would develop in the years ahead which would further strengthen the friendship between the two countries.

This was stated by the leader of the nine-member Chinese delegation, Mr Ahmad Ismail during a visit to the University of Agriculture here on Sunday.

He said the members of the delegation were greatly impressed to see the research and academic activities of this university. This university, he remarked, was no doubt the biggest institution in Asia which had played a significant role in the agricultural development of Pakistan.

About his visit to Pakistan, he said they felt that they were in an ocean of friendship. Wherever we went we were enthusiastically welcomed by the great people of Pakistan, he remarked.

He said the people of China too have similar sentiments for the Pakistani nation.

The members of the delegation were taken round various parts of the university, livestock farms and the zoological museum where they evinced keen interest in research activities and made certain searching queries.

Later the Vice-Chancellor of the University hosted a lunch in honour of the distinguished visitors which was attended among others by the Commissioner, Faisalabad Division, Mr Javed Ahmad Qureshi and local members of Majlis-i-Shoora.—

HUGE BACKLOG IN PHONE CONNECTIONS IN KARACHI REPORTED

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 8

[Text]

The General Manager of Karachi Telecommunication Region, Syed Irshad Hasan said in Karachi on Monday that a large number of applications are being received for telephone connections from people "who never used telephones in their lifetime."

Speaking on 'Telephones in Pakistan" at the Karachi Rotary Club luncheon meeting, he said, majority of the applicants are those who are employed abroad, mostly in the Middle East.

Such people he said, have all the resources, but the communication gap cannot be filled by them, because of non-availability of telephone connections in their homes in Pakistan.

Mr Hasan said that there are 300,000 telephone subscribers in the country and an equal number of applications are pending for connections.

In Karachi, he said, there are about 100,000 working connections, and about 150,000 pending applications. This number could go further up, but as people are shy of applying, the number is not going up.

The Government, he said, has been giving very low priority to telephones and the planners forget that any development that takes place will have a direct bearing on the economy because of the lack of desired number of telephones.

Communications through telephones is much cheaper and economical than by any other means, he said. It saves lot of money, energy and time of the people.

In Asian countries the percentage of telephones on the basis of population is 1 per cent and in Pakistan it is 0.4 per cent, he said, and to improve the situation, he favoured the transfer of telephones to the private sector.

During the last fiscal year, the Government had provided Rs. 890 million for telephones and this year the amount has been increased to Rs 1450 million for providing 50,000 telephones, out of which 26,000 alone will be provided in the Karachi Region.

Mr Hasan said that 14 of the 28 telephone exchanges have been provided with the facilities for International Subscribers Dialling.

At the International Gateway Exchange, he said, 25 assistants are attending to the calls for overseas booking which is not sufficient. He requested the people not to put the receiver down if the connection is not readily provided. They should hang on, otherwise, they will lose their priority, if each time they call 0102.

For public call offices, he said, his department will provide connections on priority basis if suitable people apply for them. The place should be accessable to the public, he added.

PAKISTAN RAILWAYS PROGRESS REVIEWED

Karachi DAWN in English 16 Aug 82 Supplement p 1

[Article by M. Ziauddin: "Up and Up on the Down Track"]

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug. 15: In a massive but spontaneous outpouring of sentiments of patriotism, national pride and unflinching faith in the ultimate destiny, the Nation celebrated 36th day of Independence with unprecedented gaiety, gusto and fervour.

The atmosphere of exuberance and festivity witnessed in every nook and corner of the country from Peshawar to Karachi and Gilgit to Khuzdar, was mingled with renewed pledge to work ceaselessly for realisation of the objectives for which Pakistan was created, to guard its independence and make it strong and prosperous.

With a 31-gun salute herlading the day in the Nation's capital and 21-gun boomings in the four provincial capitals, the Independence Day celebrations began throughout the length and breadth of the country. National flag fluttered atop palatial buildings and houses in cities as proudly as on huts and mudhouses in remote villages.

A soul stirring spectacle was presented by millions of Pakistanis when sirens sounded one minute before nine throughout the country and traffic on roads and on trucks came to a standstill and the entire nation joined the President, Gen. Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq in chanting the National anthem.

The President earlier hoisted the National flag in an impressive ceremony at the Presidency in Rawalpindi and later addressed the Nation. The address was telecast and broadcast on TV and Radio network.

The celebrations were marked by colour and festivity as people profusely decorated houses, shops and bazars across the land with flags and buntings.

As the sun went down, cities, towns and villages turned aglow with illuminations of every colour and hue giving a literally fairy landish look to the night skyline. Everything that moved on the roads and streets — buses, cars, taxis, rickshaws, trucks, bicycles, tongas and rehras were carried the National flag, a rare spectacle hardly seen after Independence.

Loudspeakers and amplifiers blared out national songs from hundres of houses, shops and other establishments to add to the patriotic zeal which 80 million Pakistanis celebrated the Day.

People offered prayers in mosques for solidarity and integrity of the country and for the the unity of the Muslim world. Prayers were also offered for the sucess of the freedom fighters in Palestine and Afghanistan.

The portraits of the Founder of Pakistan, Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah and the Poet-philosopher who conceived the idea of a separate homeland for Muslims of the Subcontinent, Allama Mohammad Iqbal, adorned key points along the thoroughfares. So did the portraits of the first Prime Minister of Pakistan, Quaid-i-Millat Liaquat Ali Khan, other luminaries of Pakistan Movement, and President Gen. Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq.

A huge portrait of the Quaid-i-Azam donated by the friendly Muslim country, Turkey, stared down on the passerby from a high-rise building on the city's best known thoroughfare, The Mall.

Another Muslim country, neighbouring Iran, shared Pakistan's joyous day by putting up billboards saying "Peace and Prosperity to Brotherly Pakistan".

President Gen. Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq set the tone for unprecedented Independence Day celebrations across the land as he sang the National anthem and unfurled the National flag at the soul-stirring ceremony at the Presidency here.

The President hosted a reception at Aiwan-i-Sadr to mark the Independence Day. It was largely atended.

In Rawalpindi a grand rally participated by some 10,000 children as well as a large number of rickshaws and buses was held in Raja Bazar which was reviewed by the Mayor, Rawalpindi Municipal Corporation, Sheikh Ghulam Hussain.

RAILWAY FARES NOT TO INCREASE

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

LAHORE, Aug 23: Lt-Gen. Saeed Qadir, Federal Minister for Railways, Production and Chairman of the Logistic Cell, has said that the Railways has no intention to increase the fares in the near future.

Talking to PPI at the Lahore Airport this morning, the Minister said that reorganisation of the Railway had been done to increase its earning. The Railway Board was merged with the Federal Railway Ministry and General Manager had been made responsible for the operation of the trains.

The Minister said, he had already directed the General Manager Railways to let him know the actual deficit of the Railway so that it should be met through some means. However, he ruled out the posibility of providing subsidy to the Railway.

The Federal Minister said that it was upto the General Manager to plug the leakage of revenue in the Railway and he had been directed to look into uneconomical services and take steps to boost up the earnings. The final decision would be made in June 1983 after calculating the actual deficit, he added.—

SICK INDUSTRIAL UNITS BODY GIVEN MORE POWERS

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 23 Aug 82 p 1

[Text]

LAHORE, Aug 22: The Federal Government has enhanced powers of the technical committee on financial assistance which is entrusted with the task of preparing the recommendations for the revival of the sick textile units, it was reliably learnt here today.

The committee was primarily assigned the task of only examining causes of the industrial units adversely affected by exchange rate fluctuations, a major reason on sickness of the textile industry. But now, its jurisdiction has been enlarged to encompass all such cases which require financial readjustment between the units and their financial problems which arose out of exchange rate fluctuations or some other causes.

The fundamental objective of reviewing these powers is to revitalise the sick units in shortest possible time.

New powers vested in the committee in relation to ailing or closed units are to assist and rehabilitate sick textile units in a manner as deemed fit and proper by it, to affect a revised financial arrangement between a certain unit and its creditors, to order moratorium in respect of recoveries of the dues of undertaking by the creditors or allow reasonable rebate or concessions, to revise liabilitits debt repayable, reschedule its payment to its creditors, including banks, financial institutions, government and statutory corporation and lastly to propose any other action which it may feel necessary for rehabilitation of the undertaking.

It may be mentioned here that headed by the Federal Finance Secretary, this committee has further set up a sub-committee to go into the details of the ailing and sick units. So far, it has recommended measures for the revival of of 31 closed down units.

The committee has examined cases of 95 sick or closed down units and recommended a financial assistance of Rs. 81.45 million. Of them Rs. 58.9 million have already been distributed. Besides, moratorium on government dues and re-scheduling of debts have been allowed in deserving cases.

As a result of these measures, 2.38 lakh spindles have been retored into operation.

At present over 200 mills in industrial fields (other than sick textile mills) are lying closed in the country. Another 100 units are struggling for survival. Their investment is around Rs. 1200 million with 5,000 workers employed therein.

If these mills and the equipment were to be replaced the expenditure involved would be 15 times more than their value. —PPI.

EXPORT PROCESSING ZONE DEVELOPMENT--FOREIGN CAPITAL INVESTMENT HOPED

Karachi DAWN in English 8 Aug 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq has said that Export Processing Zone (EPZ) near Karachi is being developed with the specific purpose of attracting foreign capital, investment and modern technology.

Speaking before a gathering of local and foreign investors during an inspection visit of the site of Export Processing Zone near Port Qasim on Saturday morning, President Zia said that all Pakistani entrepreneurs who can bring foreign capital would be allowed to make investment in the zone.

"Whosoever brings the foreign capital would be provided with the facilities and no question would be asked about the source," he declared.

The Government, President Zia said was keen to see Export Processing Zone develop into an active and dynamic body which should exercise all necessary powers and should frame laws and rules which are best suited to industries in the zone.

He made a particular reference to the framing of labour laws for the zone which, he said, should, be "production oriented" and also protect legitimate rights of workers.

He asked the EPZA Chairman to notify the labour laws in three months.

As for the requirements of basic infra-structure facilities, the President said the Government would do all possible to make available water, gas and electricity for the industries in the zone.

Referring to EPZA Chairman, Mr. Mohammad Ziauddin Khan's plea for more land to set up carge generating industries in the zone, he advised him to negotiate with Port Qasim Authority for the acquisition of land.

Referring to the point raised by certain Pakistani investors who sought Government's permission for equity participation in the local currency in industrial projects in the zone, President Zia advised them to explore investment possibilities in backward areas of the country.

He said there were ample opportunities for Pakistani investors in areas like Sukkur, Dera Ghazi Khan and whole of Baluchistan where Government has offered tax holiday and has also ensured provision of basic infra-structure facilities.

Investment in such areas, he said, was no doubt a pioneering work but then, "we need pioneers" he remarked.

PROGRESS OF WORK

Earlier the Chairman of EPZA Mr. Mohammad Ziauddin Khan gave a detailed resume with illustrations through slides of the progress of work on site of Export Processing Zone after the Federal Cabinet had approved it on March 4, 1979.

After approval of EPZ project in 1979, Mr. Ziauddin said, the Government has released total funds amounting to about Rs.146 million of which over Rs.141 million or 97 per cent of funds have been utilised.

The zone, he said, would be completed by June next year within stipulated funds and scheduled time.

So far, he said, the EPZA has sanctioned 25 industrial projects involving total investment of Rs.135.89 million dollars which include one fertiliser, six light chemicals, six readymade garments, three electrical and electronics, two engineering, two ceramics, two printing and packaging and one miscellaneous industry.

Bulk of foreign investment amounting to over 68 million dollars of the sanctioned projects he said, has come from USA followed by investments from Saudi Arabia, U.K., UAE, Japan, West Germany, Kuwait, Singapore, Lesotho, Hong Kong, South Korea and Belgium.

The sanctioned projects, he said, would generate exports to the tune of 277.8 million dollars and would engage labour force of about 5,000.

Apart from these projects Mr. Ziauddin said 12 banks, including four nationalised and eight foreign banks, have been given permission to open their branches in the zone.

During the inspection visit to various parts of the Export Processing Zone President Zia was accompanied by Sind Governor Lt. Gen. S.M. Abbasi, Federal Industries Minister, Mr. Ilahi Bux Soomro, Production Minister, Lt. Gen. Saeed Qadir, Food and Agriculture Minister Rear Admiral Mohammad Fazil Janjua, Petroleum and Natural Resources Minister (Retd.) Maj. Gen. Rao Farman Ali, Finance Minister Mr. Ghulam Ishaq Khan, President's Advisers Mr. Hamid D. Habib and Mr. Muazzam Ali, Sind Cabinet Ministers and other senior officials of Federal and Sind Government.—PPI

AMBITIOUS OIL EXPLORATION PLANNED--OGDC CHAIRMAN INTERVIEWED

Karachi DAWN in English 8 Aug 82 Supplement p I

[Interview with Mr M.H. Rizvi, OGDC chairman, by Shaheen Sehbai; date and place not specified]

[Text] PAKISTAN'S oil exploration efforts have swung into top gear. In a couple of weeks international companies will be invited to bid for eight new structures. Negotiations with them will be conducted by the Oil and Gas Development Corporation. It is for the first time that international cooperation in domestic oil exploration is being sought in this manner.

All necessary technical and other data has been compiled and eight structures of potential interest have already been delineated after extensive geological and geophysical surveys.

Discussing these developments in an exclusive interview with DAWN, the OGDC Chairman Mr M.H. Rizvi expressed the hope that Pakistan will soon be an oil producing country.

In the interview Mr Rizvi covered various aspects of exploration of oil and gas in Pakistan, with special emphasis on the continued drive of the Government to keep on searching. Some excerpts:

Q. What really are the prospects of oil in Pakistan?

A. Pakistan has all the requisites essential for generation and accumulation of oil and gas. All international experts agree that Pakistan should have oil. There is no difference of opinion on this count. We could hit a big discovery any time. The only thing is to continue looking. So many major oil companies are exploring. All the Seven Sisters are working here. This proves their confidence in our potential. No one invests money without being sure.

Q. Why then have we not been successful so far?

A. There are two reasons. The geology of Pakistan is quite complex. Its not simple. It had similar type of deposition as Arab and Iran, but much deeper. The other reason is that very little exploratory work has been done. Since independence only 114 wells have been drilled — about three per year. In the past oil was cheap and governments were not interested. With the energy crisis we started losing huge foreign exchange and exploration started. Seismic work had also not been developed as it is now.

Q. Did the Russians find out major oil reserves in Baluchistan in late 50's?

A. Most of the work has been done by the Russians in collaboration with the OGDC. We surveyed all the country including Baluchistan. Pakistan made successes as well, like Sui Gas and the Pirkoh gas. We are starting another drilling between Sui and Pirkoh shortly. For drilling in an area we only have geological considerations in view.

Q. Is OGDC adopting a policy to get rigs on wet lease?

A. We want to intensify our exploration efforts as well as to diversify the sources. Our present rigs are too old and need replacement. We are trying to buy new ones. Four we bought earlier. Now we have committments to complete drilling in time. At Toot, World Bank is financing the project. At Pirkoh the Asian Development Bank has given us aid. Out of the four rigs we have, three are committed at Toot. The other modern rig is being used at Dhakni in Potwar. We are using our old Russian rigs at Dhodak and Pirkoh, where we have to complete six wells in two years. Pirkoh is a sensitive project. So we hired one rig from another company locally. We have not taken any rig on lease. Recently we got one from Adhi where complications had arisen and the well was abandoned. Since we are 50 per cent partners at Adhi, we hired the German rig for two wells and returned it after use.

Q. What other efforts are you making for oil search in Pakistan?

A. We are now going for international bidding to increase drilling efforts. Aim is to continue exploration, until discovery is made. Some successes have been made like Khaskheli, Pirkoh, etc. We are intensifying our efforts. We will have joint ventures so that quicker pace is achieved. Eight structures are ready for offer to international bidders. Our own efforts will continue besides these new structures. So an all out drive will be made. We are hopeful that very soon we will discover more oil.

Q. Is there any chance of more oil being discovered near the latest find at Khaskheli?

A. Khaskheli is a very interesting development. It is the first time we found oil in the lower Indus basin. There are similar types of structures in that area and they can be oil-bearing. We are exploring areas north of Khaskheli and some structures are being offered to other oil companies. This field has to be greatly developed. All world experts already know about this area.

Q. Is Pakistan running out of gas, natural gas?

A. Gas should be used sparingly. It should not be used to produce power. It is hard to say whether Sui will last 20 or 25 years but we need more discoveries to cover up the present shortage.

Q. Why are we facing shortage of gas when earlier estimates were said to be enough to last a 100 years?

A. Because more development of the gas field has to be made. Pirkoh gas will cater for future needs but we have to find more. You should use gas where it is best utilised. You should not use it for pig iron making or power. Use coal instead or water for power generation.

Q. At the present rate of consumption, do you think we will have a serious shortage of gas in the near future?

A. For me it is difficult to answer this question. But right now there is shortage and measures are being taken to compensate that.

Q. Is this shortage indicative of the fact that the gas reservoirs are nearing the end?

A. It is indicative of the fact that we need more gas. We will supply gas from Pirkoh next year. 40 mcf by end of 1983 and another 32 mcf by 1984. We are working on more gas fields as well. We will soon start drilling at Loti, between Pirkoh and Sui fields.

Q. How would you compare your progress with other Third World countries?

A. We have a large sedimentary area, equal to that of India. It needs a huge investment to go for exploration of it all. We need to drill at least 10 wells per year. We need lot of funds.

Q. Are you using space satellite pictures for prospecting and surveying?

A. Yes they are very useful and every major company is using these pictures. We also have five seismic parties who have carried out surveys for us as well as other foreign companies.

Q. Is it correct that by taking rigs on lease you will have a lot of your staff redundant?

A. Well the situation is just the reverse. Most of our men have gone out to the oil-rich states because they get attractive money. We cannot stop them, its difficult. To meet the shortage we have set up our own institute for training our people.

Q. Why at all do you have to get foreign crews for drilling?

A. Well most of our projects are financed by world agencies. World Bank is providing money for Toot. There we have to accept the terms of the financer. In Pirkoh the terms of the Asian Development Bank say we have to drill three wells and get three wells drilled by foreigners. So they will come and we will have to meet all their expenses from the funds we are getting. Sometimes we have to meet our committments and we do not find local staff available so we have to get foreigners to do the job.

FALL IN JULY EXPORTS REPORTED

Karachi DAWN in English 12 Aug 82 p 7

[Text]

Exports from Pakistan dropped by 41.2 per cent in July compared to the pervious month, registering a fall of over 1.18 billion rupees, informed sources said.

Quoting official figures, they said from Rs. 2865 million in June, exports had fallen to Rs. 1685.7 million in July, the first month of the new fiscal year.

However, compared to the same month last year, the figures showed an increase of about six per cent.

Raw cotton suffered the heaviest fail, with the total plunging from Rs. 538.7 million in June to Rs. 81.6 million in July.

Another major fall was recorded in the export of rice which fell from Rs. 441 million in June to Rs. 192.7 million in July.

The drop in leather goods was to the extent of Rs. 44.5 million while cotton yarn, fabrics and garments together dropped from Rs. 531.1 million to Rs. 291 million.

Sources said imports showed a better trend in July as compared to June, but against the same month last year an increase of 20.8 per cent was recorded.

Figures show that against imports worth Rs. 4,862.2 million in June, the July figure was Rs. 4,462.2 million, a drop of 8.2 per cent.

The main import item was crude oil which increased from Rs. 856.6 million in June to Rs. 1,067.4 million in July. Likewise, an increase in the import bill of fertilisers and edible oil was registered with Rs. 153.1 million spent more on fertilisers and Rs. 135.6 million more on edible oil. Total fertiliser imports in july were Rs. 267.7 million while those of edible oil totalled Rs. 318 million.

Pakistan imported 83.268 tons of wheat totalling Rs. 193.1 million in July.

Sources said the continued slump in the world cotton and rice markets was the main cause of the poor performance, although steps had been taken to halt the dwindling trend.

PAKISTAN-TURKEY MARKETING COMPANY PROPOSED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 23 Aug 82 p 1

[Article by Anwar Rajani]

[Text]

Establishment of joint Pak-Turkish Marketing Company is in the offing with the purpose to boost the export trade of the two countries, it is learnt.

The proposal to set up the company is in its initial stage. If it goes through, it will be set up in the private sector.

Two groups of industrialists have agreed in principle to set up this company. The Turkish group is known as Enka Group of Companies based at Istanbul. Pakistani Group consists of seven leading businessmen and industrialists namely Mehar H. Alvi, Farooque Dadabhoy Sadruddin Hashwani, Sultan Mauji, Saeed Kushtiwala, Farique Saeed and Tanwir Shaikh.

The Turkish Group of companies is reported to be mainly dealing in construction, textile and other finished goods.

A two-member team of the Turkish Group of Companies is at present on a visit to Pakistan. The team is now busy holding talks with their counterparts in Karachi. They will stay in the City for about a week and explore the possibilities to set up the Joint Marketing Company.

The idea of this company was put forth by a trade delegation from Pakistan which visited Turkey in June last. The delegation sponsored by the Export Promotion Bureau was led by Mehar Hr Alvi.

Mehar told "Business Recorder" yesterday that if all goes well the company will take its final shape soon. It will boost the trade of the two countries with joint efforts of Pakistani and Turkish businessmen he added.

At present, the Turkish group has a construction job in hand worth 10 billion dollars in various countries. Construction material worth 1.3 billion dollars is to be imported by the Turkish Group from outside. If available, this material can be exported from Pakistan, Mehar Alvi said.

Mehar said that the Turkish Group has agreed to import a large quantity of grey cloth from Pakistan. Arrangements have been finalised to import from Pakistan 10 million yards of grey cloth, he said.

NEW PRICE STRUCTURE FOR RICE VARIETIES

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Aug 82 p 1

[Text]

A new price structure for all the varieties of rice produced in the country, suggested by the Agriculture Prices Commission, is expected to be finalised by the Federal Cabinet within a week as part of the rice policy for the year 1982-83, it was reliably learnt here yesterday.

The proposed price structure, which will be applicable to the crop expected to come in the market in October/November contains new prices per 40 kg. as under: Head rice—Irri-6 (Faq) Rs. 88.00; Irri-6 (Superior) Rs. 105.00; and Basmati Rs. 220.00; Broken rice—Irri-6 (Faq) and Irri-6 (Superior) Rs. 70.00 and Basmati Rs. 115.00. The existing prices of the same varieties are: Head rice—Irri-6 (Faq) Rs. 78.50; Irri-6 (Superior) Rs. 95.50 and Basmati Rs. 194.75; Broken rice—Irri-6 (Faq) and (Superior) Rs. 64.25 and Basmati Rs. 111.25.

It is said that the Price Commission has prepared its recommendations on the assumption that the milling charges of last year have gone up by ten per cent, following increase in electricity rates and labour wages. Hence, the milling charges for the current year, as agreed by the federal ministries of food and agriculture and commerce, the Prices Commission, and the Rice Export Corporation of Pakistan (RECP) are Rs. 7.25 for Basmati and Rs. 7.00 for both types of Irri-6 per 40 kg.

The milling charges during the last year were fixed at Rs. 6.60 for Basmati and Rs. 6.35 for both types of Irri-6 per 40 kg. These charges were fixed after a detailed exercise conducted by the commission in 1981, in consultation with the rice dealers, RECP, federal food and commerce ministries.

It may be mentioned that the prices of paddy have already been announced, which are: Irri-6 (Faq) Rs. 49.00 per 40 kg., Irri-6 (Superior) Rs. 53.00 and Basmati Rs. 88.00 per 40 kg.

WHEAT SEMINAR RECOMMENDATIONS REPORTED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 23 Aug 82 p 2

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Aug. 22: Keeping in view Pakistan's wheat exporting potential, the seminar on wheat recommended that efforts be accelerated to develop varieties which can well compete in the world market.

The panels of the seminar (August 17-19) deliberated the damage caused to the wheat production by the unusual weather this year and recommended to the researchers that particular emphasis be given to breed drought, salt, cold and frost tolerant wheat varieties. It was felt that two research stations, one each at Quetta and Swat should undertake specific work on winter habit and cold tolerance.

In view of the increase in the cost of inputs, an effort be made to develop such varieties as have low input requirement.

Contingency programmes be initiated to develop more short duration wheat varieties in the shortest possible time.

The other major recommendations of different panels of the seminar are:

— The joint recommendations made for laying down uniform procedures for release of rust resistant wheat vareities by plant breeders and plant pathologists be implemented.

— The old wheat vareities which have been found resistant against current virulences of stripe and leaf rusts by researchers should be exploited in breeding rust resistant vareities.

— Studies on stress breeding be properly conceived and carried out at appropriate sites.

— Appropriate genetic studies should be conducted to back up the breeding programmes.

— Since during pre-partition days durum wheats were primarily exported from Indo-Pakistan, it is stressed that the high potential, disease resistant, durum wheats be developed and popularised.

COMPUTER FACILITIES

— Computer facilities should be made available to the plant breeders by the Pakistan Agricultural Research Council (PARC) to help accelerate the breeding work.

— It was emphasised that the scientigbbapiaarmation and germplasm generated on national as well as international centres should be made available to all the workers by the PARC.

— Emphasis be increased on combining quality elements with yield productivity.

— The work should be initiated to identify the agronomic problems in various agro-climatic zones and develope pachage of site specific technology for implementation by the farmer. Necessary infrastructure, especially mobility should be provided to undertake this type of work.

— The seminar recognised the need for a strong research programme for weed control to explore, actual losses done by weeds in terms of moisture, nutrient and yield, important weed species and areas of infestation and cultural methods of weed control, and the role of chemical weed killers.

— Satisfactory arrangements should be made to pass on the pachage of technology to the farmers.

FERTILIZER

A panel on fertilizer and soil chemistry, recommends that:

— Research on utilization of poor quality water for wheat, basic studies on salt and sodium tolerance of different wheat varieties needs to be continued.

— Long term soil fertility corordinated research project should be undertaken under different soils and cropping systems.

— Study on the management of fertilizer, its residual effects on wheat and succeeding crops, especially under barani situations should be undertaken.

— Use of gypsum and other acid forming materials should be investigated for improvement of saline-sodic soils for improved wheat production.

The recommendations on pathology include:

— To start epidemiological studies on wheat leaf rust at micro and macro level.

— To initiate research on partial bunt and for familiarization of techniques used at CIMMYT.

— To exploit durum wheat potential.

On agricultural mechanization, the seminar recommends:

— Coordinated trials for wheat must be conducted to determine the best combination of tillage implements.

— Research on potential of zero-tillage for production of wheat should be carried out especially for barani areas.

— Appropriate technology must be developed to safely store the crop at village or farm level.

— Agricultural economics of various inputs and cultural practices for wheat production should be worked out in different agro-ecological zones of the country.

— Socio-economic studies should be conducted to know the major constraints that affect the yield of the wheat crop.

— Food departments should arrange to pay advances to the farmers, if they need them before harvesting of wheat crop.

FARM MACHINERY WORKSHOP INAUGURATED

Karachi DAWN in English 24 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

LAHORE, Aug. 23: Lt.-Gen. Saeed Qadir, Federal Minister for Production and Railways, today stressed the need for promoting small scale technology to ensure benefits of mechanisation were available to small farmers.

He was inaugurating a six-day regional workshop for agricultural machinery manufacturers under Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) and Agricultural Machinery Division, Pakistan Agricultural Research Council at the Pakistan Administrative Staff College, Lahore. Representatives from India, Indonesia, Iran, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand are participating in the workshop.

The Federal Minister said that it was estimated that about 69 per cent of the total farms in the country commanding 34 per cent of the cultivated area were below 12.5 acres. However, he added, for the effective agricultural development, these farms must also benefit from modern inputs and technology.

Lt.-Gen. Saeed Qadir said that in view of the shortage of the farm energy, Pakistan needed smaller tractors in addition to higher horse power tractors, which should be within the reach of small farmers.

With this objective in view, he said, the Government was encouraging the import and use of power tillers, about 1,000 power tillers of 12 HP had been imported from China which were two-wheel tractors and were becoming popular with small farmers.

The Federal Minister also stressed the need for developing facilities for the manufacture of implements and other agricultural machinery such as paddy transplanters, planters for cotton, sugarcane, maize, groundnut and soyabean; harvesters for sugarcane, groundnut and potato crops and thrashers for paddy and groundnut. Out of these the paddy transplanters perhaps deserved the urgent attention of the manufacturers, he said.

Lt.-Gen. Saeed Qadir said that the Government was aware of the problems the local manufacturing industry was facing, specially those of non-availability of proper material, lack of standards, lack of trained manpower, inadequate research facilities to develop appropriate farm machines and absence of industrial extension facilities.

He said that a solution conforming to the local socio-economic and agro-climatic conditions, would have to be sought to these problems.

He said that the Government attached the highest priority to the development of agricultural sector and its policy aimed at making a breakthrough in the field of exports in foodgrains. Along with rice and cotton Pakistan had made recently a modest beginning in Wheat by starting the export of 50,000 tons of wheat to Iran.

The Federal Minister, later, opened a display of agricultural machinery and implements organised on the premises of the college.-

STEEL MILL CRITICS REBUFFED; PROJECT SUPPORTED

[Editorial]

[Text] LAHORE, Aug 22--The Federal Interior Minister, Mahmud A. Haroon has said that according to best of his knowledge Salamullah Tippu, who hijacked a Pakistani airliner in March last year, was in Afghanistan. Talking to newsmen he denied that Salamullah Tippu had entered into Pakistan as the official agencies had no such report with them and what was circulating in this connection was just as rumours. According to latest information with him Salamullah was in Afghanistan.

Replying to a question he said that President, Gen Mohammad Zia ul Haq been meeting with the leaders of the political parties directly or indirectly but there was no programme in his knowledge that President was meeting with the political leaders under a schedule to discuss problems facing the country and nation in near future.

ELECTIONS

Mahmud A. Haroon said that the local bodies elections would be held in September 1983, and the new political system for the country would be announced by the next Independence Day, by the President. After which the general elections were possible to be held.

The President had already announced that the next elections would be held on the basis of adult franchise while the Election Commission had started to prepare the lists for holding elections, he added. Replying to yet another question he said that the Federal Minister for Local Bodies had already made it clear that the local bodies institution would not be used for indirect elections.

SHORT DURATION WHEAT VARIETIES--Islamabad, Aug 20--Dr Amir Mohammad, Chairman Pakistan Agriculture Research Council, (PARC) has stressed the need of developing short duration varieties of wheat and also a package of technology responsive to the requirements of farmers. He was speaking at the concluding session of 3-day wheat seminar here last evening. He urged the scientists to keep the peculiar circumstance; and conditions which the farmers have to face while evolving a package of technology for the wheat growers of the country. Dr Amir Mohammad said special attention should be given to overcome the scarcity of water in Baluchistan with emphasis on development of range lands. He said that P.A.R.C. has already set up an arid zone research institute which is busy in research to identify suitable crops for the dry areas. He said the seminar was a great success as it was participated for the first time by the farmers of the four provinces in addition to scientists and wheat experts. He said that work was in progress to train more manpower in the field of agriculture. He asked the scientists to work for better yield and disease resistant varieties in order to increase the production of wheat. Dr Amir Mohammad said that in light of the recommendations of the seminar research programme for the next year will be evolved.--APP [Text] [Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Aug 82 p 1]

ORDERS SECURED THROUGH EXHIBITS--Export orders worth 23 million dollars were obtained through official participation in 12 international trade exhibitions and specialised fairs held in various parts of the world during last fiscal year. According to the official sources spot sales were also made in some of the exhibitions in which Pakistan participated which though not very substantial in terms of hard cash, but proved very fruitful by way of introducing country's goods to the foreign buyers. The most remarkable feature of the fiscal year's programme of participation in exhibition was Pakistan's pavilion in the Indian international trade fair at Delhi in November 1981. Delhi fair, the sources said, provided opportunity to the people of India particularly the Muslims, to get information about development activities taking place in different fields in Pakistan during last 35 years.--PPI [Text] Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Aug 82 p 1]

VARSITY CODE OF ETHICS--The Karachi University Students Union has finalised its code of ethics for promoting academic peace at the Campus. This was announced by the Joint Secretary of KUSU Mr Ayaz Sarwat Farooqi at a press conference yesterday. The code will be submitted to the Students Adviser of the University shortly. The rival body, USM, has already submitted its code to the University authorities. Meanwhile the Working Committee of the United Students Movement has criticised the Vice-Chancellor's suggestion that the teaching of Honours classes be abolished in Karachi University. The students would resist such a move, a USM Press release said. The demand for abolishing the Honours classes appears to be part of "a conspiracy" aimed at limiting the educational facilities to the "privileged class" only, it added. COLUMNIST DISCUSSES DETERIORATED POLITICAL SITUATION

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 13 Aug 82 p 9

[Article by Eddie R. Gandionco]

[Text] This is the third of articles written in advance because of my absence. Today I will make on the study I have made on what has gone wrong and what I think should be done on the situation we are in. But before looking at the economic aspects, the question that must be asked is this: What kind of wind is now buffeting us? Is it a wind of change, recovery, collapse or worst?

Let us examine the situation. The political climate has deteriorated. There are renewed tension in various parts of the country, especially in the Visayas region, of the rise in NPA activities. Of course, this is denied by the PC/INP. The monetary order is confused, while soaring prices of commodities have become unbearable for the people whose income has remain at a standstill. Unemployment has us in its its grip and is squeezing harder and harder. Inflation is moving at ever faster and more alarming rate, although government statistics will not show. Exchange rate fluctuatons has become one of the major bottleneck of business and industry. Foreign borrowings, balance-of-payments, adn budgetary deficits are now on stratospheric levels and is going up, up, up into space without any hope, at this point of time, of levelling or going down.

The internal economic crisis goes on. The continuing everday problems tempt politicians, both from the opposition groups and the KBL, to indulge in strong words for the people's consumption. The result is that suspicion and mistrust of people in government press releases and programs grow and doubts arise about the real intentions. The "five-pillars of justice" in which the Administration wished to give our underprivileged and poor justice has failed in their duties. Just read the newspapers daily and the radio airlanes of the many injustices committed by those in government.

In the face of all our problems, external and internal which confront us daily I propose that the politicians put behind them their ambitions and personal interests and resolve to work for the improvement of the quality of life of our people; for those in charge of the collection of taxes to honestly and efficiently collect all taxes under existing tax laws and to do away for a while of keeping part of the taxes in their pockets until better times; for the affluents in society, (business, industry and government), to share with those who have less in life and the millions of their poor Filipino brothers their ill-gotten or cheated wealth; for the military establishment, especially the PC/INP, to try to concentrate in eliminating criminality and other forms of crime which is gripping the country rather than search for scapegoats; and many, many more.

A more constructive approach to our problems and miseries would be for government to try to be more consistent in their policies and ways. To be candid and truthful to the people whom they are supposed to serve with sincerity, honesty, and dedication. But are they?

The Administration is not pleased to see high interest rates, for they are an obstacle to economic recovery and they depress business and industry. However, high interest rates are a means to an end of removing inflation. And the high interest rates in the United States have pushed the Philippines rates above the level we would have wished. And the US interest rates resulted in the fluctuation of the exchange rates of our currencies or the influence of the dollar in the financial markets. What is happening to day in our financial sector and the level of interest rates is a reflection of the international monetary system. If the government understands what is happening to us now, perhaps our experts and technocrats can work to improve ourselves thru monetary stability, greater use of domestic funds instead of foreign funds for development, development of community credit systems managed by banks and remove barriers to invisible trade. And, of course, government spending must be kept within reasonable levels or limits.

WORLD BANK COMMENTS ON PHILIPPINE ECONOMIC PLANS

[Article by Conrado R. Banal III: "World Bank on RP Development Plan"]

[Text] A young man, at this moment, is probably figuring out how to make water heaters out of empty tin cans as part of his vocational training in high school. The heaters are not for actual use, for the project merely aims to teach students like him the mechanical principles of heaters and give them practical experiences.

He needs these, because by the time he will want a job, he has to compete against 700,000 others. The Philippine economy had to provide work for some five million entrants in the labor force from 1980 to 1987, or a rate of 700,000 a year, warned the World Bank in its latest report on the country.

Entitled "Selected Issues for the 1983-1987 Plan Period," the report said it mainly intends to show examples as to how to analyze Philippine economic issues, through the use of figures. Noting that the new five-year development plan generally spells out government strategies, the report bewailed a lack of data helpful for the country's economic planning.

Suggestions: It also gave suggestions about government policies, which if adopted would mean substantial changes in some sensitive areas. For instance, it wants government to trim down its investments, which were pursued aggressively the past years to propel the economy through a worldwide recession. The government should also collect more taxes and avoid giving direct or indirect subsidies in certain programs.

The World Bank provides the country loans that have terms of up to 15 years--longer than those obtained from private banks abroad--and with interest charges substantially lower than those of these banks. As the country pays an average of $2 million daily for interest on its foreign debts, the government may need to heed the World Bank's advice to obtain its continuous support. The World Bank has promised the Philippines some $600 million a year for 1982 and 1983, up from the previous ceiling of $450 million a year.

The report noted that the new five-year plan recognizes the need to provide for a growing population, but to a lesser extent than previous five-year plans. It said the country has the highest fertility rate and fastest growing labor force in Southeast Asia.

Job creation for an expected flood of workhands during the next five years thus poses the major challenge for the Philippines. Such an influx can stagnate wages and produce a more uneven distribution of wealth, the social implications which are feared by World Bank to result from the economy's failure to provide enough jobs. The report believes that wages have dropped in recent years and the growth disparities among the regions have been corrected only slightly. It noted that in some areas, for instance, an individual's average production of goods and service for consumer use was only about 33 percent of that in Metropolitan Manila.

Formidable: Yet this challenge to government can be formidable due to problems facing the Philippine economy.

Traditionally, the country has relied heavily on a few traditional export commodities such as sugar, coconut oil, or minerals to earn dollars for payment of imports and foreign debts. These exports also comprise a main source of income in the rural areas, so that any drop in their prices often means hardships to local business. The World Bank report noted that if factories fail to provide the needed jobs, as they presently do, the agricultural sector would have to absorb the additional workers; and farms are already overcrowded.

A prime target of government is therefore to develop industries, and steps were indeed taken to diversify into more manufactured goods for export. The World Bank exported more manufactured goods than it imported, if the purchases of equipment for energy generation were not counted.

But the government has also found several industries inefficient, and a main stumbling block to economic maturity which resulted from years of misdirected policies on industries. Reflecting this government view, the World Bank report said that the country's production in factories fared poorly compared to the amount of money poured into them, while many firms had overdue repayments on loans used for these factories.

New setup: The 1983-1987 development plan hopes to change the setup in agriculture and industries, the sectors favored to spearhead the economy's growth. The government's fundamental strategy in eradicating widespread poverty in the country is to expand the economy, so that the larger the wealth, the bigger the share of each who helped create it.

But the economy's growth has slowed down the past years. Its gross national product (GNP), or the total amount of production, grew by only 3.8 percent last year against 4.4 percent in 1980 and 6 percent in 1979. Part of the blame for this slowdown lies on a similar slack in foreign economies which buy products from the Philippines. With less prospects of selling their products abroad, Philippine firms reduced production, sending ripples through the other sectors.

Neither do firms have enough domestic buyers to allow production growth. Since the recession in other countries effected drops in the prices of Philippine commodities, people in rural areas had insufficient income to absorb the production of factories.

Moreover, such price drops weakened the country's overall ability to pay for imports. It earned less dollars for the same volume of exports, while prices of imports have swollen. The World Bank report noted that the buying power of the country's exports dropped by 29 percent during the past two years, or since the 1979 oil crisis hit the world in general. In 1979, $1 earned from abroad could buy the Philippines $1 worth of imports; that same $1 could pay for only $0.71 last year.

In effect, part of its production went abroad without a corresponding return, instead of the people consuming or saving the whole of it. The World Bank report estimated that the Philippine economy lost some 1.6 percentage points in its growth of 3.8 percent last year, due to the imbalance in prices of export and imports. In 1980, the loss was around 2.1 percentage points from a growth of 4.4 percent, compared to a gain of 0.3 percentage points from a 6 percent growth in 1979.

Thus the country's income, or the portion of production available for use by its people, grew by only 2.2 percent last year and by 2.3 percent in 1980. The national income of 6.3 percent in 1979 was higher than the total production, because the country actually gained from somewhat favorable prices of exports.

Tools: Most effective tools for government to accomplish these goals are its revenue generation and their uses, the World Bank said. Present level of government revenue is low because of insufficient tax collection, low incomes of government corporations which have received large portions of the budget, and poor loan repayment in government banks.

Under the present five-year plan, tax collections are projected to reach 14.6 percent of GNP this year. As of last year, however, collections amounted to only around 11 percent of GNP, which was attributed by the World Bank report to a shortfall in internal taxes. It said that the 1978-1982 plan underestimated the need for more tax measures, and those which were planned were implemented only recently. The method of tax collection also failed to improve as planned.

Because the government's funds cannot meet its required spending, it trimmed down on expenditures for maintenance of road and irrigation. It also reduced allocations to health services and education, and to salaries of its employees, the World Bank report said. Although the government concentrated more on investments, its insufficient funds resulted in delays in some projects.

Self-financing: Aside from raising its tax collections, the government should also try to develop its corporations towards self-financing ventures, the report said. Government funds were given to these corporations to augment their cash shortage, since their own operations can provide less than 10 percent of their funding needs, against 25 percent in Thailand, for instance. The government also extended guarantees to the foreign borrowings of such firms.

The World Bank report said that the more than 100 government corporations are, in effect, financed by the taxpayers who are on the average "poorer" than those using their services. Most government firms charge so low a price for their services that their viability is threatened without additional funding support from the government. Despite such low prices, many firms have also backlogs in their collections, but they nevertheless engaged in expansions, the report said.

The government's budget is further burdened by its support to government banks. The World Bank report noted that the Development Bank of the Philippines (DBP), the Philippine National Bank, and the Land Bank of the Philippines [PNB]--acounting for 36 percent of the total assets of the country's banking sector--have been "insufficiently selective" in their lendings and extension of guarantees. The DBP and Land Bank, as a result, are collecting only 33 percent of the due interest and loan payments. Although the PNB has fared better, its collections are still "unreasonably low," the report said.

Heavy investment: Aside from these, while the government has not yet completed its main functions such as construction of roads in the rural areas or water system, it has invested heavily in industries, real estate, and marketing of farm crops, the World Bank report noted, adding that although some of these ventures are highly justified, these areas previously belonged to the private business.

On real estate and housing business, the report noted that the government has to provide the credit system, because the private sector is reluctant to enter such a low yielding business. Banks generally incur higher costs in lendings for housing, while there are other more profitable loans.

Long-established government programs for housing, or the lendings of the social security system and the government service insurance system, have been extended to a "small number of beneficiaries," the report said. Thus, the need for new programs, such as the PAG-IBIG [expansion unknown] Fund and the Bagong Lipunan Improvement of Sites and Services (BLISS) Program.

The PAG-IBIG Fund program requires firms and government to each match the contribution of the employees. The World Bank report, however, noted that "exemptions have been given liberally."

While the government has raised the lending charges of state-owned banks to at least 18 percent, the PAG-IBIG program lends at concessional rates of 9 percent a year. The World Bank report said that because of the low lending rate, only around 5 percent of the PAG-IBIG Fund members can avail of loans, based on any imaginable computation.

Subsidized: The BLISS Program, on the other hand, has constructed houses mainly in Metropolitan Manila, although it is intended to provide shelter throughout the country, the report said. Besides, the program has given homes to "middle and upper income" groups, and at "highly subsidized prices," it said.

The report thus suggested that the government should look into the financing programs for housing, to align them with the goals in revenue generation and financial sector reforms. It added that the cost recovery and viability of the programs should be reviewed to allow more families to use such funds.

On the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran [KKK], the government's banner program to improve the income in rural and depressed areas in the metropolis, the report said that government policies should also be consistent with reforms in the financial sector. It said the timing of the program's introduction indicates that it is a government plan for countering the domestic economy's slowdown.

Noting that other credit programs for small enterprises already exist, the report said the KKK program should aim to raise the available credit for such ventures, instead of merely rechanneling the funds. It advised government to reserve the KKK program for poverty groups, and those with better financial positions should be asked to tap other programs which follow market rates.

The report nevertheless said the government appropriately divides its spendings among the different sectors. At present, the government spends about 3.4 percent of GNP on energy development, 2.5 percent on transportation, 2.1 percent on education, and 1.8 percent on agriculture. "Any further shift in favor of energy, industry, or housing would unreasonably compress agriculture, nonenergy infrastructure, education, and health," the report said.

The 1983-1987 development plan, in fact, hopes to even up the distribution of the economy's benefits through more public spending in education, health, housing, and rural infrastructure. To allow the economy to absorb the coming deluge of workers, it wants the various regions to develop equally.

Despite the constraints in realizing these goals, the World Bank report noted that the Philippines has a high level of education--a fact which makes its population trainable even for jobs abroad. The report also noted that the country has an "important non-quantifiable asset," that of a "vigorous entrepreneurial class."

The World Bank report on the Philippines' five-year economic development plan, entitled "Selected Issues for the 1983-1987 Plan Period," took note of the government's plan to provide impetus to the economy in two primary sectors: agriculture and industry. In the latter, the government's overall program envisions reforms on all fronts, from government policies on protection and incentives to its methods of dispersing factories to rural areas.

One of the major components of the plan for industries is to provide factories with locally manufactured machines and spare parts, and semiprocessed raw materials--needs that are hoped to be answered by the 11 major industrial projects.

The World Bank report noted however that nine of these projects involve the processing of raw materials for factories, and only "some" would process primary commodities available in the country. Such projects require huge investments and consume large volumes of energy, the World Bank said. Since the country expects a substantial swelling of the labor force in the coming years and buys energy from abroad, its advantage in the major projects which have to import raw materials is "not obvious," the report said.

Advantage: The Philippines, on the other hand, has a clear advantage over other countries when it comes to small and medium scale industries, since its labor is cheaper. The World Bank report said that such ventures need only 50 percent of the capital in large factories to hire one worker. If a large factory with, for instance, a P1-million investment can hire 10 workers, a small industry with the same capital can employ 20.

The report nevertheless agrees with the five-year plan's thinking that agriculture and industry will be the "key engines of growth" in the country. It is, however, "not highly confident" about the figures projected by the plan on the uses of production.

Firstly, it said, the Philippines cannot be sure of what would happen abroad during the next five years. The countries buying most of Philippine products for exports are themselves uncertain about the behavior of their economies.

Secondly, the changes launched by the Philippine Government in the economic setup can bear results only after several years, with no definite time frame; anything can happen to prevent the economy from reaping the benefits of those changes soonest.

The five-year development plan projects that the economy would grow by a yearly average of 6.5 percent during 1983-1987, with government expenditure rising by 6.5 percent, consumer spending by 5.5 percent, and investment by 7.1 percent. The growth in exports is foreseen at 8.2 percent a year, and imports at 5.5 percent.

The World Bank report said that the plan's projections on imports and exports are "reasonable." It believes that exports of commodities such as farm crops and metals can improve by 5 percent yearly, and manufactured goods by a higher 12 percent a year. Although the report foresees a higher rise in imports of around 7 percent a year, it believes that an expected drop in oil imports can help offset the difference.

Relief: Savings in oil payments, which have drained blood from the economy the past years, are expected to provide relief during the next years. Presently, the country imports oil for about 70 percent of its energy needs, and this is targeted to decline to around 40 percent by 1987. Imports of oil and its byproducts amounted to some $2.3 billion last year, or 29 percent of the $7.9 billion in total imports and 40 percent of the $5.7 billion in exports.

Veering away from the dependence on imported oil--a main strategy of the new five-year plan--will involve harnessing of domestic sources of energy, such as underground steam, coal, and nuclear power. These projects will also require huge investments, and according to government figures, importation of capital goods for energy has reached $301 million last year, about 16 percent of total imports of capital goods. This and the oil imports accounted for about 7 percent of last year's GNP, or total production, against 5.3 percent in 1978.

Capital imports for the energy program, and for those in industry and agriculture, can be funded completely with the help of foreign borrowings, since the country's savings can provide only a portion of the needed funds. Yet the five-year plan wants a slowdown in its foreign loan availment, with a target outstanding debt of 2.6 percent of GNP by 1987, from 6 percent this year. It hopes to prop up the country's savings, instead.

The World Bank report agreed that the country has to reduce foreign borrowings, because payments of interest charges alone would require more dollar earnings through exports. The country can surely use these earnings to buy goods abroad, with the various industrialization programs being launched.

Banks' support: Also, banks abroad would be willing to lend to the Philippines during the next years, if they believe that the government is taking steps to narrow the gap between its import payments and export earnings. Without the support from those banks, the country's development plans would be derailed, worsening living conditions.

The report, however, disagrees with the five-year plan's expectations that foreign debts can be reduced to 2.6 percent of GNP by 1987. It suggested that a more realistic goal would be 3.5 percent of GNP. The worry is that the country would miss its target growth in savings, as the experience during the past years shows.

The development plan for 1978-1982 targets an increase in savings of about 3 percent of GNP, or a level of around 25 percent of GNP in 1982. Since investments by 1982 are estimated at 28 percent of GNP, foreign loans can account for only 3 percent of GNP to meet the required investments.

Unfortunately, the country's savings fluctuated at about 22.5 percent of GNP during 1978-1982, which is the average level in countries with economic conditions similar to the Philippines. Investments ballooned, meanwhile, so that instead of a slowdown in foreign loan availment to 3 percent of GNP this year, the level may reach about 6 percent of GNP.

Check: To prevent a similar situation during the 1983-1987 plan, the World Bank report proposed that aside from bringing up savings, the country should also check its appetite for investments. This applies to both the private and government sectors.

The government has already introduced measures to raise savings in the private sector, through the floating of interest earnings of time and savings deposits, for instance. Banks are also being encouraged to provide loans payable over a longer period.

The main problem in the country's financial system is that people want to lend money for collection within the shortest possible period, while firms are generally better off if they repay loans after some years.

The World Bank report said that with the reforms in the private financial sector in place, the government should also look closer to the private sector investments which use these savings. It noted that while private investments in the Philippines have been higher than in other developing countries, no similar rise in production resulted. A deeper investigation into the appropriateness of the investments would require data about each sector and region, which the government lacks, the report said.

As for government's role in generating savings and investment, the report said that these are the "most critical issues" in achieving the goals of the five-year plan. It noted that the government has to assist the private sector in dispersing industries to rural areas, by collecting more taxes for investments in the depressed regions. The five-year plan itself aims to bring about a "more equitable distribution of income," and provide social services such as health care and education.

Tools: Most effective tools for government to accomplish these goals are its revenue generation and their uses, the World Bank said. Present level of government revenue is low because of insufficient tax collection, low incomes of government corporations which have received large portions of the budget, and poor loan repayment in government banks.

Under the present five-year plan, tax collections are projected to reach 14.6 percent of GNP this year. As of last year, however, collections amounted to only around 11 percent of GNP, which was attributed by the World Bank report to a shortfall in internal taxes. It said that the 1978-1982 plan underestimated the need for more tax measures, and those which were planned were implemented only recently. The method of tax collection also failed to improve as planned.

Because the government's funds cannot meet its required spending, it trimmed down on expenditures for maintenance of road and irrigation. It also reduced allocations to health services and education, and to salaries of its employees, the World Bank report said. Although the government concentrated more on investments, its insufficient funds resulted in delays in some projects.

Self-financing: Aside from raising its tax collections, the government should also try to develop its corporations towards self-financing ventures, the report said. Government funds were given to these corporations to augment their cash shortage, since their own operations can provide less than 10 percent of their funding needs, against 25 percent in Thailand, for instance.

The government also extended guarantees to the foreign borrowings of such firms.

The World Bank report said that the more than 100 government corporations are, in effect, financed by the taxpayers who are on the average "poorer" than those using their services. Most government firms charge so low a price for their services that their viability is threatened without additional funding support from the government. Despite such low prices, many firms have also backlogs in their collections, but they nevertheless engaged in expansions, the report said.

The government's budget is further burdened by its support to government banks. The World Bank report noted that the Development Bank of the Philippines (DBP), the Philippine National Bank, and the Land Bank of the Philippines [PNB]--accounting for 36 percent of the total assets of the country's banking sector--have been "insufficiently selective" in their lendings and extension of guarantees. The World Bank reported that because of the low lending rate, only around 5 percent of the PAG-IBIG fund members can avail of loans, based on any imaginable computation.

Subsidized: The BLISS program, on the other hand, has constructed houses mainly in Metropolitan Manila, although it is intended to provide shelter throughout the country, the report said. 'BUSINESS DAY' LOOKS AT NATIONAL BUDGET

[Feature by reporter Gerry N. Zaragoza: "The Budget for 1982"]

[Text] The government will continue to pursue the elusive goal of improving the "quality of life" of every Filipino in the coming year. If economic growth were used as a yardstick for measuring how far this "quality of life" goal has been achieved, then it can be said that in recent years the country reached about half of its target. While the gross national product increase had been targeted at 7.7 percent in 1980 and 8 percent in 1981, official figures show that GNP inched up by only 4.4 percent in 1980 and 3.8 percent in 1981.

Despite such low growth records the government is unfazed, saying that slow growth is shared by most developing countries as a result of the economic slowdown worldwide and the high cost of borrowing to finance the much-awauted economic turnaround.

The 1983 budget of the national government which amounts to P65 billion, has been allotted with a view to the betterment of the life of every Filipino. In the words of President Marcos, this means "providing him with an ever enlarging basket of goods and services."

Five-Year Plan: The budget year 1983 happens to coincide with the first year of the implementation of the new five-year Philippine development plan, during which the government has set an annual target growth rate of 6.8 percent. Although next year's budget is 8.8 percent higher than this year's, the government has conceded it is below "the threshold minimum needed to achieve the goals and target set in our development plan." However, the government added, the country has to "make do with what we have."

What can the 1983 budget then mean to every Filipino?

Most of the government's efforts next year will be directed toward increasing food production and developing the industrial sector. At the same time, it also intends to invest a huge amount for developing human resources.

The social services sector in fact will get the lion's share of next year's budget at 32 percent of P20.9 billion. This investment would go to such services as education, health, nutrition, family planning and housing.

Training: Although Filipinos are already one of the most literate among the people in the developing countries, with 89 percent of the population able to read and write, next year's government program will nclude provisions for a broad general education and training of people who will man the factories.

For training of workers who will fill industries' manpower needs, the government will spend some P58.5 million. The training program is expected to help reduce the unemployment rate, which the Ministry of Labor and Employment places at 5 percent throughout the country and 12 percent in Metro Manila.

Beyond preparing workers for jobs, the effort to shelter more Filipinos in low-cost homes will be intensified. Next year's program includes the construction of 200,000 housing units for low-income and middle-income families. This entails an allocation of P770 million to the National Housing Authority and the Human Settlements Development Corp., which are tasked to carry out the shelter project.

Population: Government's concern also extends to the ballooning population of the country. In recent years, the population has been increasing at 2.6 percent annually, a rate that worries government economic planners since the additional number of people every year reduces the country's per capita economic gains. To address the problem, the government has set a target of 2.4 percent population growth for next year which it hopes to attain through its population control programs.

The government pins its hopes on the development of the economic sector, particularly in agriculture and industry. It is also one area where the private sector could take an active part, particularly in food production and in the establishment of small and medium scale industries.

This sense of priority has prompted the government to allot 26 percent of the budget or P17.2 billion to economic services.

The government strategy is to stir up "dormant" entrepreneurial talents of Filipinos so they will take part in the national livelihood program Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran [KKK]. As envisioned by the government, KKK would not only provide employment for more Filipinos, but would also produce goods for both local and world markets.

The government plans to spend P645 million to set up prototype projects, including those in agroforestry, agro-fishing, livestock and cottage enterprises. If pursued as planned, the KKK program could have a far reaching effect on many Filipinos considering that the government wants the involvement of the Barangays in the countryside.

Industries: The same vigor would be applied in the promotion of small and medium scale industries (SMSI's), which would not only produce goods, but also provide employment to Filipinos.

Businessmen and entrepreneurs would be encouraged to go into export-oriented ventures, so as to earn more dollars and close the widening gap between the country's exports and imports.

To spur vigorous activity from SMSI's, credit facilities will be expanded. About P10 million has been allocated to the National Cottage Industries Development Authority (NACIDA) for loans to entrepreneurs. Such credit programs as the industrial guarantee loan fund, the small and medium scale industries lending program, the export guarantee fund and the rediscounting window of the Central Bank would also make available the necessary funding.

The expected growth in the smaller industries would be balanced by the pursuit of the major industrial project (MIP's). The state-owned National Development Co. will get an additional capital of P800 million to help it carry out such projects as the copper smelter, phosphate fertilizer plant, engineering facility and integrated steel mill.

MIP's are linked to the smaller industries in that the former are expected to provide cheap raw materials to the latter. This would reduce importation of some raw materials, thus allowing smaller industries to compete in the world markets.

Food production: Along with industry, food production--a sector in which the country has had impressive strides--would still be high on the priority list for next year. The government has recently announced a bumper harvest in rice, and now wants to extend this self-sufficiency to corn, feedgrains and livestock in the next five years. Such a target would involve an allocation of some P4.5 billion for next year, P1 billion higher than in this year's budget.

Part of the plan for the food production sector is to trim production costs of some crops, including sugar and grains, so as to increase the income of planters. Reducing production cost will involve the use of low-cost fertilizers such as dolomite and azolla.

The private sector could join the government's effort in increasing food production by setting up their own projects. A number of economists, including those from the Center of Research and Communication, have predicted that food production would be one of the most profitable areas for investment not only in the Philippines but in the Asia-Pacific region in the next two decades. These economists premised their prediction on the expected rise in incomes resulting from the slowdown in population growth.

Outside factors: Whether or not the growth target set by the government would be attained will depend largely on outside factors. Industrialized countries' economies have been in a slump for nearly three years, resulting in low demand for Philippine exports, including coconut oil and coconut products, copper concentrates and sugar. The low demand has naturally depressed the world prices of these exports.

Another heavy burden on the country's economy is the high interest rates it is paying for the funds it borrows. The government now plans to limit foreign borrowings next year to only P5.5 billion, or less than half of the country's borrowings target for this year.

As long as the depressed external economic conditions persist, the country would be pursuing an elusive growth rate needed to significantly improve the quality of life of every Filipino. Prime Minister Cesar Virata however, aired firm hopes that the economy "will be better" next year.

'BUSINESS DAY' LOOKS AT PHILIPPINE UNEMPLOYMENT

HK010318 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 31 Aug 82 pp 17, 23

[Feature by reporter Wong Chin Wah: "Outlook for Unemployment Bleak"]

[Text] The latest official figures belie what has been described by one government official as an "alarming" unemployment situation. However, recent developments, including last week's interministerial conference on employment--said to be an uncommon event--and announcements of piling lay-offs, all indicate that there's little comfort to be had from the National Census and Statistics Office (NCSO) pronouncement that unemployment in the Philippines was only 5.2 percent in 1981.

"Unemployment has always been serious," says Labor Minister Blas F. Ople. "But during a period of recession, it becomes even more serious."

Just how serious the government perceives the problem to be may be gauged, in part, from frenzied activities such as the initiation of so-called job-generating projects.

But, for all the activity, unemployment may turn out to be part of an even larger problem, as chronic underemployment (said to have affected 19 percent of the labor force in 1980) is not expected to get much better.

Employment Performance

The government reports that the unemployment rate has been held stable for the last five years. The NCSO says, for instance, that the number of unemployed, defined as those who are reported as looking for work on a full-time basis as well as those wanting full-time work but not seeking it in the belief that no work is available, was 5.2 percent of a total labor force of 15 million.

By 1980. the figure was only .3 percent higher--5.4 percent of a larger labor force of 17.6 million.

Fourth quarter figures for 1980 and 1981, however, show an increase in unemployment, from 4.3 percent to 5.2 percent.

During the same period, gross national product (GNP) rose from P77.8 billion in 1977 (at constant 1972 prices) to P96.07 billion in 1981--or an average annual growth rate of 5.4 percent.

So far, GNP growth has been able to handle the 4.5 percent average annual increase in the labor force. However, while the growth of the labor force is not seen to be slowing down significantly, GNP growth has been tapering off in the last few years. From a modest 5.1 percent growth rate in 1979-80, GNP growth dropped to only 3.7 percent in 1980-81, much lower than the 6.0 percent growth projected by the National Economic Development Authority (NEDA).

Given that worldwide recession is not expected to bottom out this year, NEDA may again have to scale down its projections for a 5.8 percent GNP growth rate in 1982.

All this means the economy may not be able to absorb an increasing labor force. A MOLE [Ministry of Labor and Employment] study entitled "Philippine Employment Perspectives in the 80's" notes that for the economy to absorb incoming workers from 1980 to 1985, it has to generate at least 3.2 million jobs plus jobs for those already unemployed.

The same study observes that to maintain a "tolerable" unemployment rate of about 4 percent, net domestic product (NDP) has to grow at an estimated annual rate of about 8 percent during the decade. Such a high growth rate has not been achieved; nor is it likely to be achieved in the next few years.

There is evidence, however, that the harsh effects of recession on employment may be softening this year. Less lay-offs were reported in the first semester of 1982 than the same period last year. This January to June, 30,500 workers were reported to have lost their jobs due to shutdowns and retrenchment. Another 13,300 suffered shortened work hours.

During the same period last year, 46,800 workers were laid off, and 16,000 employees had their work hours reduced.

The number of lay-offs could have been considerably higher, though. An official who preferred not to be identified, says that in the first quarter of 1982 alone, almost 20,000 workers in the mining industry would have been laid off had the government not stepped in to support copper prices.

Metro Manila

There is some disagreement as to the role Metro Manila plays in all this. The NCSO says the national capital region does not significantly affect overall employment, since it accounts for only a small percentage of the national employed work-force (13 percent in 1979).

Other sources, however, point out that Metro Manila is a valid indicator because it absorbs as much as 70 percent to 80 percent of total employment in the industrial sector.

Trends in the industrial or "formal" sector (manufacturing, mining, construction, etc.), says Arturo Sodusta, chief of the labor market information division of MOLE, not only indicate the overall employment situation, but also affect the so-called non-formal sector (agriculture, fishing, etc.).

Unemployment in Metro Manila has consistently been higher than the national average. In third quarter 1980, when the national average rate of unemployment was 5.4 percent, [words indistinct] rate stood at a high 14.6 percent.

In the fourth quarter 1981, unemployment in the national capital region was 12.9 percent--7.7 percentage points higher than the national average.

Like the national average, however, Metro Manila's unemployment rate rose in the last quarter of 1981, as compared to the same period in the previous year. From 7.4 percent in 1980, the unemployment rate of Metro Manila rose to 12.9 percent last year.

Moreover, there are, it seems, additional reasons for concern--at least as far as the industrial sector is concerned.

Accession and separation rates, used by MOLE to determine the ratio of hirings to firings in 12 selected industries in Metro Manila, indicate that more people are being laid off than are being hired.

In the first quarter this year, for every four out of 100 persons hired, five were laid off. The figures for the second quarter are a bit more encouraging, but the difference is still negative--that is, there are still more separations than hirings.

"The overall picture for employment is bleak," Sodusta says. "Employment opportunities here are going down, and that separation has outpaced accession is [as published] a signal of an impending imbalance."

Sodusta attributes the poor employment trend in the industrial sector to worldwide recession. Not only the Philippine labor market is suffering, he said. Dante Santos, president of PHILACOR, agrees. He says, "In fairness to our country, all countries are suffering from high unemployment."

Statistics from the LMID [expansion unknown] office seem to bear this out. From 1977 to 1980, Malaysia and Thailand reported the highest unemployment rates among ASEAN (Association of Southeast Asian Nations) countries. Together with the Philippines, the LMID reports, these two countries posted unemployment rates beyond 5 percent in 1980. It should be noted, however, that the concepts of unemployment rates, as such, are not totally comparable.

Underemployment

A more meaningful question to ask, then, is that of those who are considered "employed"--how many are actually utilized to their fullest capacity? The answer is not too encouraging.

A paper released by MOLE reads: "A growing number of our employed workforce has worked less number of days, earned a very small amount, and produced less from what is normally expected of them. In short, many of them are underutilized to a level amost equivalent to joblessness.'

MOLE cited NCSO statistics for 1977, which showed that a little more than half of the employed workforce worked less than 70 days during a given reporting quarter. This means, the paper explains, that for every two employed workers, one is fully utilized in terms of days worked and the other underutilized.

In 1977, 630,000 worked less than 15 days; 1.2 million, 15 to 29 days; 1.3 million, 30 to 44 days; 1.7 million, 45-59 days; and 2.5 million, 60 to 90 days. The bulk of those underemployed was concentrated in agriculture, which accounted for 4.8 million workers, or 65 percent of the underemployed.

"Underemployment is our biggest problem," Sedusta says. "Workers are not fully utilized in the number of hours they work, in the income earned (and therefore, contribution to GNP), and in the matching of training to jobs."

Rosa Linda P. Tidalgo, associate professor, and Emmanuel F. Esguerra, lecturer, both from the UP [University of the Philippines] School of Economics analyzed Philippine employment during the last decade, and found that underemployment had taken a turn for the worse in the second half of the '70's.

Tidalgo and Esguerra note that visible underemployment, defined as those working less than full-time (based on a 40-hour week) and wanting additional work, rose from an annual average of 5.6 percent of the labor force from 1971-76 to 10.7 percent in 1976-78. In real terms, this meant that on average, 804,000 workers a year were visibly underemployed during the first five years of the '70's. From 1976-78, the average was a higher 1,667 million a year.

In the meantime, invisible underemployment, defined as those working at least full-time but still wanting additional work, also grew, from a yearly average of 5.8 percent of the labor force in 1971-76, to 8.2 percent in 1976-78. This meant 839,000 invisibly underemployed workers a year in 1971-76, and 1,282 million a year in 1976-78.

Total underemployment (visible plus invisible underemployment) rose from 11.4 percent of the labor force a year in 1971-76, to 18.9 percent annually in 1976-78. This meant a total underemployment yearly average of 1,643 million from 1971-76, and 2.95 million annual average in 1976-78.

Considering the labor force was smaller during the first half of the decade, write Tidalgo and Esguerra, the higher underemployment rates for the second half definitely indicate a worse state of underemployment.

They include: "If we adjust our count of labor underutilization to include the unemployed, the underemployed and the potential labor force members (i.e. students, housewives, people not counted in the labor force), then these would average 5.4 million annually during the first period (of the '70's) and 6.7 million annually in the second period, or 31.7 percent (of the labor force) and 36.4 percent respectively. These estimates are much higher and spell a more serious underutilization problem in the 1970's than the count of unemployment of 5 percent...."

Prospects

The outlook for Philippine employment during the early part of this decade doesn't appear too bright. As the growth of the labor force accelerates, the country's economy will have to strain against recessionary pressures for even higher rates of growth.

Much depends on the effectiveness of government policies toward encouraging job creation.

Also, the overseas labor market, now used as a stopgap measure against local unemployment, could be further developed. There are limits, of course, to this option. Conditions in overseas labor markets, are not under the control of Philippine planners.

Perhaps because of this, government officials are becoming more and more aware that any longterm programs for employment have to be anchored onto a stable local economy.

FIFTY ONE NPA SUSPECTS KILLED IN NEGROS OCCIDENTAL

OW271429 Hong Kong AFP in English 1346 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Manila, 27 Aug (AFP)--At least 51 suspected communist rebels were killed and 39 others were captured by military authorities in a campaign early this month in Negros Occidental Province in central Philippines, the Philippines News Agency (PNA) said today.

PNA said the provincial constabulary (national guard) commander, Col Francisco Agudon told a conference of government officials in Bacolod City, that nine policemen were killed during encounters with the suspected members of the New People's Army (NPA).

The NPA is the military arm of the communist party of the Philippines.

The PNA report said the suspected NPA members were killed in six different townships in Negros Occidental Province.

Bacolod City is some 480 kilometers (300 milies) southeast of Manila.

MILITARY, POLICE ON FULL ALERT IN PHILIPPINES

OW011413 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 1 Sep 82

[Text] The full alert status of military and police units is now on. With the first day of September, target kick-off month of terror plotters, military and police authorities pressed on with earlier safety measures to thwart any bid by subversives to sow terror and violence. The day went on without any incident as security tightened up at likely targets of bombings, arson and sabotage at government buildings and public utilities. Care was taken to conceal security elements so as not to cause any alarm.

Earlier, the country's more than 1 million reservists were placed on standby alert by the Philippine Army. Another step taken was the setting up of mobile checkpoints in Metro Manila in a bid to stop any movement of subversives as well as criminal elements.

In Battaan, the military increased the troops guarding the nuclear plant, the two explosive plants, and the export processing zone. These, as well as major hotels, were eyed as targets by subversives.

ECDC COORDINATING COMMITTEE MEETS IN MANILA

OW281135 Tokyo KYODO in English 1117 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] Manila, 28 Aug (KYODO)--Proposals for a Global System of Trade Preferences (GSTP) to improve trade among developing countries and a food security reserve scheme were the major achievements of a meeting of senior Third World officials that ended here Saturday.

The first meeting of the Economic Cooperation Among Countries (ECDC) Coordinating Committee was attended by 150 delegates from 44 of the 122 member countries of the "Group of 77," which is trying to improve the position of its members in trade relations with the industrial countries.

"The GSTP is a system of trade liberalization that will cover the trading of food, capital goods, and raw materials among developing countries," said Philippine Budget Minister Manuel Alba, conference chairman.

A proposal for a "south-south" bank to assist developing countries got no support from potential contributors among ECDC members, Alba said.

Ministers of member countries are due to meet in New York next month to discuss the Manila proposals, which include the setting up of a headquarters for the ECDC Common Fund possibly in Manila, developing new and renewable sources of energy, and trading in capital goods among developing countries.

BILATERAL SHIPPING AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH GDR

Colombo SUN in English 20 Aug 82 p 1

[Article by Jennifer Henricus]

[Text] Sri Lanka has reached accord with the German Democratic Republic for a bilateral shipping agreement.

This agreement, the result of protracted negotiations entails a fifty-fifty cargo sharing arrangement, 'SUN' realiably learns.

Previously talks between Sri Lanka and the G.D.R. were deadlocked after the two countries were unable to reach understanding to share cargo on an equal basis.

Trade and Shipping Minister Lalith Athulathmudali will shortly sign the agreement on behalf of Sri Lanka.

Mr Athulathmudali told 'SUN' that the draft agreement on the lines of the bilateral agreement with Russia, will be signed next month.

Negotiations for this bilaterial agreement began in June 1981 and a delegation visited East Berlin to present Sri Lanka's case. The original agreement proposed by the GDR omitted several key factors favourable to Sri Lanka chief among them being the cargo sharing basis. They refused to allocate the cargo on a fifty-fifty basis and wanted instead a 40: 40: 20 allocation which Sri Lanka did not agree to.

The GDR maintained that they could not agree to Sri Lanka's proposal as it had signed a UN convention that prohibited such agreement. However Sri Lanka pointed out that in the convention, bilateral agreements were not included and that Sri Lanka had entered into such agreements with some other countries.

TRINCOMOLYEE TO BECOME CONTAINER PORT

Colombo SUN in English 20 Aug 82 p 1

[Article by Chris Dharmakirti]

[Text] The strategic port of Trincomalee will soon be transformed into a container port, Sri Lanka Ports Authority Chairman, Wimal Amarasekera said yesterday.

Feasibility studies for this purpose are now under way and the project will be the Authority's third phase in the development of container facilities, he said.

The first phase, the setting up of a modern transhipment terminal in Colombo, has already got under way. The port of Galle too was being developed. However, in view of their limitations, it has become necessary to develop Trincomalee, he said.

Mr. Amarasekera said the award of the billion rupee tender for the construction of a modern terminal in Colombo will be made this month. Till such time this facility is available, the SLPA has rented a Gantry crane which will be put into operation from this month.

This, he told "SUN" in an interview, has helped the SLPA to earn foreign exchange immediately. This is particuarly in view of a decision by a prestigious container liner service to shift its regional headquarters from India to Sri Lanka. From next month, the Colombo port will handle 1,000 containers for them per month. The installation of two additional Gantry cranes next year will increase this capacity to a further two thousand containers, he said.

Sri Lanka has been losing revenue in the past in transhipment operations since it did not have Gantry cranes. The modern cargo vessels, unlike the old ones, do not have cranes on board. Hence, they visit ports which have Gantry crane facilities, he said.

THIRD ARMY CHIEF DISCUSSES CPT, POLITICAL FUTURE

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 18-24 Jul 82 pp 28, 29

[Interview with Lieutenant General Phrom Phiunuan, the commanding general of the Third Army Area and a senator: "I Hope That I Can Continue In My Position As Commanding General; date and place not specified]

[Text] Lieutenant General Phrom Phiunuan, the commanding general of the Third Army Area, age 58, graduated from the Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy, Army Cadet Academy Class 1. An infantryman, he saw much combat in the Korean and Vietnam wars. Concerning his past postions, he was provincial army commander in Chiang Mai, deputy commander of the 4th Division and commander of the 4th Division before becoming the commanding general of the Third Army Area. He will retire from government service in 1983. As commanding general of the Third Army Area, Lieutenant General Phrom Phiunuan is responsible fo the entire northern area, particularly the "red zone" areas in such important provinces as Chiang Rai, Phayao, Nan, Phetchabun and Phitsanulok. He has stipulated new strategies and methods in communist suppression. Instead of emphasing only the military aspect, his new strategy calls for politics to lead the military. That is, politics instills ideals and helps the people to make a living. As for those areas that are under the contorl of the communist terrorists, when such areas are seized, development activities are quickly carried out. Recently, the Third Army Area and the 1st Cavalry Division successfully carried out joint communist suppression operations. They were able to seize many secure bases and large camps of the terrorists, such as those in the Doi Yao, Doi Pha Mon and Doi Pha Chi areas. Thus, the main arteries of the communist terrorists were destroyed since the Voice of the People of Thailand Radio and the large bases in Zone 7 were destroyed. Besides this, the capture of the large communist terrorist camps in the Phu Mieng, Phu Khat and Phu Hin Rong Kla zones weakened the forces of the communist terrorists and forced them to limit their guerrilla operations. SU ANAKHOT had a chance to interview Lieutenant General Phrom briefly, as time permitted, about some of the results that have been achieved and to get his views about the country and his personal life.

SU ANAKHOT: Why hasn't the Third Army Area ever shown off the results achieved in suppressing the communist terroirsts in the northern region, particularly the capture and destruction of CPT Zone 7, and publicly praised those who have done outstanding things? Everyone recognizes the achievements.

Phrom: Every soldier in the Third Army Area and the Forward 1st Cavalry Division are well aware of their duties. Even though we have accomplished things beneficial to the security of the nation, we know that it is not necessary to show off the results. The people know what has been done. We believe that action is better than words. The good results that have been scored are major accomplishments of the RTA and not me alone. In seizing the zones of the communist party, every soldier in the Third Army Area, the cavalry division, the air force, the prop aircraft wing and the thahan phran units cooperated well and were conscious of their duties as soldiers. I am not a clever person and I do not have any [special] talents.

[Question] In your view, when we seize all the large camps and destroy the bases of the CPT, will the communist terrorists be defeated?

[Answer] Just destroying all their bases does not mean that the terroirsts will have been defeated. But we will not let them grow in power again. In some places, we captured the camps and destroyed the bases, but the terrorists fled. What can we do to get them to surrender their weapons to us? Getting them to surrender and have a change of heart is the main problem. We must implement a political policy, not just a military policy. Concerning carrying out the political policy, the soldiers in the Third Army Area, including those in the 1st Cavalry Division, are very adept. For example, in carrying out political activities, we have been able to get many hill tribesmen to surrender their weapons to us. In some places, we have not had to pursue them; they have come to us of their own accord. And they have led soldiers to where weapons have been hidden. This is one reason why the Third Army Area, the cavalry division and the infantry units have scored achievements and collected many weapons surrendered by the terrorists.

[Question] Why have you been unwilling to grant interviews to the mass media even though the mass media wants to know about the achievements of the Third Army Area and future policy directions in terrorist suppression activities?

[Answer] I am the commanding general and the person who stipulates the policies. Providing information or announcing the results of the activities should be the responsibility of the deputy commanding general, specifically, Major General Prayat Rotphothithong. This deputy commanding general will become the next commanding general. I have served as the commanding general and feel that this is a high position. Next year I will retire. Thus, I have entrusted the tasks to the deputy commanding general. I have entrusted him with both suppression and development tasks. My deputy commander is an excellent man. He speaks well and is good at public relations. He has scored many achievements.

[Question] Does this mean that Major General Prayat Rotphothithong will succeed you as commanding general after you retire?

[Answer] I hope that he will become the next commanding general. Because I have served as commanding general, I have a sense of accomplishment. I feel that I should help him become the next commanding general.

[Question] As a senator, do you think that the country's administration can become democratic?

[Answer] I think that the trend is for the country to become socialist in a free democracy. It will be very difficult to have a perfect democracy if we continue to have such turmoil as at present.

[Question] Why do soldiers have to interfere in politics?

[Answer] Soldiers do not want to interfere in politics. But politics interfers with the military. I feel that soldiers are citizens too. They have ideas too. Only a few soldiers are involved in politics. Even though I am a senator, I feel that my [military] duties are important. Thus, I have little chance to participate in meetings of parliament. Most of my work is with the army.

[Question] Concerning those who have left the jungle and surrendered to officials and who have been released to live freely, if they want to engage in politics, or fight politically, by establishing a communist party, what is your view on this?

[Answer] I do not think that we can permit this because the Communist Activities Control Law has not been revised. We cannot permit a Communist Party of Thailand. But if they want to fight in a parliamentary way by running for election in the name of some other party, I would gladly welcome this. We can fight in a proper way and allow the people to decide. But they cannot enter in a communist party system. We definitely cannot allow this.

[Question] After you retire, will you play politics? That is, will you stand as a candidate for MP?

[Answer] I will have a farm. As for playing politics, I cannot give you an answer yet. It depends on the situation. But I would rather rest.

APRIL 81 COUP LEADER REVEALS POLICY STANDS

Bangkok SIAM MAI in Thai 31 Jul 82 pp 27-31

[Article: "Notes On the 1-3 April Coup"]

[Excerpt] Mr Bunchana Atthakon is a person whom the 1 April Revolutionary Council was going to appoint as prime minister if the coup had succeeded. The "Notes on the 1-3 April 1981 Coup and Me" of Mr Bunchana Atthakon are his personal notes concerning this national event. They have been printed and disseminated in the name of the Professor Bunchana Atthakon Foundation. Some of the notes concern the conversations that Mr Bunchana had with high-ranking people such as General Kriangsak Chamanan, General Prem Tinsulanon, Air Chief Marshal Harin Hongsakun and Colonel Manun Rupkhachon. They are of interest and should be given attention. Thus, SIAM MAI is presenting them for readers.

Thoughts Of a Young Soldier

They arranged for me to meet with Colonel Manun Rupkhachon at his home in Bang Su. There was a major general in uniform and three or four others in civilian dress there.

As for the conversation that day, we talked for almost 2 hours, from 1000 hours until noon. The views of Manun can be summarized as follows:

On politics: He feels that if an English or American type of democracy is to be used, it will take a long time to implement. Thus, he feels that a compromise method should be used in which the government has full administrative power, with parliament responsible for legislative matters only. MPs will not have the right to serve as ministers. This will keep MPs from fighting each other to become ministers. This point is the same as during the period of Field Marshal Sarit and Field Marshal Thanon from 1959 to 1971. Thus, the constitution will have to be revised. The government will gradually give more power to the people so that they can govern themselves more and more.

On economics: He feels that foreigners or those of foreign extraction have too great a monoply on trading, banking and industry. He feels that there should be changes so that Thais, or the government, can play a greater role. Serious attention should be given to the laborers, farmers and poor people. [He feels that] improving income distribution should be discussed so that these people receive an adequate and higher income.

The tax system should be revised. Taxes collected with the aim of providing income should be collected strictly. Taxes collected to serve as a tool to control the actions of certain people and taxes collected to serve as a tool in economic development should be collected strictly.

Concerning economic administration, the government should not have placed total confidence in just a single group of businessmen since these businessmen have experience in economic administration only from the standpoint of private [businessmen]. When they began administering the national economy, they gave little, or even no, attention to the interests of the public in general. Since they were merchants before, they are selfish and think only of making profits for themselves and the stockholders.

On military and civilian administration: He feels that there is widespread and large-scale corruption in bureaucratic circles.Even in purchasing weapons for the military, high-ranking officers make great personal profits. In civilian circles, hundreds of millions [of baht] in bribes have been paid both directly and indirectly. This should be suppressed and people should be punished harshly.

Concerning military and civilian officials, there are too many who are "dead wood." There are 500 generals on active duty even though the RTA is not very large. Most of these officers are all older men over the age of 55. They have very little physical strength with which to fight an emeny. If we really had to fight Vietnam, we would be at a great disadvantage. Thus, [he feels that] a military discharge system should be implemented quickly in order to improve the army and make it more efficient. The same is true for civilians. [He feels that] the retirement age should be lowered from 60 to 55, which would be like that in other countries in this region, which is a tropical zone.

On improving the structure of various institutions: He feels that the structure of the government institutions such as the ministries, bureaus and departments should be improved quickly and that the structure of the economic, political and social institutions should be changed so that they all have equal status. This would be a system that would enable the country to make rapid progress.

According to the abridged notes presented above, after listening to him, I had to admit that his views were very much in line with my own and that [if implemented] they would help develop the country and help it make rapid progress. There was no feeling at all that these people intended to destroy the system of democracy with the king at the head. I thus said "amen" to the views of these people and said that, if they wanted me to offer any ideas in building the nation, I would be glad to do so by fulfilling my duty as a professor.

General Kriangsak

Mr Kriangsak invited me to go see him, with the invitation extended by Mr Wong Phonnikon, on the morning of 16 August 1981. I went and visited him at his home in Bangkhen from 2035 to 2235 hours that day. The important matters discussed by General Kriangsak can be summarized as follows:

1. The monarchy: General Kriansak feels that the monarchy must always be preserved as a symbol of Thailand. Some people have intimated that General Kriangsak is not really loyal to the monarchy even though he has always been loyal to the monarchy.

2. Parliament: General Kriangsak does not feel that the government will dare dissolve parliament.Dissolving parliament would greatly harm the government of General Prem. Even if parliament is dissolved, General Kriangsak will run for election and will certainly be re-elected.

3. The government of General Prem Tinsulanon: General Kriangsak feels that in military circles, including soldiers on active duty and those who are no longer on active duty, Prime Minister Prem is no longer respected. The government has not solved the problems to the satisfaction of the people. General Kriangsak is certain that the Prem government is in a very precarious position and that General Kriangsak will take over sooner or later. If the take over comes sooner, it would have to be accomplished by violent means and he does not want to use such means. Using gentle means to effect the take over is better.

4. Military circles: General Kriangsak feels that the military is still very divided and that it is essential to bring about solidarity. He said that when he takes administrative control, he will be able to bring this about because he once served as an instructor at the Armed Forces Staff College. He even taught those in the class of General Thep Kranloet, a ministry undersecretary.

Few soldiers, either among those on active duty or among those who have been discharged, have any respect for General Prem. But General Kriangsak can still get along with all factions.

5. The young turk group: General Kriangsak feels that this group still has great influence and that people must continue to watch them.

6. Banking circles: General Kriangsak said that the nation's economic problems depend very much on the banks and, therefore, people should continue to take an interest in them.

7. Diplomatic circles: General Kriangsak said that he still has good contacts in foreign circles. Concerning Japan in particular, he is still in contact with former prime ministers such as Fukuda and Miki.

General Kriangsak said that former U.S. ambassador Abramowitz, who has now been transferred, did not like him at all toward the end. But General Kriangsak still has very good relations with other ambassadors, such as the Soviet, Chinese and Japanese ambassadors.

General Prem, the Prime Minister

After attending a conference at the National Defense College on 19 August 1981, at noon, I had lunch with and talked with the prime minister. We talked about several matters, among which were the following:

1. The price of gas purchased form the Union Oil Company, which is drilling in the Gulf of Thailand, is too high. General Prem said that the price paid by the Thai government is too high.We were tricked by the company. He does not want to blame or punish General Kriangsak Chamanan, the prime minister at that time, since this was the first time and Thailand had very little knowledge about such matters. Later on, another company, Texas Pacific, began drilling and asked the Prem government to purchase gas at the same price. But the government would not agree to this, saying that we were tricked by the other company once before and that the new company would have to sell to us at a much lower price.

2. Solving the economic problems by relying on the production of gas and oil discovered in Thailand: General Prem said that we have discovered gas in several places. And it is hoped that oil will be discovered in Khon Kaen and other provinces in the northeast and in the Chao Phraya river basin. Within another 2 years, Thailand's economy will be much better. I remarked that it was noteworthy that England had discovered much oil in the North Sea and that it had exported large quantities during each of the past 2 years. But its economic situation is still very bad. Thus, Dr Sanah Unakun, the secretary-general of the Economic Development Council, should make a serious study of this. General Prem agreed that a study should be made. But Phot Sarasin, who was with us, said that the reason that England cannot solve its economic problems is that the English are lazy. I wanted to dispute this but did not because he is a high-ranking person. He has not followed events in England in detail. He probably spoke like that because he wanted to belittle my ideas.

3. On his trip to New Zealand, Australia and the United States: Prime Minister Prem said that he will visit New Zealand and Australia at the end of August. The purpose of his visit is to expand trade and so on. As for his trip to the United States, he will go in October in order to speak at the United Nations as Thailand's representative. He will be the first prime minister to address the United Nations in New York. Following that, he will meet with U.S. officials in Washington.

Note: Concerning his visit to the United States, there have been rumors that the United States does not want to receive General Prem as a guest of the government and so he must go as an ordinary tourist and stay at a hotel. When this rumor became widespread, a government statement was issued on 28 August 1981. It said that Prime Minister Prem would stay at Blair House as a guest of the U.S. government just as Field Marshal Thanom and General Kriangsak had done.

4. Development of the poor rural areas: General Prem said that it is his government's intention to develop the poverty-stricken localities in the rural areas. To this end, it has alloted a mid-year budget of 622 million baht. This money was "squeezed" from the "original budget" of 3.5 billion baht. The reason that money had to be alloted twice was because of administrative reasons. This latter budget was made several years ago and will no longer be used. People may not understand this.

5. On Red China's policy of supporting the CPT: Concerning the fact that Mr Zhao Ziyang, the Chinese minister of foreign affairs [sic], recently flew from Malaysia through Thailand and the prime minister held a 2-hour talk with him at Don Muang, he [Prem] siad that this was the first time that China said that it would no longer support the CPT, either in China's position as a government or as a communist party. He said that this was the first time that he had heard this from a person with responsibility in the Chinese administration. But I asked him about this in greater detail and asked how strong a commitment he had made. Because when he was in Malaysia, he told Malaysian officials that China would continue to support the Malaysian Communist Party politically and psychologically. General Prem then said that Zhao Ziyang had told him the same thing.

AIR FORCE GETS AUSTRALIAN PLANES AHEAD OF SCHEDULE

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 30 Jul 82 p 2

[Text]

THE Royal Thai Air Force has received the first two Nomad planes ordered from an Australian aviation company — five months ahead of schedule, a RTAF spokesman said.

The planes were delivered to the RTAF last Wednesday.

The RTAF will have a complete fleet of 20 Nomads by 1984, the spokesman said.

The Nomad was designed as a small short-haul airliner which can be modified into a military transport. The RTAF's versions will be mounted with air cannons to be used both in transport and counter-insurgency operations.

The passenger-carrying version of the Nomad has a top speed of 172 miles per hour. Its cruising speed of 165 mph can keep the aircraft airborne for 4½ hours.

Yesterday morning Royal Thai Navy Commander-in-Chief Adm Somboon Chuerphiboon said the RTN and the Australian Government were negotiating free military aid in which Australia had offered to supply a fleet of Nomads to the Navy.

"We are discussing the details now," said Adm Somboon. He added that the Navy expected to receive about 12 Nomads in aid, but that the exact number has yet to be decided.

The agreement by the RTAF for the purchase and delivery of the planes was signed in February between Foreign Minister ACM Siddhi Savetsila and Australian Ambassador Gordon Jockel.

The Nomad is manufactured by the Australian Government Aircraft Factory (GAF) and the fleet will be delivered to the RTAF by the Hawker Pacific Company, the factory's agent in Southeast Asia.

HIGH RANKING POLICEMEN IMPLICATED IN EXTORTION

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 31 Jul 82 p 14

[Text] THE SO-CALLED "Khaki Battle" was kicked off recently when a police lieutenant colonel in the northeastern province of Nong Khai filed a complaint to the Prime Minister's Office, the Interior Ministry and the Police Department, charging his superior – a police lieutenant general – with a frame-up.

Pol Lt Col Thaveesak Thuvanond, Chief of Nong Khai police station, accused Pol Lt Gen Ruj Kamtharaj, Zone 2 Police Commander who controls police administration in 16 provinces in the Northeast, of accepting 20,000 baht from him and many other policemen in the province.

Pol Lt Col Thaveesak said junior policemen in the province were forced to contribute money from their allowances totalling 10,000 baht to Pol Lt Gen Ruj when the latter took office in Nong Khai to replace Pol Lt Gen Bantherng Kampanart-saenyakorn late last year.

Pol Lt Col Thaveesak claimed that he later had to "present" an additional 10,000 baht to Pol Lt Gen Ruj to "make him happy" and "he received the money in the presence of other senior police officers who could serve as witnesses."

In his complaint to Bangkok, Thaveesak said Ruj accepted the money...an act he described as "illegal and exploitation." He named three witnesses at the "money-taking" scene. They included Pol Maj Gen Suppawat Vathayanond, Zone 6 Police Commander, Pol Maj Varavuth Pukprayoon, Investigation Chief of Nong Khai police station and Pol Maj Apichart Butranond, Suppression Chief of Nong Khai police station.

The "frame-up allegation" prompted Police Director General Pol Gen Suraphol Chullapram to order his deputy, Pol Lt Gen Charas Pengcharoen, to immediately probe into it.

The police director general said allegations against senior police officers by junior policemen had been "a common practice" particularly when the time for annual promotion or reshuffle in the Police Department approached.

Interior Minister Sitthi Chirarochana put it this way: "Attempts to undermine high-ranking police officers always take place around this time of the month which is very close to the annual reshuffle in the Police Department."

Immediately after he filed his complaint to Bangkok, Thaveesak took business leave with two other police officers, Pol Maj Apichart and Pol Maj Varavuth, who were named as witnesses in the frame-up.

The third witness, Pol Maj Gen Suppawat, left for Bangkok with Pol Lt Gen Ruj to attend a meeting discussing the annual reshuffle in the Police Department with other provincial police commanders.

Pol Lt Gen Ruj told reporters that he had nothing to do with the alleged frame-up and "I assure you I'll definitely leave the police service if I'm proved guilty."

The Zone 2 Police Commander said he had been working honestly in the police service for the past 39 years and "this is what I get for that."

Ruj also described Thaveesak, his "challenger," as a police officer of high caliber but "I really don't understand what he wants by making such allegations against me."

"This affects my reputation as a police officer," he complained in a recent interview to reporters.

Some MPs from Nong Khai including Anuwat Buaprommee and Pitak Sitabutr claimed that they themselves had ever received complaints from junior policemen in the province about having to contribute part of their allowance to senior police officers.

Experienced observers, particularly those in the police circle, indicated that Thaveesak was putting his own career and future at stake for he would probably have to bow out of the police service if the investigation committee ruled that the frame-up allegation was groundless

Thaveesak, however, insisted that he would fight the case to the bitter end and "I'll never withdraw my complaint."

The result of the investigation will have to mainly base on the accounts of the three witnessed named by Pol Lt Col Thaveesak.

One of the three, Pol Maj Gen Suppawat, said he had handed over his own testimony to the police director general. He refused to disclose details to the Press.

The two other witnesses are still on leave and they will have to be summoned to give their versions to the investigation committee when they are back to work.

Many described Thaveesak as a policeman with courage in exposing such malpractice in the police circle while many others charged him with attempting to undermine the reputation of his superior.

This, however, is only the first chapter of the "Khaki Battle" and whether the axe will fall on the colonel or the general has yet to be seen.

CITIZENSHIP URGED FOR CPM DEFECTORS

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 11 Aug 82 p 5

[Text]

FOURTH Army Region Commander Lt-Gen Harn Leenanond said yesterday that he will propose to the Army Commander-in-Chief and the National Security Council that defecting members of the Communist Party of Malaya (CPM) who were born in Thailand be granted Thai citizenship.

Lt-Gen Harn said he believed that most of CPM members who defected or were captured, were of Chinese origin but were born in Thailand. He said these people were intelligent and well-educated and should be given the same opportunity as reformed Thai communist insurgents in the North and in other parts of the country.

Lt-Gen Harn said the Chinese in Betong, Yala Province, are a closed-knit community with links to the CPM.

CPM's old timers, as far back as the Chin Peng (secretary-general of the CPM) era, normally sent their jungle-born offsprings to be raised by Chinese families in Betong while a family which had two or more sons would be asked to send one to join the party.

Speaking to reporters at the Army Auditorium after yesterday's meeting between high - ranking Army officials, Lt-Gen Harn said the Army Commander - in - Chief, Gen Prayuth Charumanee, was very "happy" with the recent success of the Fourth Army Region in destroying three major strongholds of the CPM at Khao Nam Kharng in Na Thawee District in Songkhla, in Sukhirin District of Narathiwat and in Betong District of Yala which were headquarters of CPM's 8th, 10th and 12th regiments respectively.

Declaring the overall operations of the "Tai Rom Yen 11" a complete success, he added that Gen Prayuth will inspect the captured tunnel at Khao Nam Kharng and bid farewell to soldiers before his retirement at the end of next month.

The Fourth Army Region Commander blamed the media for misinterpreting Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda's statement involving his announcement that military operations were ahead of political strategy. He also dismissed a rumour that, if such were the case, it would lead to military dictatorship.

What Gen Prem meant was that the military was ahead in its political campaign as well as its armed struggle with the communist insurgents, Lt-Gen Harn explained. He added that the new anti-insurgency policy which emphasised political over military strategy was an abstract concept which caused a lot of misunderstanding among government officials and the public.

CORRESPONDENT DESCRIBES MUSLIM SEPARATIST ACTIVITY

London ARABIA: THE ISLAMIC WORLD REVIEW in English Aug 82 pp 22-24

[Article by John Davis: "A Political Powder Keg"]

[Text] At first glance the little town of Pattani on Thailand's southern coast appears to be a tropical idyll. Brightly-coloured fishing boats ride at anchor in the river estuary. Old-fashioned Chinese merchant houses line the river banks and man-powered trishaws provide the commonest and most convenient means of transport for the town-dwellers. Surrounding Pattani are traditional villages with wooden houses built on stilts amid green and lush scenery.

The peace of Pattani is illusory: southern Thailand is a political powder keg, a countryside for years torn apart by civil strife and insurgency. Hidden in the distant hills, visible from Pattani Town, are Muslim guerillas who demand independence for Thailand's four southernmost provinces; Jala, Narathiwat, Pattani and Satun, where the population is ethnically Malay, not Thai. Assaults on government outposts are frequent and the last year has seen an increase in guerilla attacks on police stations and army camps. This increased activity by the Muslim minority in the predominantly Buddhist Thailand has caused great concern for the government in Bangkok.

In a recent government report, a team which had spent some time examining conditions in the south, stated that "...the situation has developed to the point of crisis and has raised the question of a possible disintegration in unity of the people there. The security of the nation is being threatened..."

The origin of the conflict in southern Thailand and the bloody fighting between government troops and Muslim insurgents is not simply a matter of religion. Thai Buddhists and Muslims, mainly of Chinese and Indian descent, live together peacefully in Bangkok, Chiang Mai and other affluent cities further to the north, and outside the south there is no equivalent to the movement among the Pattani Muslims.

The root of the conflict is that Pattani follows the usual pattern of a remote and neglected border area. Average income in the south is well below the national level, unemployment is high and government projects are few and far between. Government officials, who view their assignment to the south more or less as a punishment, tend to withhold reports of serious developments in the areas under their responsibility from their superiors in Bangkok.

"If they report that the situation is serious, then their superiors would construe the reports as a sign of their inefficiency," one local source told Arabia in Pattani. "They definitely don't want this kind of thing to delay their promotion."

Pattani has a long history of rebellion against the central government. Armed conflict has been going on since the late 1940s but the insurgent groups were relatively small and isolated until the mid 1970s. In 1975, a group of protestors rallied outside the Pattani town hall to demand justice from the Thai government. A hitherto unknown group called PULO (the Pattani United Liberation Organisation) claimed responsibility for the demonstration. In a leaflet, distributed a few days later, PULO presented its political programme and said that the organisation was founded in 1968 by Thai Muslim religious leaders, trained in the Middle East.

PULO's first armed attack took place four months after the demonstration outside Pattani town hall. On April 3, 1976, Muslim insurgents shot up a special duty police base in Yarung district of Pattani province. This attack triggered off a series of assaults on government installations throughout southern Thailand, the most spectacular of which was the planting of bombs in Haadyai railway station on June 29, 1977. PULO has even bombed Bangkok. On June 30, 1980, bombs went off in buses, cinemas and stations in the Thai capital, injuring more than 40 people. The government branded the Muslim insurgents "bandits and terrorists" and exhorted the press not to use the abbreviation PULO but to talk instead about "bandit gangs" and "hit squads."

Since the 1975 town hall protest the militant Pattani movement has developed rapidly and has gained limited support from a number of Muslim countries. Syria was the first Middle East country to recognise PULO and provide it with political and military support. PULO's deputy secretary-general, Hisham Abdullah, a 31-year-old graduate of Cairo's Al Azhar University, has reportedly attended a six-month guerilla training course with the PLO and the organisation now maintains a permanent office in Tripoli, Libya.

The Barisan Nasional Pembebasan Pattani (BNPP), another rebel group operating in southern Thailand, has already submitted appeals for recognition and support to Islamic foreign ministers' conferences on 10 occasions since 1970 but with little success.

In its petitions to the foreign ministers the BNPP alleged that the Muslims in southern Thailand were facing discrimination and were subject to atrocities committed by the Thai army. BNPP also stated its objectives:

- "to liberate the homeland of the Muslim people of Pattani from the Thai colonialists;
- to re-establish as independent and sovereign the Islamic State of Pattani;
- to uphold and protect Islam as well as the Malay-Muslim race, culture, traditions and customs;
- to support and work closely with the other Muslim and Arab countries for advancement of Muslims all over the world and for world peace."

A BNPP representative was eager to stress to Arabia that his movement was not a separatist one, since Pattani had once been an independent kingdom, but that the southern Muslims just wanted to regain the independence they lost to the Thais in the early 19th century.

It is difficult to estimate the actual strength of the various liberation movements in Pattani and it is an even harder task to assess the amount of popular support the rebels enjoy. But the movement is growing, despite the fact that the Thai media and the Thai politicians refuse to recognise its existence. Nevertheless, thousands of troops have been sent to the south to suppress the rebellion, a tough policy that has proved disastrous.

One of the most serious mistakes made by the Thai military authorities is to rely on the paramilitary Rangers in the fight against the insurgents in the South. The Rangers are authorised to seek out and kill guerillas, but they have become notorious for terrorising civilians. The Rangers have alienated the people of Pattani, whose support they need to successfully fight the insurgents.

Several years of massive counterinsurgency efforts have proved counterproductive; it has led to an upsurge in Muslim guerilla activity and to an alliance between some of the rebels and the Communist Party of Thailand, which is also active in Thailand's deep south, where it cooperates closely with the Communist Party of Malaysia. In March 1978 the Thai Communists announced the formation of the Thai Muslims People's Liberation Armed Forces (TMPLAF), which reportedly had taken place in August 1977. Little is known about this group and it may exist only in the minds of those who announced its formation.

Another shadowy group operating in the Thai-Malaysian border area is the Persatuan Pemuda Rakyat Islam (the Islamic Brotherhood Party – Paperi). Set up by the Malaysian Communist Party's 12th regiment, Paperi represents an appeal to Malays and Pattani Muslims still reluctant to break with traditional Islam. The group is known to have distributed a number of pamphlets in the Yawi script, purporting to reveal a basic compatibility between Marxist and Islamic ideology.

The exact nature of the relationship between the Pattani Muslim insurgents and the Communists in the area remains obscure. "Sometimes they fight each other, sometimes they help each other. It's difficult to keep up with what's going on," noted one experienced local observer. However, it is reasonable to assume that the Muslims and the Communists have nothing ideologically in common and dummy groups such as TMPLAF and Paperi have limited chances of making inroads into the Muslim community in southern Thailand. The tendency of some Muslim youth to turn to the Communists has other causes – the Communists are seen as a strong group, offering weaponry and training facilities.

A far more serious threat to the stability of southeast Asia than the Communist connection is the possibility of tacit Malaysian support of the Pattani rebels. Lim Kit Siang, the leader of the Chinese-dominated opposition Democratic Action Party last year raised the question in the Malaysian parliament and alleged that the Thai military, police and political leaders were not happy with the Malaysian government's links with the Pattani rebels. A foreign ministry spokesman refuted the allegation. Even in Bangkok, officials are convinced that Malaysian aid to the Pattani rebels is mainly at the local level.

However, the respected weekly Far Eastern Economic Review reported in April, 1981 that PULO deputy secretary-general Hisham Abdullah has met the high-ranking Kedah Chief Minister Datuk Syed Nahar to discuss the question of Muslim refugees streaming over the border from Thailand to Malaysia. In addition, with the resurgence of Islam in southeast Asia, it is very likely that the Pattani rebels will get more support from young Muslim militants in Malaysia and possibly also Indonesia. This could prove politically explosive, particularly since both Thailand and Malaysia are members of ASEAN, the unity of which is of utmost importance if Communist expansion in the region is to be countered.

ECONOMISTS DIFFER ON PROJECTIONS

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 13 Aug 82 p 13

[Text] A LEADING financial executive and a well-known businessman offered divergent views Wednesday in their economic forecasts for the second half of this year.

Managing Director of Ayudhya Investment and Trust Co Ltd, (AITCO) Mr Sa-ngob Punnarugsa, said he was optimistic that the economic situation would improve, in the next several months.

But Managing Director of S.P. International Co Ltd, Mr Chumpol Phornprapa, was pessimistic enough to predict that some leading companies in the country could go bankrupt by the end of this year.

The two spoke during a seminar on "Problems and Trend of the Marketing in the Second Half of the Year" organized by the Marketing Association of Thailand at Indra Regent Hotel.

Sa-ngob said the US economy has already hit rock bottom with the rate of unemployment at 9.4 per cent, the highest in years and it might be even higher.

He said the US Government will have no choice but to reduce the prime rate which stands currently at 15 per cent as charged by New York bankers – one and a half per cent drop from that of last month.

Sa-ngob predicted that the US prime rate will slide further in the near future and this will lead to worldwide decline of interest rates.

Sa-ngob made the prediction before the announcement of the Bank of Thailand to cut discount rates for commercial banks. The Forecast that the local prime rate would drop from 17.5 to 17 per cent within two weeks.

"Though the official prime rate has not been reduced, you can obtain loans from commercial banks at about half a per cent lower than the prime rate if your credit rating is good," Sa-ngob told about 40 marketing executives at the seminar.

High interest rates, he said, were the major reason for economic stagnation during the whole of 1981 and first half of this year. "But it can't be worse from now on," he added.

"If I were an investor, I would start making investment now because capital goods are very cheap and the economic situation will be improving by the end of this year," he said.

But Chumpol said he disagreed with Sa-ngob, pointing out that Thai economists are too optimistic. "Last year they said the economic situation would improve by the end of 1981, but it did not. Then they said again that it would be better in the first half of this year, they were proved wrong again," Chumpol said.

BANKRUPTCY

"I say now that they would be proved wrong again to have said that the situation would improve during the second half of this year," Chumpol said.

The world market, he said, has shrunk because of diminishing natural resources and rapid technology transfer. "Most countries in the world have been trying to control population growth but such a policy has affected world market demand," he pointed out.

Chumpol said the current oil glut is just temporary and oil prices will jump again. In 1981, he said, manufacturers of various industries reduced their production and inventory, but the situation for this year is worse.

He said manufacturers of motorcycles, for instance, had set their target that they would produce 300,000 units but reduced it to only 250,000 units recently.

He said he was confident that some leading companies in the country would go bankrupt. But Chumpol refused to disclose the names of those firms. "During 40 years of my life, I had never seen interest rate going higher than inflation rate. But I saw it happened this year. If I could sell everything I own, I would do so and deposit all my money in banks," Chumpol said.

RECORD NUMBERS OF FARMERS FLEE DROUGHT TO BANGKOK

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 31 Jul 82 p 6

[Text]

HUA Lampong railway station is an always busy place between four and 10 am when hundreds of destitute farmers and their family members arrived from the Northeast to face an uncertain future.

They left behind their dying paddy fields and the possibility of a starvation in hope of finding some jobs that might give them a little income to survive on.

The drought has been particularly bad this year and the trains from the Northeast into Bangkok are still full of weary job-seekers.

The over 17 job placement firms near the railway station – mostly unlicensed ones – are having a hectic time cashing in on the influx of cheap labour. An average of 300 job-seekers from the North are seeking help from the job placement firms daily.

"They come here in endless stream," said the owner of one of the firms who refused to be identified.

Kong Saiparn is only 16 but he decided to leave behind his five young brothers and sisters in Khukhan District in Si Sa Ket last week to try his fortune in Bangkok.

"There was just no rain in my village for months. I never knew before what Bangkok looked like but I am not afraid," he said with a smile.

Kong and a handful of other young Northeasterners he befriended on a train had very little cash left and had been using Hua Lampong as their home for days after their arrival.

They refused to go to any of the job placement firms after they were told of experiences of others who were cheated. They sat at one corner of the railway station with their fingers crossed, hoping that some employers would drop by and offer them a job.

Like most of the poverty-stricken farmers, Kong and his friends had less than 100-150 baht in their pockets the moment they decided to set off for Bangkok. And by the time they bought their train tickets and arrived in Bangkok, they had spent most of their money.

"We are not much different from our people back home where they have nothing to eat like us. They may have some fermented fish left but without rice," Kong said.

Many of the newly-arrived job-seekers are lucky enough to be given shelter and foods by some of the job placement firms who hoped they would be able to find jobs for them soon.

And in one of the firms sat Sam-arng Chanchada with his two girls, 12 and 13, from Suwannakhuha of Udon Thani.

Sam-arng pinned his hope on the girls who he said might find some jobs that would give them some money to send home in this hour of need.

"We have to do it because all of our paddy fields are burning," he said apologetically.

It was the third time for Sam-arng to have set his foot in Bangkok. Every time he came he brought along his relatives and friends who were also desperate for jobs.

"We have only children and old people back home now. Every able body has left and joined in the rush for jobs in Bangkok," said Sam-arng.

He said after he was able to get jobs for all of his family members he himself would become a construction worker – if he was lucky enough to be one.

Sam-arng returned to Udon Thani the same day he arrived, leaving behind his two girls to face their own future here.

UNION OIL EXECUTIVE EXPLAINS DROP IN PRODUCTION, OTHER PROBLEMS

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 27 Jul 82 p 5

[Excerpts of interview with William Greenwalt, Union Oil of Thailand vice president and resident manager by THE NATION on 23 July 1982; place not stated]

[Text] The shortfall at Union Oil's Erawan Natural Gas Field in the Gulf of Thailand has caused anxiety among Thai government leaders and Union Oil's executives who last week held the first series of negotiations on how to determine the real causes behind the shortfall.

The call by Union Oil to review the exact gas reserves this field has also sparked off wideranging comments.

On Friday, THE NATION had an hour-long exclusive interview with Union Oil of Thailand's Vice President and Resident Manager William Greenwalt Jr who explained his side of the problems.

Here are excerpts from the question-answer session.

NATION: We understand that a team of top executives from Union Oil Company of California is in town to hold talks with ministers concerned with the petroleum industry and senior officials of the Petroleum Authority of Thailand on your proposal for a review of gas reserve in the Erawan Field in light of the continuing shortfall. Has there been any conclusion?

GREENWALT: Well, we have been discussing with them the reserves during the meeting. But there were no hard and fast conclusions yet. There are many studies to be made and there will be a continuing review of the situation.

NATION: At least, it shows that the Thai government has agreed to talk about a review.

GREENWALT: Well, I think they said that last week about the talks on the review of gas reserve.

NATION: What is the next step now? Are you going to have a neutral consultant firm to do it?

GREENWALT: Not necessarily. We are still having continuing conditions of the field to study which is part of the review and that's still going on. So, we cannot come to any hard and fast conclusion by Monday morning or anything like that. There will be more discussions which will take a couple of months.

NATION: Has any deadline been set for the talks or for the review?

GREENWALT: No.

NATION: What about the difference over the causes for the shortfall? Dr Tongchat said that Union Oil had informed PTT that the shortfall was a force majeure but he thought it was a technical problem. Was this issue cleared between the company and the government?

GREENWALT: Well, I think the past press release which I had made said we believed we had information that part of the shortfall is due to technical reasons. Maybe not 100 per cent or maybe 100 per cent, but that is our part of the review to see what is the total cause for the shortfall. But part of the shortfall was the heat problem. We are now reviewing the productivity of the wells and see whether or not there are some other causes which might have contributed to the shortfall. That's the studies we are talking about.

NATION: But in your letter to PTT you mentioned force majeure.

GREENWALT: We put it this way: We believe that there are causes of technical reasons.

NATION: Part of it was due to technical reasons, and the other part could be force majeure?

GREENWALT: Yes. We just said that part of the shortfall could be due to technical reasons. It's a subject that's neither white nor black. But it has to be looked at from many different angles and we are in the process of doing that. We are not trying to be dogmatic.

NATION: When did you send the letter to PTT notifying that it was a force majeure?

GREENWALT: No, we did not send any formal letter declaring a force majeure this time or the other. We had a dialogue about the shortfall. We did mention in one of our correspondence, but it was not in the formal letter. But the causes for the shortfall were part of our discussions with PTT. What I am trying to say is that in these conversations we have indicated to PTT that we believe there were some technical reasons which were beyond our control while we have the shortfall rather than all being due to improper practices.

In another word, we believe there are reasons to have caused the shortfall and they are beyond our control. And if they are the causes, of course, that fall on the force majeure. We are discussing this issue with PTT now, and the discussions may go on for several weeks.

NATION: What are your immediate measures to solve the shortfall? We understand that the daily supply has dropped from 200 million cubic feet per day to 117 MMscfd now. You are supposed to boost the supply to 250 MMscfd this month.

GREENWALT: The heat problem is part of the causes for the shortfall, we believe we have solved that and started recompleting some of the effective wells six months ago. The new equipment that we put into the wells seemed to have solved this problem. They are apparently working, and we believe that we have the solution to that. Of all the wells which are effective only three more left to be recompleted.

NATION: When do you expect to recomplete them?

GREENWALT: We hope that they will take us about six weeks.

NATION: When you have completed most of the repair at well packers, why does the supply remain at a level lower than the target?

GREENWALT: The wells did not produce as much as anticipated. What I can say now is that the productivity of the individual wells has not come up to the expectations and consequently will not be up to 250 MMscfd. But it is not that simple, we are studying the problem and try to resolve what the causes are. After we can establish that we can then settle our so-called shortfall and hold talks with PTT.

NATION: You are ready to pay the penalty for the shortfall?

GREENWALT: We have a contract with the government, and it calls for penalty for the shortfall under certain conditions. And if they call for us to pay, after all the analysis, naturally we will pay the penalty. No problem. But we have not come to that point yet because we are still discussing the reasons for the shortfall. We are trying to get data from the wells and so forth so that we can all examine it and we can all come to a conclusion that we can agree upon. When that is made, then we will do whatever mentioned in the contract and see whether we are required to pay the penalty. We will go by the contract.

NATION: But in your earlier press release you said you believed that natural gas reserves in the Erawan Field should be reviewed and they are being reviewed, is that right? So far, have the talks pinpointed any causes apart from the heat?

GREENWALT: No, it has not been determined at all during our talks with the government during the past three days. We also have a lot of field work to do. All the information that we develop in the field will be passed on to the PTT, the Department of Mineral Resources. We have no secrets. We invited their engineers to come over here and talk to our engineers whenever they want to. Copies of the log and daily production from every wells were furnished to them.

NATION: As your review would take about two months, what will happen if the daily production has not increased by then? Will the shortfall affect the five-year plan and industrial projects such as petrochemical, soda ash, fertilizer plants and others?

GREENWALT: That is something entirely beyond our control. But what we are talking about is the productivity of the Erawan Field. We are not talking about Union which has other production areas, but about the wells in the Erawan Fields which have not produced up to our expectations. It is quite natural that we expected it to be at 250 MMscfd. That is logical while we are trying to figure out the exact reasons for that.

At the same time, we will continue with the development of the field. We will continue to drill additional wells, as long as we have locations to drill to increase the productivity. But we don't know how long that's going to be. It might be one year, two years, five years, I don't know. It depends on how many locations we can drill to get more productivity.

We have three rigs in the field now and they are continuing to work.

NATION: Can the shortfall be covered by drilling more wells?

GREENWALT: Naturally, there can be more productivity. But it is not that simple. The problem is that the productivity of the wells continue to be less, which is a natural phenomenon. All oil and gas wells in the world will have reservoirs which contain petroleum deposits at certain levels and as time passes, they will decline until they get to the point that they don't produce anymore.

NATION: Has this kind of problem happened to Union Oil in other areas in the world?

GREENWALT: Not to this magnitude.

NATION: Is this the worst case, so far?

GREENWALT: On the individual wells, there were some where gas was gone after two days. So I cannot say it is the worst. So as the field itself I won't also say it is the worst. Let's say that it is probably one of the most disappointing field performances that we have ever had.

NATION: Is there any possibility that this situation will occur in your other fields such as Pladaeng, Krapong, Plathong and others.

GREENWALT: Time will tell.

NATION: How about the geological feature of gas reservoirs in the Gulf of Thailand? Is it the same all over?

GREENWALT: From our drilling, we got indications that some general geological features occur all over the Thai basin. The geology is the same. But even in the face of this we still went ahead to drill more wells and signed the second gas sale contract with PTT. We have gone on full development programme. In fact, we have installed a new drilling platform in the new field for the second gas agreement, covering Plathong. We plan to have the second platform here in two weeks and the third platform in two weeks after that. Development drilling the second agreement will start in January. Despite our setback in the Erawan Field, the rest are going on as scheduled. We have a commitment to fulfil. We have to produce under the second agreement beginning 1985.

NATION: In terms of your talks with PTT, who in the end will decide what is technical problem and what is force majeure?

GREENWALT: Under the agreement, there are arbitration clauses. We hope that we would never have to go to that extreme. We will try our best to settle this issue peacefully. In the clause, each party will appoint an arbitrator and then those two will appoint a referee. It's just a standard arbitration clause, but at this stage we do not intend to go that far. We think we can sit down and discuss in harmony and come to a conclusion, but it will take a little time.

NATION: Union Oil of California's President of the International Division, Mr Lian, was here, did he reach any conclusion with the government team?

GREENWALT: He met Minister Sulee, the full staff of PTT. He also had a meeting with Minister Chatichai. But there will be more meetings between Union Oil executives and government officials concerning specific subjects.

So far, we have just discussed the general situation and see what the problem is. And the government officials said they wanted to think about what we have explained to them. They cannot just say what should be done immediately because, after all, this is new to Thailand.

NATION: Until you have completed the reservoir tests do you think the gas supply will have to remain at this level further?

GREENWALT: Well, we hope to build it up by continuing drilling new wells The heat problem has taken the drilling capabilities of new holes from one of our three rigs in the field. But we will have three more rigs to work in the Gulf and we hope that they will help boost the productivity from new wells.

We have some hope that we will boost it up to 160 MMscfd by the end of this year. But we cannot guarantee because everything depends on the performance of the wells. We hope that the daily supply will be going up from new wells.

NATION: Did the Thai side talk about compensation for the shortfall?

GREENWALT: We did not talk about penalty yet. We try to establish the cause for the shortfall first.

NATION: As things stand now with the shortfall, is there any possibility for you to boost the productivity and the supply from other fields?

GREENWALT: No, we are trying to produce gas from the Erawan Field until we run out of locations to drill. That's our contractual obligations. We have a responsibility to fulfil that contract with the government.

Again we thought we would produce from 42 wells we have, but it seems that production from the 42 wells won't do the job and we are prepared to drill additional wells over that 42 to get up to the maximum potential of the field. That's what we are doing. Those three rigs would be brought up for the new drilling in a short period of time now, except for the three wells which still have the heat problem.

Those rigs will be moved around to the new contract areas. We realize that we have to keep drilling in the Erawan Field now and there are a lot more wells to start it out with. So we went out to contract four new drilling rigs to drill the second contract area. That is an entirely separate and different investment and it is a new project. That's why we don't rob the Erawan Field of those three rigs. They have to stay there to do a lot more drilling. The first comes in January, the second in February and the remaining two in March. Three platforms are going up now and the fourth one will be in February.

This demonstrates our intent to keep trying to develop the Erawan Field. With four new rigs coming in, they can take care of the second contract area. We have five rigs in the Erawan Field now.

NATION: This new drilling will cost you much more than your investment projected earlier?

GREENWALT: An awful lot more. But we will not ask for any price adjustments because we got a contract. We try to live up to our agreement. We will not be asking for any price increase for the Erawan Field. When it comes to a point where we cannot afford to drill any more wells then we have come to an economic limit.

THE Petroleum Authority of Thailand and Union Oil Company of Thailand will have to discuss whether the current shortfall in daily gas supply would come under "force majeure" stipulated in their agreement.

The Nation hereby reproduces the Force Majeure Clause of the agreement which Union Oil signed with PTT when the state enterprise was still the Natural Gas Organization of Thailand (NGOT).

FORCE MAJEURE

16.1 THE expression "Force Majeure" means any happening beyond the control of a party acting in accordance with the standards of a reasonable and prudent operator which causes or results in a failure by such party to fulfil any obligation (other than obligations to give a notice or to pay money to another or others of the parties) under this agreement.

16.2 EVENTS which may subject to Clause 16.1 be considered Force Majeure events shall include but not be limited to acts of government, strikes, lock-outs, acts of the public enemy, wars whether declared or undeclared, blockades, insurrection, riots, epidemics, landslides, lightning, earthquakes, fires, storms, floods, washouts, civil disturbances, explosions, breakage or accident to machinery or lines of pipe, freezing of wells or lines of pipe, partial or entire failure of wells, inability to obtain necessary materials or supplies due to changes in laws and regulations inability of any customer or customers of NGOT to take natural gas which it or they would have taken if such inability is caused by a happening which would have constituted Force Majeure under Clause 16.1 if the customer concerned had been a party to this agreement.

16.3 A PARTY claiming relief on account of Force Majeure shall

(1) • AS soon as practicable give notice to the other party or parties of the happening said to constitute Force Majeure such notice to include full information about the circumstances and a statement of the steps and time believed necessary to remedy the failure but neither party shall be obliged to settle or prevent any strike or other industrial action except on terms acceptable to it.

(2) • Subject to Article XVIII and sub-clause 4.9.2 proceed as reasonable and prudent operator at its own expense to remedy the failure as rapidly as possible.

16.4 A party failing to fulfil its obligations (other than the obligations excepted under Clause 16.1) by reason of Force Majeure and fulfilling the requirements of Clause 16.3 shall be relieved of liability as follows:

(a) in the case of Concessionaires to the extent that Force Majeure has prevented it from delivering gas that it should have delivered.

(b) in the case of PTT to the extent that Force Majeure has prevented it from accepting gas which it should have accepted or from disposing of the same.

OIL BONANZA IN NORTH DIMS

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 11 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] THAILAND's hopes of a sizeable crude oil supply from Larn Krabue in the North have dimmed –now that Thai Shell Exploration and Production Co Ltd has informed Minister in charge of petroleum affairs Sulee Mahasandana that the company might be able to tap only 10 to 30 per cent of the field reserves due to unfavourable geological features in its wells in Kampaeng Petch Province in the North.

A team of Thai Shell executives also informed the minister during a meeting last week that the company still could not exactly determine the field reserves but early estimates showed that "recoverable reserves" would be about 10-30 per cent.

They told the minister that the company had already drilled six wells and three more would be completed by October this year, according to well-informed sources.

Thai Shell spokesman Preecha Pholprasert told The Nation yesterday that the structure of the company's concession at Lan Krabue has many "faults" which rendered the crude oil exploration very difficult.

He said the situation is quite "worrisome" and the difficulties prevent the company from reporting the exact field reserves to the government.

"We are afraid that after reporting the reserves, we may be in the same situation as Union Oil," Preecha said, adding that more exploratory drilling would have to be carried out.

Under the Petroleum Act, petroleum concessionaires are required to report to the Department of Mineral Resources their discovery of commercial wells and prior permission must be obtained before they can begin commercial production.

During exploratory drilling the concessionaires are required to submit all the data to the DMR before production.

Thai Shell, the sources said, expects to submit final data in October when it completes drilling. The low amount of recoverable reserves is also worrisome among ministers and senior officials.

Meanwhile, the Cabinet yesterday defined the role and responsibility of a committee on negotiations for joint venture in crude oil and gas to be produced in Larn Krabue and Namphong District of Khon Kaen. The latter belongs to Esso Exploration and Production Khorat Inc.

The committee, headed by Minister Sulee, has been authorized to reach agreement with the two firms on equity participation, purchase and transport of crude oil and gas.

The committee will make arrangements for government agencies concerned to exploit petroleum from both sources for consumption within the schedule. State agencies and their officials will take charge of projects assigned to them by the committee.

It is also authorized to set up sub-committees or working groups for assistance and implementation and invite government officials concerned to provide clarifications and documents as may be necessary.

The Cabinet decided that the Petroleum Authority of Thailand will advance payments for necessary expenses of the committee. The state enterprise can later refund its expenses from government agencies concerned.

The committee, formed by the Cabinet on July 27, comprises Deputy Industry Minister Dr Chirayu Isarangkun Na Ayutthaya, Secretary General of the Juridical Council Dr Amorn Chandrasomboon, Deputy Undersecretary of State for Industry Sivavong Changkasiri, Dr Djakkrit Puranasamridhi of the Industry Ministry, PTT Governor Dr Tongchat Hongladaromp and his deputy Sophon Suphapong.

GUNBOATS FROM ITALY--Commander-in-chief of the Royal Thai Navy, Admiral Somboon Chuapiboon, told reporters that the Royal Thai Navy has ordered three gunboats, each of 450 tonnes displacement, from Italy. The three boats have now been completed and will soon join the Thai naval force. The Admiral was expected to leave for Italy soon in order to launch the three gunboats. His trip was also scheduled for an inspection of Spanish and West German naval forces. Admiral Somboon also revealed that the RTN had already proposed to the government to buy a further three corvette-class warships, of 800 to 1,000 tonnes displacement, in an effort to strengthen the Thai navy. He said the RTN now had sufficient funds to purchase one such warship. [Text] [Kuala Lumpur ASIAN DEFENCE JOURNAL in English Aug 82 p 7]

ARMY TO GET M-48 TANKS--The Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces led a team of high-ranking Armed Forces personnel to observe the unloading of five US M-48-A5 tanks newly arrived at the Port Authority of Thailand on May 24, 1982. This shipment is the third delivery of the tanks. The first and second shipments ordered by the Royal Thai Army were undertaken in October 1979 and October 1980 respectively. Thai Supreme Commander, Gen Saiyud Kerdphol, told reporters that this delivery constituted part of the training in joint logistic operations featured in "Joint Exercise 25" which ended on June 3, 1982. Earlier Gen Saiyud witnessed the unloading, also as part of Joint Exercise 25, of a number of 155 mm howitzers which were transported into Bangkok Air Force's base by US C141 aircraft. The general declined to reveal the number of howitzers received, saying only that they have a firing range of 40 kilometres and that Thailand was the first among other ASEAN nations to have such howitzers. Also included in Joint Exercise 25 was a joint logistic drill involving, ammunition and explosives at the naval port in Sattahip. BLAIR ATHOL COAL PROJECT--A group fo 16 major international banks have signed an agreement with 3 Australian companies to provide about $A 450 million to fund the Blair Athol Coal project in Central Queensland. The package borrowed from overseas will cover most of the expected capital expenditure on the project thought to be about $A 500 million. Last year, the joint venture signed sale contracts with the Japanese Electric Power Development Company and the Japan Coal Development Company for the supply of 72 million tons of fuel coal to Japanese power stations over the next 15 years. APPROVAL FOR URANIUM MINE--The final approval was given today for mining of the rich Jabiluka uranium deposit in the northern territory. Jabiluka is one of the richest uranium deposits in the world and since its discovery in 1971, lengthy negotiations have taken place with traditional aboriginal land owners who signed a mining agreement only last month. The mine is expected to earn about $300 million a year in exports of uranium ore. [BK151055 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 12 Aug 82]

The latest find is situated in the Cooper Basin, about 60 kilometers northwest of the Jackon oilfield. [BK151055 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0500 GMT 13 Aug 82]

QUEENSLAND ALUMINUM SMELTER--Australia's first aluminum smelter built specifically to supply the export market has been officially opened at Gladstone on the central Queensland coast. It has been built by a consortium of companies including COMALCO and Japanese and American interests. The smelter's production capacity by early next year will reach 100,000 tons and by early 1984, more than 200,000 tons. [Text] [Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 HMT 20 Aug 82 BK]

DROUGHT CONDITIONS WORSEN--The drought throughout eastern Australia continues to worsen. From 1 September, most of New South Wales will be declared drought stricken. As more states report a rapid deterioration in the situation, the prime minister, Mr Fraser, has requested a special conference of state and federal ministers to discuss the drought. The meeting is scheduled to be held in Melbourne early next week. In Sydney, the New South Wales agriculture minister, Mr Hallam, estimated that the overall loss of the state's economy would be more than $1,500 million; that's about the same in American dollars. [Text] [Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 30 Aug 82 BK]

CROP DAMAGE FROM DROUGHT--The National Farmers Federation estimate that the cost in lost agricultural production of the drought affecting a large area of Australia will amount to more than $2 billion. In its submission to the federal government, the federation says that previous assessments of the effects of the drought are proving conservative. It estimates that a fall of one third in Australia's winter grain production will make up half the total cost of lost production. It says there will be an estimated fall of 5 percent in livestock numbers with the loss of 5.5 million sheep and 1 million cattle over the next 12 months. WHEAT PRODUCTION ESTIMATE--The Australian Wheat Board has again dropped its estimate of the country's wheat production in the harvest that starts later this year. The latest harvest estimate is between 9 and 10 million tons--down from an estimate released less than 1 month ago between 10 and 11 million tons. The wheat board's general manager, Max Moore-Wilton, says it is a matter of great concern that the continued absence of good rains has severely affected harvest estimates, particularly in the eastern states. He says if the board's latest estimate is correct, great strain will be placed on wehat farmers and the adverse effects will spread throughout the rural communities and the economy. Meanwhile, the board has announced further wheat sales to New Zealand and Japan. The sale of an extra 10,000 tons brings the total sales to New Zealand this year to 70,500 tons. A spokesman for the board said New Zealand usually bought about 60,000 tons of Australian wheat a year, but this could increase by 50,000 tons because of a higher than normal proportion of flood damage and crop disease in New Zealand. Japan's food agency has bought a further 47,500 tons of wheat to bring the total bought from Australia this year to more than 700,000 tons. INDUSTRIAL, MINING PROJECTS REPORT--Figures just released show that mining and manufacturing projects in Australia worth $117 billion were deferred or abandoned in the 6 months to the end of last June. However, for the same period, the Department of Industry and Commerce identified new projects worth $2.3 billion. The Australian dollar is worth slightly less than the American. The total remaining costs of projects that are committted or in final planning stages fell to $32 billion in June--$800 million below the figure for last December. Acting Minister for Industry and Commerce Fife says that the value of projects at this stage had held up well despite the deterioration in the world economy. He said the major losses in the past 6 months had been the abandonment of the Lochinvar aluminum smelter project in New South Wales and the deferment of the Alcoa aluminum smelter under construction in Victoria. However, there had been the advancement of coal mining projects at Singleton in New South Wales and at Kingston in South Australia, as well as a new silicon metal plant at Geelong in Victoria. DEFENSE INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT URGED--The minister for defense support, Mr Viner, says it is now more important than ever that Australia develop its own defense industry capability. Speaking in Melbourne, Mr Viner said there was an obvious need for Australia to reduce its dependence on foreign defense manufacturers. He was speaking at the handing over of the first radio navigation unit to be produced in Australia under an agreement between the federal government and (Rockwell-Collins), the Australian arm of the American electronics firm, Rockwell International. The units will be installed in such aircraft as the (Mackie) trainer, the Mirage, and the air force's new combat plane, the F-18. The project to make the units will be worth about $10 million over the next 10 years. [Text] [BK101044 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0390 GMT 10 Sep 82]

PACIFIC REGIONAL ADVISORY SERVICE--A new regional advisory service for the Pacific has been set up at the headquarters of the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Cooperation in Suva. The new service is designed to help and encourage the exchange of skilled workers between countries in the region. A Radio Australia correspondent in Suva says it will also maintain a systematic register of the range of skills available to island countries from other Pacific nations. The PacificRegional Advisory Service is headed by the former Papua New Guinea High Commissioner to Fiji, Dr (Akotua). The new service is being financed by Australia and London-based Commonwealth Secretariat. [Text] [BK071255 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0500 GMT 6 Sep 82]

AUTHORITIES CALL FOR NATIONAL EFFORT AGAINST PKI THREAT

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 11 Aug 82 pp 1, 8

[Article: "54,000 Former Communist Detainees Living in Society: Vigilance Against the Subversive Danger Should Not Be considered a 'Nightmare'"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, HARIAN UMUM AB--The commander of Operation Tertib [Operation Law and Order], Admiral Sudomo, has declared that vigilance against the latent danger of left-wing subversion is not exclusively a matter for the security approach which deliberately looks for it, nor should it be looked on as a "nightmare." Instead, this is really a fact which requires national vigilance.

Speaking before the Seminar on the Development of Communications and Supervision of Former Detainees of the G.30.S/PKI [Abortive Communist coup attempt of 1965] on Tuesday [11 August] at Hotel Kartika Chandra in Jakarta, the commander of Operation Tertib said that what was meant by the latent danger of left-wing subversion was the question of communism, which involves former criminals and detainees of the G.30.S/PKI. They are 544,000 in number who are now spread around the community since they were released between 1975 and 1979.

Admiral Sudomo said that it is an historical fact that the PKI [Indonesian Communist Party] on two occasions has carried out bloody coups d'etat that failed with the loss of many lives. The first coup was the Madiun uprising of 1948, and the second coup took place on 30 September 1965. "We don't want it to happen a third time," he said.

He said that up to the present there are still communist remnants who have not yet been arrested. In his view, in the "underground" communist movement there is a "special bureau" and an "F List." They work in "cells" whose members do not know each other. The Special Bureau tries to infiltrate the Indonesian Armed Forces, while the "F List" is an effort to infiltrate the ranks of state employees.

In addition it is still necessary to continue vigilance toward 544,000 former criminals and detainees of the B.30.S/PKI who are now living in the community. The total number of former convicts is 1,000 people. The number of Group B detainees is 33,000. The Group C category, whose members have already been released, includes 510,000 people.

Former detainees in Group B in particular are spread out throughout Indonesia. In Sumatra there are 4,749 in this group. In Java there are 21,840, among whom the largest number, or 9,000 people, live in Central Java. In Kalimantan there are 2,829; in Sulawesi, 2,187; in Nusatenggara, 435; in Maluku, 1,033; and in Irian Jaya, 28 people

According to Sudomo, at present there are still PKI leaders who are overseas and who do not dare return home. If they return home to Indonesia they will certainly be interrogated and their cases handled through the courts. This is also the case with the remnants of the FRETILIN [East Timor Independence Front] in East Timor, although from the military point of view their movement no longer has any meaning.

He also asked that attention be paid to the underground PKI activity, which may be oriented toward and may be cooperating with foreign groups. This is because the People's Republic of China and Vietnam appear to be continuing to make an effort to help the communist movement in Southeast Asia. He also recalled that there were remnants of communist groups along the frontier of Kalimantan and the state of Sarawak, Malaysia.

Admiral Sudomo recalled that, on the basis of the facts, it was clear that vigilance toward the latent danger of PKI subversion was absolutely required. He said that at present the people were saying that such vigilance was only something which was put on for appearance's sake and was like seeing ghosts at night. However, such people who say they don't know all the facts, and if something happened, then there would be a process of everyone accusing everyone else.

Regarding the subversive threat the government has tried to handle it with the six basic steps taken since 1974, or before the G.30.S/PKI detainees were released. This course of action is known as "Operation Patriotism" [Ksatria].

National stability in all sectors is absolutely required, because subversion from the left or the right, in seeking to reach its goals, always makes use of unstable situations or creates unstable national conditions. Furthermore the establishment of a just and progressive society should be accelerated. For poverty is a fertile field for the development of communism.

The system for developing and maintaining vigilance toward former communist criminals and detainees needs to be continued in an integral way. That is, there should be coordination between the regional governments, the Indonesian Police, the Special Branch, and so forth. It is further necessary to increase the national resiliency of the community in the ideological sphere so that the people can reject communist thinking, through training courses such as the P4 [Pancasila Indoctrination Course] and supplementary national vigilance courses concerning the latent communist danger. The last-mentioned course is necessary so that we can know what the communist modus operandi is in all of their activity. Wiping out PKI remnants both in the government service, the Indonesian Armed Forces, and in the community at large needs to be continued. In addition Admiral Sudomo considers it necessary to form and develop a center for the study of communist strategic doctrine and its implementation, as well as working with international and regional centers engaged in such study.

However, that may be, the commander of the Security and Order Command [KOPKAMTIB] does not yet see any clear evidence which would indicate that the PKI has again become active. He admitted that there are indications in that direction, in the form of robberies in Central Java to obtain funds, a demonstration of trishaw drivers in Surabaya, and infiltration in the campaign for the last general elections. However, all of that was broken up before they could be any farther. "However, this does not mean that in the present situation we are secure from the PKI," he said again.

The four-star admiral said that the freeing of former communist criminals and detainees means that they are as free as anyone else in society. However, they must be watched in such a way that they know they are watched, even though shadowing them does not show. They must also be handled in such a way as to provide assurance that they will not carry on political activity and advance the cause of communist ideology.

The movements of all groups of former convicts and detainees must be known. They may go from one province to another, provided they obtain a permit stating where they are going and when they are returning. Every sub-district [kelurahan] must have a list of these people, together with a complete biography of each one. Supervision can only be effective if the administrative activity which is its foundation has been put in place.

To those attending the communications seminar, consisting of officials of regional governments, the Indonesian Police, and Special Branch, and the Attorney General's Office, the commander of KOPKAMTIB asked that a list be made of the former detainees who do not have a job as yet. They need to get jobs such as in projects which have a great deal of work, in development companies, and in the professions.

According to Admiral Sudomo, those who have professions, for example as journalists, doctors, lawyers, or teachers, may carry on their professions. However, there are limits in the sense that they cannot continue to spread communist ideology. In the same way contractors shouldn't be afraid to employ them, provided they report them to the authorities so that supervision is easy. The reason for this is that those who have no job will easily be influenced by irresponsible groups.

The commander of KOPKAMTIB also asked that whenever a political development occurs it should immediately be looked into to determine whether there are subversive elements involved. An investigation should also be made as to whether there are any new groups involved, especially from the PKI, and how far their activity has gone.

He said that this was because in theory the return of the PKI to activity will bring out new members. However, these new members have not yet appeared, although the possibility cannot be excluded that they are now overseas.

ANTI-CORRUPTION STAFF SAVES RP 700 BILLION

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 7

[Article: "Rp 700 Billion in State Funds Saved; Action Taken Against Thousands of State Employees"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, HARIAN UMUM AB--Over the past 5 years the central and regional offices of Operation Tertib [Law and Order] have saved about Rp 400 billion in state funds, while similar law and order campaigns in the various government ministries have saved about Rp 300 billion. In addition action has been taken against thousands of state employees who have misused their positions. This was stated by the chairman of the central office of Operation Tertib, Admiral Sudomo, on Saturday [8 August] at a working meeting of Operation Tertib inspectors throughout Indonesia in Jakarta.

The 3-day working meeting was attended by 129 Operation Tertib inspectors, both civilian and military, in government ministries and in regional governments. Beside reviewong the results of their work up to now the meeting also decided on steps to increase their supervisory activity in the future.

According to Admiral Sudomo, seen from the point of view of results, Operation Tertib has been provided with considerable momentum from the efforts of the government, in the framework of the Panca Tertib [Five Principles of the Law and Order Campaign], as evidence of the government's determination to wipe out corruption. He said: "Operation Tertib has become a preventive factor for people who are considering violating the law in a variety of areas." The chairman of Operation Tertib declared that the effort to wipe out illegal tax collection activity (Pungli) will have first priority in the near future. This is because such illegal tax collections directly affect the community as a whole.

Functional law and order activity is carried on by the ministries concerned, while the central Operation Tertib staff only provides technical, operational help and the assistance of Operation Tertib inspectors. Later on the central Operation Tertib staff will carry out operations itself, aimed at strategically vital targets. That is, involving the interests of the people as a whole, directly involving the prestige of the government, and where the size of the case of violation of the law is a factor.

Sudomo went on to declare that there is a difference between corruption and illegal tax collections, which are often equated. Corrupt activity involves violations of the law by government employees to obtain money, social advantages, or the appearance of law in a prohibited way. Social advantages can take the form of money or legality in the form of status. Therefore, in terms of criminal activity corruption contains an element of self-enrichment.

Meanwhile, illegal tax collections involve prohibited collections of money which are not based on an official government regulation or a prohibited payment for the services of an administrative nature by a government employee in serving the people.

REORGANIZATION IN FOREIGN AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT EXPLAINED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 31 Jul 82 p 12

[Excerpts] Minister of Foreign Affairs Mochtar Kusumaatmadja made note of the fact that protection of Indonesian citizens abroad was being stepped up. This is related to the supervision of our citizens abroad so that they do not get "washed away" in the culture of the society in which they are living and that they continue to be oriented to the national culture.

The foreign minister made this statement in a speech given upon the installation of nine consuls general and consuls/chiefs of Indonesian missions abroad. During the ceremony, which took place at the Department of Foreign Affairs office in Jakarta Friday, 10 echelon II-a officials were also installed.

Four of those nine Indonesian missions abroad are new, namely Vancouver, Toronto, Chicago and Marseilles. The other five are missions already in place, namely Los Angeles, New York, Davao, San Francisco and Penang.

The foreign minister said further that in view of the unstable state of international developments, the Department of Foreign Affairs' revised organizational structure has been formed, based on Presidential Executive Order No 15, 1982. The reason for this is that the organizational structure fashioned in 1974 cannot now conform to and support the mission of the Department of Foreign Affairs.

This revision covers the following: First, the ASEAN National Secretariat has been fully integrated with the Department of Foreign Affairs. Second, the Directorate General for Foreign Relations Security has been changed to the Directorate General for Foreign Sociocultural Relations and Information. In this directorate general a new element has been included, namely the section for the supervision of the Indonesian community. The purpose of this is so that Indonesian citizens do not lose their orientation to national interests and culture. Third, a new Directorate for Economic Relations Among Developing Countries has been formed in the Directorate General for Foreign Economic Relations (HEIN). It was created since cooperation among the developing countries is most important in supporting foreign policy. Fourth, one additional bureau has been added in the province of the Secretariat General, namely the Planning Bureau. Its tasks is to conduct all of the department's planning, with the special responsibility of supporting efforts to recruit foreign service officials. And fifth, an Inspectorate of Supply has been formed. This is an addition in the province of the Inspectorate General.

The officials who were installed as consuls general/heads of mission were as follows: Drs Haringun Hardjotanojo, 47, as consul general in Los Angeles (United States), Drs Rudy Lengkong in New York (United States) and (Inf) Col (Ret) J. W. Damanik in Davao (the Philippines). Those installed as consuls/heads of mission were: Drs Abdul Aziz in Vancouver (Canada), Theofilus Nababan, SH, 54, in Marseilles (France), Drs Soetedja Kartawidjaja, MA, 47, in Toronto (Canada), R. Eddy Soehardi, 51, in Chicago (United States), Chaidir in San Francisco (United States) and (CPM) [Military Police Corps] Col (Ret) Rachmat Prawirasasmita in Penang (Malaysia).

Echelon II-a officials who were installed were: Kasman P. H. Siahaan as secretary of the Directorate General of Foreign Sociocultural Relations and Information, Drs Wisber Loeis as director of the International Organization, Ambiar Tamala as secretary of the Directorate General for Protocol and Consular Affairs, Drs J. B. Sudarmanto Kadarisman as protocol director, A. A. Murtadho as director of diplomatic facilities, Drs Sukarno Hardjosudarno as head of the Planning Bureau, Rusli Djohari, BcKn, as head of the Bureau of Supply, R. A. Hidayat Kusumanegara, MA, as personnel inspector, P. K. T. Parengkuan as supply inspector and Jacob Piay as director of technical cooperation and economic services.

AIRFIELDS, AIR TRANSPORT IN IRIAN JAYA

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 20 Jul 82 p 9

[Text] Development activities in Irian Jaya since before the 5-year plans until the 3rd year of the Third Five-Year Development Plan have been carried out continuously in order to achieve the ultimate goal of a just and prosperous society.

The field of communications, particularly the sub-sector of air communications, is playing a very important and decisive role in this province's development, to the remote villages in the interior.

According to M. Panggabean, SH, office chief of Region V, Air Communications Directorate General for the Province of Irian Jaya, during the second 5-year plan, passenger and cargo traffic rose an average of 18 percent per year. The reason for this was development activity and the upgrading of airport facilities and infrastructure.

There now are 4 airports in Irian Jaya for accommodating aircraft having cargo capacities of more than 8 tons. There are 5 airports for capacities under 8 tons plus approximately 200 for aircraft like the Cessna and Twin Otter, including the pioneer airfields spread throughout the 9 districts. Of that total, 18 runways have been upgraded from landing strips for Cessna types of aircraft to runways on which Twin Otters (DHC-6's) can land.

At the beginning of the Second Five-Year Development Plan, this region still had leftover World War II DC-3's (Dakotas). That fleet has been replaced with Fokker (F-27) and Twin Otter aircraft.

Currently the flight path for GIA [Garuda Indonesian Airways] service to and from Irian Jaya is as follows: Sentani-Biak RT [round trip] by F-27, Biak-Ujungpandang RT by DC-9, Sentani-Timika-Ambon by F-27, Sentani-Biak-Sorong-Ambon RT by Fokker-28 (F-28) and Biak-Timika-Sentani by F-28.

Air transport service to the interior is handled by PT MNA's [Merpati Nusantara Airlines] Twin Otters and other light aircraft, including transport undertaken by the government, private concerns or missionaries, and also by Indonesian Air Force Hercules aircraft.

Since the beginning of the Third Five-Year Development Plan, the government has increased the airstrip capability for F-27's and F-28's, including the Merauke airport, which now is in the process of being completed.

Irian Jaya is the province having the most airfields in Indonesia, with 258 altogether. These have been developed by the government, the community and missionaries, who are active in the field of religious training.

Of that number, 33 are owned by the government and 201 by missionaries. Six others, spread throughout the 9 provincial districts, are privately owned by the inhabitants.

F-27 aircraft are able to land at each of the following airfields: Mokmer, Biak, Sentani, Jayapura, Nibire, Fak Fak (Timika), Rendani, Manokwari, Sorong, Merauke and the Wamena airfield in Jayawijaya District.

F-28 aircraft can land at Sentani, Jefman (Sorong) and Timika/Tembagapura. DC-9's, DC-10's and the Airbus A300 can land at the Mokmer-Biak airport.

F-27 aircraft cannot yet land at the Serui airfield in Yapen Waropen District and the Torea airfield in Fak Fak District.

Since 1975-76, F-28 aircraft have been able to land at the Sentani/Jayapura airport. It is now planned to upgrade this facility to accommodate DC-9's

This is very significant for this provincial city's airport, so that it can handle the flow of passengers and goods for domestic and foreign routes.

The Sentani airport also has the function of serving the Port Moresby (Papua New Guinea)-Jayapura air route each week.

The terminal building also needs to be expanded since in its present condition it no longer has the capability for accommodating the flow of passengers. The Sentani terminal building is this province's flight center, and even all of the missions' aircraft are in Sentani.

At the present time there are 50 aircraft in the local air transport fleet in Irian Jaya. These are owned by nine airlines, which conduct operations to connect the cities of the other districts as well as sub-district towns and villages in the interior.

Airline companies which own these aircraft are PT Merpati Nusantara Airlines, PT Airfast, which has six BN-2's, one DC-3 and one F-27, the Associated Mission Aviation (AMA), having six Cessna-185's, and the Missionary Aviation Fellowship (MAF), with four Cessna-185 aircraft, four Cessna-206's, two Aero Commanders and three helicopters. All of these are utilized in helping the regional government transport basic goods and strategic materials to Irian Jaya's interior.

Further, the Seventh Day Adventists (SDA) own two Cessna-185's and one Aero Commander. Bali Air (Bouraq) owns two Cessnas for transport to the interior in Paniai District. PT Indonesian Air Transport (IAT) owns three aircraft, namely one BN-2, a Piper Aztek and a Piper Navajo. PT Dirgantara operates three planes, namely an F-27 and two helicopters.

GIA serves domestic air transport routes while MNA and missions working in Irian Jaya take care of local trasport.

GIA, covering domestic routes, serves Jayapura-Biak-Ambon-Ujungpandang round trip flights every day, Sorong-Ambon-Ujungpandang-Menado round trip flights 7 days a week and Jayapura-Timika (Fak Fak)-Ambon-Denpassar (Bali) flights once a week.

MNA, covering local routes, serves the Jayapura-Biak Districts five times a week with F-27's and DHC-6's, Jayapura-Yapen Waropen (Serui) via Biak three times a week with the DHC-6, Jayapura-Biak-Manokwari-Sorong-Fak Fak with the DHC-6 four times per week, and Jayapura-Wamena (Baliem Valley) with the DHC-6 and F-27 four times per week.

Air transport to the interior is handled by DHC-6's and other small aircraft (Cessnas and Aero Commanders) once a week each for the following routes: Biak-Timika, Biak-Numfor, Biak-Serui, Nabire-Illaga, Nabire-Mulia, Nabire-Enarotali, Nabire-Waghete and Nabire-Moanamani.

The following flights are made once a week with DHC-6's: Manokwari-Bintuni, Manokwari-Kebar, Manokwari-Numfor, Merauke-Bade-Kepi-Merauke-Tanahmerah, Merauke-Okaba, Merauke-Kimaan and Merauke-Mindiptanah.

Twin Otters are used twice a week for Jayapura-Sarmi and Sorong-Fak Fak flights.

This carrier potential in Irian Jaya does not include the air transport capability of the Indonesian Air Force, which performs operations for the Department of Defence and Security and which plays a very large role in overcoming the difficulties in transporting foodstuffs and building materials in the interior of Irian Jaya.

PROBLEMS ARISE FROM BATAM ACCORD WITH SINGAPORE

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 20 Jul 82 pp 1, 5, 7

[Excerpts] On 3 July 1982, for the first time, Solichin G. P., Sesdalopbang (Development Operations Control Secretary), toured the national project for the development of the Batam Island industrial region.

There is a commitment between Indonesia and Singapore through an intergovernmental cooperative agreement to develop Batam Island. The agreement, which was made on 31 October 1980, is 20 months old by now. Singapore's minister of trade and industry who signed the agreement in the name of his government has changed posts again, becoming minister of defense. Although Sudjatmiko, Indonesian ambassador in Singapore who signed in the name of the Indonesian government, still holds his post, certainly there is not much which he can do. On top of that, the Batam Authority representation at the Indonesian embassy in Singapore closed on 22 March.

In a conversation with SINAR HARAPAN, Solichin said, "I came here because Batam has a very large potential, which is hoped can become a national contribution. I want to see developments in the field. Until now, progress has been quite gratifying. There is nothing to prevent the target from being reached in accordance with the time schedule."

He did not mention, for example, the unfinished state of construction of the airport at Batu Besar. Existing landing facilities can only accommodate Skyvan or Cassa [sic] aircraft. With a length of 850 m and a breadth of 30 m, the runway is to be expanded to a length of 2,500 m and a breadth of 45 m. At the time of President Adam Malik's working visit to Batam on 1 September 1981, the airport project, which was being carried out by PT Balfour Beatty Sakti, had to be finished no later than March, 1982, according to the report of the Batam Authority management to the vice president.

When Prof Dr B. J. Habibie, chairman of the Authority for the Development of the Batam Island Industrial Region, who also is state minister for research and technology, observed conditions at the airport project prior to the control secretary's visit, he could not contain his anger seeing the unfinished state of the project. He would not accept the reasons put forward by the project supervisor for the unfinished state of affairs.

"Where did you graduate from?" Habibie asked angrily. "It absolutely must be finished on time," Habibie stated firmly. Sudarsono, chairman of the Batam Island Executive Board, who helped to explain why the project was unfinished, was pushed aside by Habibie. He did not want to hear all the reasons put forward.

One of the reasons suggested was "uncertainty about rainfall." Reports on weather conditions from Singapore weather stations only 20 km from Batam could not be utilized. If it did not rain in Singapore, that did not necessarily mean it would not rain in Batam.

The same reason was suggested to Solichin during his visit to the unfinished airport project. Ibrahim Ajie, former commander of the Siliwangi military region, accompanied the secretary.

With his "PT Kurnia Jaya Alam," Ajie obtained the job of completing the road to the airport, connecting Sei Baloi, Nongsa and Kabil for a distance of 35 km (7 m wide). A portion of the road is already finished.

Solichin and Ajie asked the project supervisor a lot of questions. Solichin's reaction to the answers he received was merely to shake his head.

The Ladi River Bridge (175 m long and 7 m wide) was also left undone. The bridge, which was built by PT Hutama Karya, was broken down in the center.

Evidently Solichin did not want to go into the technical details in the field; his attention was directed more to the administrative and management process for the development of the island. As he pointed out, "I ascertained that to this point, the existing bureaucracy still has had too much weight, so that it did not support the rapid implementation of Batam Island's development. Certainly this is not the bureaucracy on Batam Island, but national bureaucracy."

Offering his conclusions as a result of his observations, Solichin said, "In order to guarantee that the final, desired objective will be reached, my conclusion is that the Batam Authority must obtain a broader competence, a broader authority for fulfilling the basic plan which the central government has laid down."

His explanation of what he meant by a broader competence was to equip the Batam Authority with the necessary rights and powers to be able to complete the licensing of investments for those having interests in the island and to direct attention to investing capital there as quickly and appropriately as possible, lest those foreign capital investors make telling differentiations between the service they receive in Singapore and that which they receive in Batam.

According to Sudarsono, in Singapore the process for the interests of the investors can be completed in a 2-week period, but for Batam it can be months.

For its implementation, he said, "I believe departmental/agency units should be formed which are involved in the development of the Batam industrial region. They should be established on the island and should be able to decide all matters completely."

Batam Island, with an area of 415 square kilometers, directly faces Singapore, which is about 20 km away. From either location one can view the other's shores with unaided eyes, only limited by the Singapore Strait.

According to statistics, total population in 1971 was only about 9,000. It consisted of fishermen, farmers and laborers. Since the beginning of Batam's development, the population has grown quickly.

In 1978 a population of about 16,000 was recorded. The results of the 1981 census showed the total population grew to 22,000. In 1982 it is estimated it will be about 26,000. Through Presidential Executive Order No 41, 1973, the island was upgraded to an industrial region with the Batam Authority as administrator. Then, with the decision of Presidential Executive Order No 41, 1978, the entire territory of the island was specified as a bonded warehouse region.

The master plan for the development of the island itself has passed through two consultants. Pertamina [State Oil and Natural Gas Co] made the first plan in 1972 through the "Pertamina Nissho Iwai Bechtel" consultants. Planning emphasis was directed more to industries which supported offshore oil exploration, oil refineries and Pertamina's logistic base itself.

Only in 1976 did the government become directly involved. Pertamina's master plan was revamped through the Crux consultants from the United States. The new study that Crux made in 1978 was broader in scope, involving physical administration, utilities and facilities, as well as the layout, through the year 2004.

According to the study, by 2004 Batam's total population will be 670,352. Of that total, 283,224 will make up the work force. On the basis of those demographic figures, plans for facilities, utilities and land use were then formulated.

About 4,500 ha were set aside as a site for investment, industrial activity and trade. Cipta Karya [Directorate General for Urban Development], together with the Batam Authority, made the working plan and implemented it. The pattern of priorities was arranged according to primary and secondary functions in three development regions, namely Batu Ampar, Sekupang and Pantai Timur.

At Batu Ampar alone industries which supported oil exploration activities and a steel plate industry have been established. In addition, there also is a permanent port, with a 1,000 m-long pier capable of accommodating ships displacing 3,000 DWT. This port will be upgraded so that it will be capable of accommodating ships of 10,000 DWT. A temporary dock 150 m long can also accommodate 3,000-DWT ships. Closed storage space totaling 9,000 sq m and open storage of 18,000 sq m has been set aside.

Also under consideration is making Batu Ampar a general cargo port for ships having displacements of about 15,000 DWT, a passenger port and a special port for industry.

Sekupang is for light industry, like small ships and limited industries. Moreover, it also has a port with a pier 60 m long, which is capable of accommodating 3,000-DWT ships. Soon it will be expanded for 6,000-DWT ships and later for ships having displacements of 10,000 DWT. It is also being considered to make it a passenger, oil and general cargo port. Existing closed storage space totals 9,000 sq m; there is 1 hectare of open storage space.

Pantai Timur or Kabil is for heavy oil and related industries, as well as light and intermediate industries. It also has a port for container ships over 15,000 DWT, coal, tankers and a container terminal, and it is an ocean port. The existing dock can accommodate 3,000-DWT ships. The pier is 60 m long. At the present time warehouse space totals 3,000 sq m; open storage space amounts to 10,000 sq m.

To support all of this, there are preparations for housing in each region, electricity, telecommunications, highways and water purification, some of which already exist.

Existing roads extend 200 km. Roads which are called arteries and collector roads are given priority, i.e., the road from Sekupang to Batu Ampar, 20 km long and 7 m wide, has been paved with asphalt. The road from Singai Baloi to the airport, Nongsa and Kabil, 35 km long and 7 m wide, is under construction. Roads in the Sekupang and Batu Ampar regions, 33 km long and 7 m wide, are just about to be paved with asphalt.

When all of this is completed, there is no denying it will compete with Singapore and later certainly decrease Singapore's income, which is generated from its services. If Indonesia becomes capable of making transshipments itself and of exporting directly to consumer countries, that would be a great loss of income to Singapore. Until now, Singapore has obtained hundreds of millions of dollars in income from its service-oriented role.

Perhaps it can be said that for Singapore the agreement which it signed with Indonesia for economic cooperation in Batam's development is nothing more than a diplomatic conventionality.

Article 3 of the joint agreement states, "Both parties agree to take steps to facilitate the supply of funds and banking services needed for Batam's development, in so far as they are in accordance with the regulatory arrangements in force in the respective countries."

It is this third article that presents complications for Singapore. The investment of Singapore funds in Batam means the acceleration of the growth and development rate. The more quickly all the facilities are completed and available on the island, the more rapidly Singapore's status of living from its services sector will be threatened.

Then, Article 1 of the joint agreement also states: "(1) Taking cognizance of the trade arrangements in the respective countries, both parties agree to develop simple and mutually beneficial standing procedures for cargo traffic, payments and their transfer between Batam and Singapore."

"(2) In the framework of a mutually beneficial increase in international trade, both parties will develop procedures for the marketing of goods and trade services, with the possibility of facilitating joint efforts, and, as far as possible, will make use of Batam's transshipment and warehouse facilities."

The heart of that agreement is at odds with Singapore's own interests. How is it possible that Singapore will share its profits when it can implement all of the efforts and activities in that field itself?

The evidence for this almost 2 years after the agreement was signed is that Singapore has not helped develop the island by investing its capital there. Singapore has invested its capital on its own land by expanding its mainland region with reclamations along the coast facing Batam. In addition to the miles and miles of reclamations, Singapore is multiplying and expanding the facilities of its services sector, such as the container port and other maritime transshipment facilities, as well as industry.

Section 3 of Article 13 states: "The agreement can be cancelled by either party by written notice 6 months in advance of said cancellation."

In light of the benefits it will obtain from the 5-year agreement, Singapore clearly will not cancel it unilaterally. This is especially true since Singapore knows very well that Indonesia not only hopes for funds for Batam's development, but also advisers, experts and technicians. That is the reason we must quickly and attentively consider what has occurred, what is taking place and what will happen in the future.

OIL EXPLORATION WITH SINGAPORE NOT YET READY

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 4 Aug 82 p 2

[Article: "Cooperation Between Pertamina and Singapore Company Not Yet Ready Ready"]

[Text] Jakarta, KOMPAS--A plan for cooperation in the production of oil and natural gas between Pertamina [National Oil Producing Company] and the Promet Energy Co Limited of Singapore is not yet fully developed up to the present. There have just been a few ideas exchanged and up to now there is no final agreement.

This was stated by Sukastoyo, from the Community Relations Office of the Pertamina Office for Cooperation with Foreign Contractors (BKKA), who was answering questions from a KOMPAS reporter on Monday [3 August]. The statement was made in connection with a report from the daily newspaper, THE ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL, published on 29 July.

According to Sukastoyo, Promet Energy Ltd has been in touch with the BKKA in an effort to develop the possibility of cooperation further. However, up to now no concrete steps have been taken and still less has a cooperative agreement, Pertamina would make the agreement public. "It is very regrettable that such a press release was issued by Promet Energy Ltd. That can be damaging to themselves!" Sukastoyo commented.

According to the Community Relations Office of BKKA, areas for possible cooperation have been mentioned. Originally, this area had been turned over to a foreign company, but after a certain length of time had passed and no oil was found, the area was returned to the Indonesian government.

THE ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL reported on Thursday [30 July] that the Promet area was a part of the 300,000 square kilometers previously turned over to the Philips Petroleum Co of the U. S. Seismic prospecting work was carried out in the area between 1979 and 1974. The results were exciting, but no further work was carried out in the area.

Promet Energy Ltd is a company established in Hong Kong with branches in Singapore, Malaysia, and Indonesia. In Singapore Promet Energy Ltd is an operational branch. About 80 percent of the shares in the company are held by Promet Berhad [Limited], a rapidly developing Malaysian company. The remaining shares are held by Gannanoque Ltd of Great Britain. Gannanoque is an affiliate of Gaffney, Cline and Associates, a U. S. international energy consulting company which is acting as a technical adviser to Promet Energy.

The director of operations of Promet Berhad of Malaysia, Brian Chang, reportedly wants to establish an oil management company in Southeast Asia. In the company's annual report for 1981 Principal Director Datuk Ibrahim Mohamed said that Promet Energy will lead the way in developing a petroleum field producing oil and gas in Southeast Asia. Through Promet Pte [Private] Ltd the company group has become one of the five large Singapore oil drilling companies.

Brian Chang has not yet said anything else and will not do so until Pertamina signs the contract. However, a Promet source states that the company has agreed to pay $60 million for the exploration and development of a 18,000 square kilometer concession in the offshore area of the Aru Archipelago, near Irian Jaya.

From another source it is stated that the drilling of the exploratory wells probably will not be undertaken until 1983. An oil industry analyst said that this would be the first time a Southeast Asian energy company completed a production sharing agreement in Indonesia. This is because exploration and production throughout Asia up to now have been dominated by U. S. or European oil companies.

Brian Chang refers to this development as a "major coup." Moreover, the oil concession will have been obtained without any experience in the oil-drilling field and in the face of many other applicants. He says that the concession will be the first one to be won by Promet Energy, which was only established last August. Meanwhile, McGee, who is general manager of the Singapore and Malaysian branches, says that the concession has been obtained one and one-half years ahead of plan.

According to present plans, when the contract is signed, Promet will pay an advance fee and other bonuses if oil and gas are found. Promet will carry out the exploration activity and pay for production and operations costs. If oil or gas is found, Promet will receive all of the production until all costs have been paid back. After that the oil will be divided, with 65 percent for Pertamina and 35 percent for Promet. If gas is found, 35 percent will be turned over to Pertamina and the remaining 65 percent will be for Promet. Beside that it is mentioned in the contract that Promet can claim 10 percent higher costs than those actually incurred.

Particularly with regard to this last-mentioned point, a Pertamina oil expert says that Promet may be mistaken. In addition to the fact that plans have not yet been completed at all, production sharing contracts between Indonesia/-Pertamina and foreign contractors now in effect are for a division of oil on an 85:15 basis and for gas on a 65:35 basis.

ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH FRANCE REPORTED

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 6 Jul 82 p 10

[Text] Michel Jobert, French minister of state for foreign trade, who arrived in Jakarta Sunday for a 48-hour visit, met with President Soeharto and other Indonesian officials Monday.

Their discussion centered on reciprocal trade matters, including quotas for Indonesian textile exports, new policies concerning non-oil products, which require foreign countries to export goods to Indonesia in order to purchase local goods, and those new regulations which require that goods which Indonesia purchases should be transported by Indonesian-flag ships.

It is apparent that Indonesia--the fifth most densely populated country in the world and OPEC's seventh [largest] oil producer--is trying to decrease its dependence on trade with the United States and Japan and is now making approaches to the EEC, especially France and West Germany.

Jobert is the third French minister to visit Indonesia since the socialists came into power in France. Claude Cheysson [minister of external relations] will make a visit in the fall, and a visit by President Francois Mitterrand is also expected, perhaps next February.

French exports to Indonesia, especially automobiles, aircraft, chemicals, electrical equipment, military equipment, including Exocet guided missiles, and other general requirements, have increased from 1,733 million francs ($254 million) in 1980 to 688 million francs [sic] ($686 million) in 1981.

French imports from Indonesia, namely non-oil products like coffee, tapioca, rubber, leather and several kinds of textiles, also increased about 10 percent last year, although total Indonesian exports of these products dropped 37 percent in the same period.

Although the relationship is limited, French companies have obtained various large contracts in Indonesia since 1981. Last year there were contracts for a paper mill, a methanol plant, a cement factory and an artificial fertilizer plant.

This year contracts have been signed for a perfume factory, a generator station and a steel-processing plant. A French company at the present time is building the Cengkareng international airport, located outside the capital.

Approximately 75 percent of Indonesia's budget is based on income from oil and liquified natural gas [LNG].

The French oil company, Total, in cooperation with the Japanese company, Impex, is the second largest oil producer in Indonesia, with a production of 190,000 barrels per day and 130 million cubic feet (about 13 million cubic meters) LNG per day. This company is now making test bores in Kalimantan and Irian Jaya.

EAST GERMAN EFFORTS TO STEP UP TRADE, COOPERATION

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 30 Jul 82 p 11

[Excerpts] Radius Prawiro, minister of trade and cooperatives, received Dr Heinz Warzecha, German Democratic Republic (East German) deputy minister for industry, machinery division, Thursday in Jakarta.

After the meeting, Warzecha said to reporters that the purpose of his visit to Indonesia was to attend the opening of Greater Jakarta Week and at the same time to discuss increased cooperation between the two countries, particularly in the economic and trade sectors.

In order to speed up the development process in Indonesia, East Germany is offering technological assistance, manpower training and technology transfer. East Germany intends to "provide a share in Indonesia's development," he said.

Darry Salim, director of foreign trade relations, said that the balance of trade between Indonesia and East Germany in recent years has favored Indonesia.

Primarily, Indonesia exports rubber to East Germany while it imports fertilizer and chemicals from there.

According to Salim, the East Germans are interested in helping Indonesia in developing the sugar industry.

In the meeting, Minister of Trade and Cooperatives Prawiro invited the East Germans to take part in tenders by cooperating with national private companies. The minister also explained that in the Fourth Five-Year Development Plan Indonesia will develop industry in order to support agriculture and also to create new job opportunities.

Prawiro said that if the East Germans intend to take part in tenders, they should direct their attention to technologies which are labor intensive and which increase production. He also invited the East Germans to study Indonesia's economic development, so that they can participate in the national development.

The East Germans did not have any objections in regard to the Indonesian government's policy of linking imports to exports of Indonesian commodities. In order to step up trade between the two countries, the East German's made an offer to Indonesia to participate in the trade exhibition in Leipzig, to be held in 1983.

According to data from the Department of Trade and Cooperatives' Public Affairs Section, the balance of trade between Indonesia and East Germany in 1981 favored Indonesia. Indonesian exports to East Germany for the first semester in 1981 were recorded as $5.76 million, while Indonesian imports from East Germany were $2.7 million, showing a $3.6 million surplus.

Meanwhile, in a meeting with Minister of Industry Ir A. R. Suhud Thursday, Warzecha obtained information that broad opportunities are still available to industrialized countries, including the Eastern Bloc, for opening up joint ventures in Indonesia.

Dr Warzecha paid a complimentary call on the minister of industry in order to offer East German industrial products. This was in line with efforts to review economic relations between the two countries, which had slowed up for such a long time after 1965.

Prior to the New Order period, East Germany participated in Indonesia's industrial development, among other things in the construction of the Madukismo sugar factory in Yogyakarta and the spinning mill in Palembang. Preparations are now being made for these two plants to be rehabilitated and expanded. The visit of the East German minister has a close relation to this plan, besides being to offer other industrial services.

This Saturday the East German deputy minister for construction of machine tools and processing machinery will leave for the spinning mill in Palembang. In the afternoon he will open the East German pavilion in the Greater Jakarta Week arena and on Sunday he will head for Singapore before returning home.

ESTIMATED DAMAGES FROM MT GALUNGGUNG ERUPTIONS

Jakarta SINAR HARAPAN in Indonesian 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpt] Damages as a result of the eruptions of Mt Galunggung from 5 April 1982 until the most recent eruption have totaled 18,345,126,000 rupiahs. Among those areas affected, agriculture was truck the hardest, with losses reaching 10,407,732,000 rupiahs.

Fisheries had losses of 2,811,077,800 rupiahs, animal husbandry 344,308,000 rupiahs, plantations 2,150,280,000 rupiahs, forest enterprises 2,567,817,000 rupiahs, cooperatives 30,247,000 rupiahs and industrial concerns 33,655,000 rupiahs.

Meanwhile structural damages included 1.016 billion rupiahs for roads and bridges and 1,297,636,180 rupiahs for other constructions. Thus, according to Apang Sofyan, BA, public relations chief of the Tasikmalaya regional government, to date approximately 20 billion rupiahs in overall losses have been recorded.

Rice, secondary and garden crops were buried under sand and ashes from Mt Galunggung.

Paddy land totaling 25,311 hectares was affected, with a production loss of 45,916 tons. This equates to a 459.16 million-rupiah loss. Non-irrigated rice fields totaling 259 hectares were affected at a 298-ton production loss, the equivalent of 2.18 million rupiahs.

Other secondary crops affected, like corn and cassava, totaled 20,065 hectares, resulting in a production loss of 67,625.20 tons. This equates to a 323,392,000-rupiah loss altogether. There were 8,408 hectares in garden crops affected (salak fruit, citrus fruit, bananas, vegetables and others), resulting in a 15,576-ton production loss at a value of 255.2 million rupiahs. So stated Apang Sofyan in his explanation to SINAR HARAPAN Thursday.

INDONESIAN FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES DECLINE

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 4 Aug 82 p 1

[Article: "Coordinating Minister for Economics, Finance, and Industry Widjojo Nitisastro: Foreign Exchange Reserves Between $5 and $6 Billion; Devaluation Won't Take Place"]

[Excerpts] Jakarta, KOMPAS--Indonesian foreign exchange reserves are currently fluctuating between $5 and $6 billion. The reserves are held by the Bank Indonesia.

Coordinating Minister for Economics, Finance, and Industry and Chairman of BAPPENAS [National Development Planning Body] Widjojo Nitisastro was answering questions from reporters after he gave a forecast of future developments before those attending the Third Plenary Session of HIPMI [Association of Young Indonesian Businessmen], which was formally opened by Vice President Adam Malik in Jakarta on Tuesday [4 August].

He went on to say that foreign exchange reserves in the business world, such as those held by banks, were sufficiently large. What is usually published by the government is the total amount of foreign exchange reserves held by the Bank Indonesia. Foreign exchange reserves held by the business world and by banks in particular are not made public. Widjojo said: "If the foreign exchange reserves held by the Bank Indonesia and those held by the business world were added together on a national basis, the total would be quite large."

He indicated that, according to present estimates, Indonesian foreign exchange reserves held at the beginning of fiscal year 1981/1982 totaled $7.3 billion. As of January, 1982, they totaled $6.5 billion.

According to the minister, the total foreign exchange reserves held by the government were large enough to take care of more than 4 months of imports. "So those who say that the foreign exchange reserve standard is for a period of 6 months of imports are wrong. In general the standard used in the world is for 3 months of imports," Widjojo added.

Asked about the possibility of a devaluation, Widjojo said that the government is continuing to hold to the system of controlled development which has been in effect since the KENOP [First National Economic Conference] in 1978. "Continuous devaluation will not take place again. The system in effect since the KENOP in 1978 will continue to be maintained," Widjojo said.

INDONESIAN COFFEE EXPORT QUOTA

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 3 Aug 82 p 2

[Article: "Indonesia to Direct Purchases of Sugar and Soy Beans Away from Brazil"]

[Excerpts] Palembang, KOMPAS--Indonesia, which currently imports sugar and soy beans from Brazil, will direct its imports of these commodities to other countries, unless Brazil assists in obtaining an increased coffee export quota for Indonesia.

The deputy minister for cooperatives, Bustanil Arifin, made this statement on Monday [3 August] at the Office of the Governor in Palembang on the occasion of the signature of a cooperation agreement between the Regional Coffee Affairs Office [KUD-KOPI] and the Association of Indonesian Coffee Exporters (AEKI) of South Sumatra.

He said that a team composed of several cabinet ministers and the director general and representatives of AEKI would go to Brazil to press for an increased coffee export quota. This team had already visited that country before the International Coffee Organization (ICO), meeting in London in September, had already determined coffee export quotas for 1982/1983 for the coffee producing countries. Bustanil Arifin, as deputy minister for cooperatives and chief of the Bureau of Logistical Affairs [BULOG], is planning on traveling with the team. He said that if the Indonesian coffee export quota is increased with Brazilian help, Indonesia will continue to import sugar and soy beans as well as other commodities produced by that country. He said that Indonesia in 1981/1982 had a 138,000 ton coffee export quota from the ICO. This quota was far below its production and export capacity. The quota is for the year ending in September. He asked exporters who were assigned a portion of the quota, who may be awiting for prices to recover, to carry out their export transactions quickly.

According to Bustanil Arifin, a number of Brazilian coffee experts have conducted research on the Indonesian coffee situation. They considered that some of the grades were not good and needed to be improved further. However, some of the Indonesian coffee they examined was praised for its good quality. In connection with improvement in the quality of coffee four coffee producing areas, Bali, East Java, Lampung [South Sumatra], and Aceh, are eligible for obtaining assistance in obtaining coffee processing equipment valued at almost Rp 2.0 billion. As far as South Sumatra is concerned, it remains to be determined which regency will obtain the processing equipment.

South Sumatran coffee exporters are optimistic that the efforts of the team to obtain an increased Indonesian coffee export quota for 1982/1983 will be successful. According to the deputy chairman of AEKI in South Sumatra, Dr Burma Bur, Brazil, as the largest coffee producer, has been given a quota of 30 percent of the 5.5 million sacks of the world coffee export quota set by the ICO. If this quota is lowered a little, for example 2.5 percent, and assigned to Indonesia, it will not cause much of a loss to Brazil. On the other hand, for Indonesia, which has a coffee surplus of about 130,000 tons, this would mean a great deal in helping coffee farmers.

COAL PORT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT SIGNED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 5 Jul 82 p 2

[Text] A contract for the development of a coal port in Tarahan, South Sumatra, was signed last Thursday in Jakarta by Ch. Situmorang, chief director of PT Taba Bukit Asam, H. R. Williams, vice president of Dominion Bridge from Canada, and W. E. Anstead, director of Balfour Beatty from the United Kingdom. The latter two companies have formed a joint venture for developing the port, which is located 6 km south of Panjang harbor.

Ch. Situmorang said the contract signing was the first to be carried out in the framework of implementing the Bukit Asam Coal Mining and Transport Development Project (P4BA), which is coordinated by the Department of Communications and the Department of Mining and Energy. The purpose of the project is to provide the coal needed as fuel for PLTU Suralaya [Suralaya Steam-powered Electric Generator Project], which is located in Banten, at the western end of Java.

Financing of about 47.5 billion rupiahs is planned for the port construction, consisting of funds of 9.768 billion rupiahs, 47.4 million Canadian dollars and 8.572 million pounds sterling.

According to Situmorang, in the first stage the port's processing capacity will be 2.5 million tons per year, sufficient for meeting PLTU Suralaya's requirements at a level of 400 megawatts for each of two units. But that capacity can be developed to 5.5 million tons per year, to a maximum of 12 million tons per year.

The Tarahan port covers 44 hectares of land located at the edge of the Teluk Betung-Bakahuni highway.

Situmorang disclosed that construction of the port will be completed in 23 months or 700 days after the signing of the contract. After that, there will be a trial period for coal shipments from Tarahan to Suralaya, before being fully directed to PT Taba Bukit Asam.

In order to support the initial shipments of 2.5 million tons per year from Bukit Asam to Tarahan, each day 5 railroad trains approximately 650 m long and consisting of 40 cars will be used. Unloading of coal for each train will take about 1.5 hours. Special ships having displacements of 9,200 deadweight tons will be used to transport the coal from Tarahan to Suralaya. One ship per day or 272 trips per year will be required.

At the second stage, when the capacity increases to 5.5 million tons per year, 4 railroad trains per day will be used. Each train of 80 cars will be 1,300 m long. It is estimated that the time needed to unload the cargo will be 2 hours, while shipments of coal from Tarahan to Suralaya will be by the 9,200-DWT special ships. The ships will make 2 voyages a day or 600 per year.

The Tarahan port's final capacity of 12 million tons per year will be utilized when PLTU Suralaya, at a capacity of 3,100 Mw (400 Mw for each of four units) [sic], is fully operational.

About 1,500 workers per year will be needed during the construction period. When operations begin, approximately 100 workers will be required.

Other Information

KOMPAS obtained information from another source that the integrated project will cost about $1,335.9 million altogether. Specifically, $51.8 million for PT Bukit Asam's town development, $444.9 million for the mine, $216.3 million for the State Railways, $58.2 million for the Tarahan port, $4 million for the Kertapati port, $23.9 million for ocean transport and $6.6 million in other costs which will be assumed by the government. That is the basic capital. There is a reserve fund of $81.3 million, an escalator provision amounting to $218.3 million, working capital of $50.5 million and interest of $180.1 million.

The chief goal of the Bukit Asam project initially is to produce 3.225 million tons of coal per year, 2.44 million tons per year in particular for PLTU Suralaya's two 400-Mw units.

SRV TROOPS FORCE KAMPUCHEANS TO ACT AS SHIELDS

BK010346 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 30 Aug 82

[News commentary: "The Vietnamese Enemy in Moung District, Battambang Province, Has Launched a New Trick of Killing Our People by Forcing Them To Walk in Front of Its Troops"]

[Text] In Moung District, Battambang Province, since the beginning of August, the Vietnamese aggressors would force our people to walk in front of their troops whenever they went on operations in the jungle. In this way, landmines, punji stakes, automatic bows or punji pitfalls set by our army and guerrillas are there, these Khmer would be the victims in the place of the Vietnamese troops.

Moreover, they want to hoodwink our people into believing that it is not the Vietnamese aggressors but the Khmer who are attacking their own fellows, thus backing up the deceitful Vietnamese propaganda about a troop withdrawal from Kampuchea. When our army and guerrillas ambush the Vietnamese troops who walk behind the people, the people fled back home. Then the Vietnamese aggressors pursue, arrest and kill all of them and blame the Khmer for killing their own fellows.

This is an extremely criminal, barbarous and cunning trick used by the Vietnamese aggressors to massacre the Kampuchean people and exterminate the Kampuchean race. They have carried out this trick in order to kill two birds with one stone--massacre our Kampuchean people silently at will and put the blame for their crimes on the Democratic Kampuchean army and guerrillas.

However, the Kampuchean people know the Vietnamese well. The Kampuchean people are well aware that the Vietnamese aggressors are the archmurderers who massacre our Kampuchean people of all sexes and ages everywhere and everyday. Our Khmer people will never kill their own fellow Khmer. All of them pledge to unite as one man under the leadership of the Democratic Kampuchean Government and wage all forms of struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors until all of them are driven out of our Kampuchean territory.

FRENCH BIOLOGIST TEACHES LABORATORY PROCEDURES

BK011700 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 31 Aug 82

[Text] Professor (Michel Tibot), member of the Committee of the Third World Group and the Solidarity Committee With Kampuchea and professor in biology at Nantes, France, visited our Democratic Kampuchea from 3-25 August 1982.

When he arrived in Democratic Kampuchea, our cadres warmly welcomed this friendly guest. On the afternoon of 3 August 1982, Chhorn Hay, former secretary of state of the Ministry of Telecommunications of the Democratic Kampuchean Government; and Mrs (Vanny) sincerely and warmly met and held talks with the friendly guest. Our Democratic Kampuchean cadres were also present during these talks.

During his stay in Democratic Kampuchea for almost a month, Professor (Michel Tibot) instructed laboratory trainees on the analysis of urine, blood and excrement and so forth. He also visited various villages.

The friendly guest came away with the impression that our laboratory trainees are making efforts in their studies and clearly realize their duties at the rear of the battlefield in support of the frontline battlefield. The professor promised that when he returned to his country he would inform the French people about the real situation which he has seen in Democratic Kampuchea. He will make every effort to appeal for aid for the Kampuchean people, who are waging a just struggle against the Vietnamese enemy aggressors, expansionists, swallowers of territory and exterminators of the Kampuchean race. It should be noted that the Committee of the Third World Group and the Solidarity Committee With Kampuchea, through Professor (Michel Tibot), sent 48 crates of medicines and materials for laboratories to Democratic Kampuchea.

On 25 August 1982, the friendly guest successfully ended his visit to Democratic Kampuchea and safely returned to his fatherland.

DIPLOMATIC COURSE--A ceremony was held at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at 1430 on 6 September to close the fourth diplomatic course for 102 trainees. This course lasted 2 months. First, Comrade Sok An, chief of the cabinet of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and representative of the school committee, read a report on the course's activities and its successful outcome, which is responsive to the development of our diplomatic field in accordance with the party guideline. Later, Comrade Hun Sen, minister of foreign affairs, took the floor and praised the trainees for their great efforts, which have brought about a brilliant outcome. The comrade also advised trainees on the world situation and, particularly, on the enemy's perfidious maneuvers to destroy our Kampuchean revolution. Moreover, the comrade spoke on recent events, such as the coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea formed by the three traitorous ringleaders--Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan--under the leadership of Beijing in collusion with the U.S. imperialists in an attempt to conceal the heinous crimes of the Pol Pot corpse and renew the massacre of the Kampuchean people. The comrade exhorted the trainees to strive further to increase their knowledge both in their specialized fields and in the political field in order to contribute to the national construction and defense and to strengthen national unity and proletarian internationalist solidarity, particularly the alliance with Vietnam and Laos, which is the factor for victory of the Kampuchean revolution. In conclusion, representatives of both the male and female trainees took the floor and pledged to successfully apply their knowledge from this course in the service of our Angkor fatherland. MESSAGES ON CZECHOSLOVAKIA-LAOS TIES

Khamphai Boupha Message

BK061708 Vientiane KPL in English 0907 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Vientiane, 6 Sep (OANA/KPL)--Khamphai Boupha, acting minister for foreign affairs, on September 4, sent a message to congratulate his counterpart Bonuslav Chnoupek to hail the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the diplomatic relations between the LPDR and the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic.

The message highly appreciated the continual enhancement of the friendship relations and fraternal cooperation between the two countries which, in particular, have been strongly amplified since the visit of General Secretary K. Phomvihan to the CSSR in 1979 and that of G. Husak to the LPDR in 1980.

The telegram further expressed conviction that the fraternal friendship relations and the close cooperation between Laos and Czechoslovakia, according to the terms of friendship and cooperation treaty and basing on Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism, will be further consolidated for the interests of Lao and Czechoslovak peoples, for peace and socialism.

The Lao foreign minister further wished the Czechoslovak people to score new successes in implementing the current 5-year plan (1981-1985) as adopted by the 16th Congress of the CPC.

KHAN AND CLAUSEN MEET--Finance Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan, now leading a delegation to the joint meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund at Toronto in Canada, has had detailed talks with the president of World Bank, A. W. Calusen. Wideranging subjects of mutual interest were covered at the talks which mainly centered around Pakistan's economic progress at a time when the country's resources were under extreme pressure, partly due to an extensive multisector development plan and partly due to the increasing number of Afghan refugees in Pakistan on whose well-being huge funds were being spent. The finance minister in his lengthy session of talks with Clausen effectively explained the performance of Pakistan's economy owing to the judicious policy of social reforms, economic recovery, financial consolidation and reordering an investment priority. This performance was achieved despite the unfavourable international economic (?climate). The World Bank president described his meeting with Ghulam Ishaq Khan as extremely beneficial and enlightening and said he greatly appreciated the economic development of Pakistan. He also admired Pakistan's success in improving its balance of payments and restructuring its public investments, programs for the greater role for the private enterprize. The finance minister also held discussions with delegations of the United States and his counterparts from the Middle Eastern countries attending the meeting. [Column by Jesus Bigornia: "Foreign Hand Manipulates U.S. Opposition Men"]

[Excerpt] Following is a special report from our spy in Washington, D.C.:

"Faced by the reality of a warm welcome for President Marcos, opposition groups in the United States--manipulated by an unseen foreign hand--are now attacking frontally the Reagan administration and even the American people for extending an official invitation to the Philippines head of state. Suspected as left-leaning groups have mounted a vicious campaign against the White House because American officialdom has shown increasing affection for Mr Marcos because of his 'adherence to democratic principles and processes.'"

"Knowledgeable diplomatic observers say that thrust of the campaign of vilification launched by Filipino opposition groups appear to be that it is 'more desirable to be a vassal of the Kremlin than to remain "the valued ally of the free world,'" that the Philippines is viewed in American eyes. What is emerging today is an ideological drift carrying the so-called 'steak commando patriots' in the United States: opposition to making America stronger in the international political scene vis-a-vis Russian hegemony. Come to think of it, as Tourism Minister Jose 'Sunshine Joe' Aspiras is wont to say: If opposition elements in the United States brand pro-Marcos countrymen as 'tuta,' the appropriate retort should be, who is holding the leash on their collar?"

ENRILE APPROVES AWARD FOR SUBVERSIVE'S ARREST

HK080010 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 7 Sep 82

[Text] Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile has approved a reward of 100,000 pesos to any person who can furnish information leading to the arrest of one Noberto Gonzales. Gonzales is the alleged suspected leader of a terrorist group planning to conduct bombings on key selected targets in metrol Manila area. The Defense Ministry said that Noberto Gonzales is the chairman of the Central Committee of the Partido Demokratico Socialista ng Philipinas. He is reportedly now in Luzon together with other terrorist groups to carry out bombing activities.

Intelligence reports also indicated that Gonzales, along with other hard-core members of the MNLF, were responsible for the series of bombing attacks in Mindanao. He was also tagged as the principal suspect in the bombing attacks staged by the April 6 Liberation Movement in metro Manila in 1980.

Government lawyers, led by Solicitor-General Estelito Mendoza, opposed yesterday the grant of bail to persons detained for crimes against national security. Mendoza said their release on bail will frustrate the right of the state to self-preservation. Mendoza and his panel declared this in opposing before the Supreme Court the petition to bail filed by District Customs Collector (Sultan Abdullah Ali Pagasun). (Pagasun) is under detention since arrest last July 14 for alleged rebellion activities. Mendoza said (Pagasun) is a ranking member of the MNLF and was engaged in supplying arms, finances and supplies for the MNLF.

INTERVIEW WITH FORMER PRESIDENT DIOSDADO MACAPAGAL

Part I

HK280222 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Aug 82 pp 7, 14

[Feature: Part I of "An Interview With Former President Diosdado Macapagal"]

[Text] 1. Q. How would you assesss the current state of the legal oppositionists: Do you think the legal opposition can dislodge President Marcos in an election? Do you think the legal opposition is still relevant within the context of present political structure and development?

A. There are two or three kinds of legal oppositionists. The first is the real opposition comprising the parties and groups in the United Democratic Organization, or UNIDO. The second is the false or pseudo opposition whose leaders are for President Marcos and his system, refrain from criticizing the Marcoses, or have served in the Cabinet or other high positions under martial rule, under martial rule, such as the Batasang Pambansa official opposition, the SPD [Social Democratic Party], or the Roy NP [Nacionalista Party]. A third is the dissent of the church on moral considerations alone.

From the viewpoint of dislodging Marcos in an election, only the first warrants consideration and assessment. Even the true opposition cannot, under present circumstances, dislodge the regime because the subsisting apparatus of power built under martial rule includes the Marcos-controlled Comelec [Commission on Elections], which has assumed the role of proclaiming victorious the candidates whom the regime wants to be declared as electoral winners, irrespective of the true will of the voters.

Since the national aspiration is the restoration of democracy, a democratic opposition such as the Unido can never be irrevelant. For one thing, its leadership has adopted civil disobedience on a selective basis as a prime activity. Although used peacefully, this undertaking will help in galvanizing the people's will to assert their rights--a form of mass conditioning that is necessary for the success of any type of opposition to oppressive rule.

2. Q. How about the Liberal Party [LP]? What is its present thrust? How does the LP view the current political situation? Is LP prepared to meet the KBL [Kilusang Bagong Lipunan] in an elections?

A. The LP has adopted a two-fold policy under martial rule: (1) Of it not to participate as a party in the rigged so-called "elections" and other democratic exercises held under the authoritarian regime in order not to recognize the legitimacy of the regime in any way and (2) instead of participating in the fraudulent democratic exercises which could be construed as recognizing the legitimacy of the regime by operating within its system, the party leaders have performed valuable oppositionist roles in collaboration with other dissenters in order to resist the regime as well as to assist the party supporters in the "elections" without tugging along the party by their individual acts.

3. Q. How about opposition leader and former Senator Benigno Aquino Jr.? Do you consider him relevant to the current political situation? In what way is he relevant/irrelevant in the present situation? Do you consider his political future certain/uncertain? Why?

A. Senator Aquino is not only relevant to the current political situation but remains to date as the top opposition leader who is justifiably feared most by Marcos. This explains why Marcos and his Batasang Pambansa disqualified Aquino from running against the president in the 1981 presidential election.

Aquino is the opposition figure who has the most capability of playing the most effective role in toppling the regime. In the light of the consensus that the regime cannot be toppled by sheer democratic means, it is Aquino, as imputed to him by the government itself, who possesses even from abroad at this stage the talent, capacity, and connections to overcome the problem of wherewithal beyond democratic means.

No one's political future is certain, but it is certain that as long as Aquino is active he will be a threat to the maintenance and perpetuation of the regime because of his resourcefulness and popularity.

4. Q. Reports said LP is not merging with the Nacionalista. What are the reasons? What is the present status of the LP-NP relationship? It is a coalition or not?

A. The LP is not in a position to merge with the NP--merger which will result in a new party--because it is believed that this will mean the dissolution of both the LP and NP, which is what Marcos has wanted all along. The LP is not disposed to play into Marcos' hands.

It is unjustifiable to dissolve the LP through a merger with another party because it is a great party with an eminent tradition. It has contributed vastly to the building of the republic and has in fact reared all those who became president of the republic except one.

In view of the LP two-fold policy under martial rule, the LP leaders have been dealing with the NP in their individual capacity. The party itself has accordingly not joined the NP-formed coalition but a good number of LP leading figures have joined the coalition. The PDP [expansion unknown]-Laban merger as reported is not a repudiation of the Laurel-led Unido coalition since both have ruled out joining the coalition.

The merger may also be a step in the direction of the contemplated grand coalition. Both the PDP and Laban did not join in the formation of the NP-led coalition pending the merger of the two. Their authorized representatives informed that if and when they join the projected grand coalition, it would be on the basis of agreements among the parties and groups concerned which would embrace accords on principles and policy planks, voting arrangements, and other customary stipulations in a coalition.

Vice-president, delegate Sarmiento, who is the coalition secretary general; and Congressman Neptali Gonzales, who is a regional vice-president. [sentence as published] Sarmiento is the LP deputy secretary general who ranks next only to executive Vice-President and acting President Jovito Salonga and Secretary General Aquino. It is said that Aquino has expressed support for the moves of coalition interim President Laurel. As the highest LP official, Salonga has not to my knowledge manifested his attitude towards the coalition. On my part, for reasons of health, I have not joined the coalition.

[Feature: Part II of "An Interview With Former President Diosdado Macapagal"]

[Text] 5. Q. How would you assess the current United Nationalist Democratic Organization and the merger of the PDP-Laban? What do you think their main thrusts, gains and losses in putting them? Do you think their directions are toward the formation of a grand coalition? Is the PDP-Laban merger a repudiation of the Laurel-led Unido? What is your concept of a grand coalition? Do you think the Laurel led grand coalition can meet effectively the KBL [expansion unknown] of Mr Marcos?

A. The United Nationalist Democratic Organization, sometimes referred to as Unido although most often as Unido, is a coalition between the NP [Nacionalista Party] and largely individual leaders from other parties and groups. There is no information to my knowledge as to which of the parties and groups within the Unido umbrella have joined the coalition as entities. The Unido is a step toward the objective of grand coalition among all real opposition parties and groups or most of them.

As to thrusts, Unido aims at nationalism which is not, however, spelled out specifically in its declaration of principles. Its brief program does not contain particulars by which to fairly assess where it stands ideologically. The PDP believes in pluralism or multiple parties. The Laban upholds the removal of U.S. bases and nculear weapons from the Philippines. On their respective gains and losses in putting themselves up, these being subjective internal affairs, it is for them to evaluate.

As envisaged, a grand coalition would be composed of the parties and groups in the Unido umbrella principally the LP [Liberal Party] and NP, the Laban and PDP. It would be open to all other genuine opposition parties and groups. It would be ruled by an executive committee composed of representatives representing the coalesced parties agreed upon for purposes of decisions and election of its officers. It would have a single leadership elected by the executive committee as well as single spokesman. As proposed by PDP,the coalesced parties and groups would also previously agree on policies and programs.

Next to the envisaged grand coalition, that formed bythe NP and led by Laurel would be considerably effective in meeting the KBL--more than in previous elections. In terms of maximal effectiveness, the contemplated grad coalition would be more effective than the current Laurel-led one. A reason for this is that the grand coalition would be composed of political parties and groups and not merely of individual leaders from such parties and groups other than the NP. Moreover, there is a move to elect Aquino as grand coalition president with S. Laurel as executive vice-president. An Aquino-led grand coalition would be the most effective in meeting Marcos and his KBL.

7. [As published] Q. What can you say about the PDP political platform and the Unido's 5-point program to dismantle martial law? Do you agree with the Laurel's concept of caretaker government? What is your concept of caretaker government?

A. The PDP program is impressive for its thrust to introduce meaningful reforms in government and the national life, which include: (1) Nationalistic approach against exploitation by "foreign colonizers, transnationals or domestic exploiters"; (2) utilization of natural resources and domestic credit only by Filipinos; (3) compulsory and free public education; (4) abolition of a professional army in favor of a citizen army; (5) stewardship concept of ownership; (6) weakening of big business in favor of small and medium enterprises.

The Laurel-led Unido 5-point program to dismantle martial law contains general objectives and principles to which one cannot disagree.

The Laurel caretaker government being anchored on the premise that "Marcos agrees"to the arrangement may be unrealizable because it is believed that Marcos would not agree to a caretaker government for a peaceful transition from authoritarianism to democracy. In the 1981 constitutional amendments, Marcos has already provided for his own mode of transition which is the 15-member Executive Committee headed by the prime minister, all of whom are his appointees.

Realistically, a caretaker government is only feasible if Marcos is forced out of office. In such event, the caretaker government will be determined by the group or groups instrumental in bringing about the change. In any event, the caretaker government should not last more than a year within which and as soon as possible it must conduct a free, honest, and orderly election for president of the Philippines and other essential officials of a democratic government in accordance with the properly applicable constitution.

[Text] 8. Q. What are your present activities? Are you writing a book, forming a new party, reorganizing an old one? Please tell something about your present activities and state of health.

A. I am recuperating from a heart ailment complicated by a respiratory complaint for which I was treated by the Texas Heart Institute in collaboration with my local physicians. My recovery is being satisfactorily maintained but I have been constrained to limit my activities.

I have accordingly withdrawn from the chairmanship of the Unido Advisory Council, and have adverted the LP leaders that with the setting up of its new Salonga-Aquino leadership following the demise of LP President Roxas I am withdrawing from the active discharge of my party role as titular head.

Within the constraints of my health, it is my intention, however, to continue helping in the liberation struggle in a nonpartisan capacity as former president of the Philippines, president of the 1971 constitutional convention which reconvened last March 31, 1981, and honorary chairman of the Interim National Assembly Association (INAA) which is composed of delegates to the convention and members of the 7th Congress of the Philippines. I am presently writing some notes on the history and labor of the 1971 constitutional convention.

9. Q. The 1971 constitutional convention has drafted a new constitution. Are you at liberty to describe its contents? What are its salient points, features, philosophy, and thrusts? Could you spare us a draft copy?

A. The main task of the reconvened 1971 constitutional convention is the approval of a draft constitution being prepared by a special committee. The draft is being looked over by members of the special committee but until it is ready for submittal to the convention itself, it is regretted that, considering the circumstances under which the convention and the special committee work, the procedure that is being followed, as well as the contents of the draft itself, its contents, features, philosophy, and thrusts cannot yet be publicly disclosed and discussed and copies of it released.

Part IV

HK310246 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 30 Aug 82 p 7

[Feature: Part IV of "An Interview With Former President Macapagal"]

[Text] 10. Q. After completing the draft, what will be made to the constitution? How would you prepare the final draft? What will be the procedures? When will the plenary meeting of the delegates be held?

A. The first draft is the responsibility of a subcommittee. After formulation by the subcommittee, the draft goes to the main special committee which will make the final draft. After being refined by the special committee, the draft goes to the convention itself. After the various committees involved are given an opportunity to look over the draft and make suggestions agreeable to the main special committee and the convention leadership believes that the final draft will meet the approval of the convention, it will be submitted to the latter in a plenary meeting for final delinization and approval. The convention will likewise decide what will be done with the approved new constitution.

11. Q. What are the implications of a new constitution to the current political situation? What do you think will be the reaction of Mr Marcos to the drafting of a new constitution?

A. Under the proper circumstances, a new constitution can prevent a violent transition or radically abbreviate its duration. The new constitution may be taken into consideration in determining under what constitution the first free, honest, and orderly election after authoritarian rule will be conducted. One is hard put to surmise the reaction of Mr Marcos to the drafting of a new constitution. Only he can tell what he will do at the time the drafting of a new charter materializes.

The imperative need of the nation is national reconciliation for the avoidance of nationwide fratricidal strife. Such turmoil looms as the unavoidable end of the Marcos regime draws near because the mode of succession he has provided in the 1981 constitutional amendments is not acceptable to the bulk of the people. It is not acceptable because his successor is thereunder chosen by him whereas the people, despairing in their long deprivation of their sovereign right to freely choose their leader, want a successor freely chosen by them in an honest election.

Unless a mode of transition agreeable to the administration and the rest of the people is adopted, a tragic violence will likely erupt on a national scale.

A new constitution can provide such satisfactory mode to avoid a fratricidal strife. The Marcos mode of succession and transition is not satisfactory because the constitutional amendments embodying it were drafted by Marcos himself and the Batasang Pambansa which was created in the questionable "elections" under martial rule while a new constitution will have been drafted by the delegates to the 1971 constitutional convention who were elected by the sovereign people in free elections. [As published]

Except for the convening of the interim National Assembly provided therein, the first constitution formulated by the convention can no longer serve as a basis for transition because the Marcos amendments thereto have mutilated said charter beyond recognition and reason. Still, the convening of the interim National Assembly for the purpose of conducting an election for the members of the regular National Assembly may be resorted to in order to provide constitutional continuity in our political development. All things considered, a new constitution adopted by the convention may be the best solution for a peaceful and orderly transition with the same advantage of constitutional continuity.

12. Q. What are your views on the president's concept of normalization process? Do you think we are having a normalization? Why?

A. The president's concept of normalization process is to normalize and make permanent his authoritarian system. This is not normalization, which requires a return to a true democracy.

Part V

[Feature: Part V of "An Interview With Former President Macapagal"]

[Text] 13. Q. What do you think of the succession mechanism as embodied in the 1981 amendments to the constitution? Do you consider the first lady as his most probable successor? What do you think of the first lady as a person and as a political leader? What is the possibility of the establishment of a political dynasty in the country?

A. The succession mechanism embodied in the 1981 amendments perpetuates the Marcos authoritarian system. It is worse than in many dictatorships where the successor is at least not chosen by the incumbent, whereas in this case the incumbent president effectively selects his successor.

It is a general belief that the president is planning his wife to be the successor. Indicators support such belief. It would not be proper to evaluate Mrs Marcos as a person because that would be personal. As a political leader, since she has derived her power from her husband which in similar situations disintegrates when the husband is done, it may not be reasonable to assume that Mrs Marcos possesses the leadership caliber necessary to steer the nation in the post-Marcos period through the complex national and international problems that will probably be worse than in any other time in the republic's history.

Unless the citizens assert themselves more, the Marcos design to establish dynasty may not be precluded. The design is indicated by the methodical political buildup not only for Mrs Marcos but also for the president's son and elder daughter.

14. Q. How would you describe the current political spectrum? Who are the anti-people? The pro-people? Who are the relevant ones?

A. The main alignments in the political spectrum are those who supported and collaborated with the authoritarian regime on one side and those who resisted and opposed it on the other. While not all the authoritarians and their collaborators and supporters are anti-people, especially those who are not essentially politicians, the political leaders among them may be properly regarded as anti-people.

The politicians and citizen leaders who have opposed and continue to oppose authoritarianism are rightly regarded as pro-people. They undergo sacrifices for the freedom and rights of the people.

All the active leaders are relevant to a varying degree and from a differing standpoint. The collaborators are pushers for continued despotism and the oppositionists are fighters for democracy and freedom. The latter vary in their relevance in the light of the consensus that the regime cannot be brought down by mere democratic means without violence or force. The oppositionists who are disposed to resort when necessary to more than peaceful means have become more relevant to the liberatarian struggle than the pure pacifists.

[Text] 15. Q. What are your views on the violent oppositionists? The CPP/NPA [Communist Party of the Philippines/ New People's Army]? The PKP/HMB [Partido Komunista ng Pilipinas/HMB--expansion unknown]? MNLF? Social Democrats? and others? Do you think they are politically strong and can dislodge the present regime in a matter of time?

A. The violent oppositionists have become more relevant now than the peaceful ones because of the realization that the regime cannot be changed through peaceful means and exercises which are manipulated to ensure the regime's victory. In a survey, the Unido [United Democratic Opposition] has reportedly found that 70 percent of the oppositionists have been radicalized and have joined the NPA, MNLF, urban guerrillas, or have resorted to violent means. In a recent homily, Fr James Reuter, S.J. has asserted, quoting the Bible, that when the courts can no longer give justice, violence is justified. Marcos himself, in his book "Democracy: Today's Revolution," has recognized the right of revolution by the people as "an elemental human right." He wrote that "Democracy recognizes the inherent right of the people to cast out their rulers, change their policy, or effect radical reforms in their system of government or institutions, by force or by general uprising, after the legal and constitutional methods of making such change have proved inadequate or so obstructed as to be unavailable."

By most credible accounts, the CPP/NPA have gained plenty of ground under martial rule and have placed the country within reach of a communist take-over.

The PKP/HMB if still operational may be regarded as acting in collaboration with the authoritarian regime with their erstwhile chairman, Luis Taruc, now a Batasang Pambansa member and a supporter of Marcos and his system. A captured key HMB commander in central Luzon, Silverstre Liwanag alias Linda Bie, was pardoned by Marcos and forthwith ran and won as Barangay captain in Lubao, Pampanga although he lost in his bid to become head of the town's Barangay captains.

The MNLF has gained the sustained support of the Islamic Conference of Nations and has stayed vigorous in its resistance and strikes against the Marcos regime.

The Social Democrats (Socdem) reportedly led by Fr. Intengan and based in Sabah are an illustration of moderate oppositionists who have been driven by a profound sense of injustice to respect to the last recourse of the aggrieved who cannot obtain justice through peaceful means. Other violent dissenters are essentially in the category of the Social Democrats who have opted for violence, if necessary, to achieve redemption from despotism and iniquity.

In the final analysis, it is not any violent organization or a combination of them but the people who can dislodge the regime in the near future. The discontent is accumulating and moving towards a strife national in scope and increasingly involving vital sectors of the nation--the workers, the youth, the military, the church, and others. How the sectors will react will be influenced by how the people will respond to the attraction of violence being spread by the NPA, MNLF and the radicalized political and citizen dissenters. With the economy in a bad shape, with the circus of extravagance and frolic unceasing, with abuses and injustices unabated, the concerted operation of the violent rebels and radicalized moderates, especially in striking a sympathetic cord in a segment of the military, has the capability of arousing the necessary nation-wide mass support to dislodge the regime.

[Feature: Part VII of "An Interview With Former President Macapagal"]

[Text] 17. Q. How would you assess the death of former Senator Gerardo Roxas to the cause of the opposition in the country? How would you describe Roxas as an opposition leader?

A. Senator Roxas was an inestimable loss to the cause of the opposition in the country. He was the indisputable leader of the official opposition party, the LP [Liberal Party]. He played the decisive leadership role in the three stages of an expanding united opposition: the National Union for Democracy and Freedom (NUDF) of which he was co-leader with Senator Tanada; the National Union for Liberation (NUL) of which he was the sole top leader; and the United Democratic Organization (UNIDO) of which he was cochairman with speaker Laurel. He was a presidential alternative who loomed to be the most acceptable in a controlling spectrum of oppositionists and admiration of men if a compromise became imperative for national unity and avoidance of nationwide turmoil.

Roxas had valuable qualities of leadership which included integrity and honesty, impressive intellect, firmness combined with gentleness, grasp of economic problems, steady control of his political organization and personal resources.

18. Q. What are your views on the following martial law policies on:

--heavy external borrowing;
--open-door government policy on multinationals;
--presence of U.S. military bases;
--Bataan nuclear plant;
--present foreign policy.

A. The heavy external borrowing has been a calamity. Not justified by benefits to the economy, it has only placed our country and its economy under the regulation and supervision of foreign financial institutions.

There is nothing to show for the $18 billion external debt except a gloomy economic slump characterized by the lowest rate of growth ever, lengthening list of businesses in distress, employment lay-offs, augmenting unfavorable balance of trade and payments, rising inflation, increasing budgetary deficit, tight credit, lowered credit standing, and other manifestations of a seriously ailing economy.

With the government unable to borrow enough for exceeding its borrowing capacity and lowered credit standing and the economy unable to raise production to cover the amortization payments on the huge loans over and above the needs of normal growth, an inordinate portion of tax revenues will now be allocated for loan payments, thereby gravely reducing funds for essential public services and for invigorating the nation's productive capacity which is in an anemic condition.

The open-door government policy on multinationals, being without adequate and effective safeguards to protect the interests of the country and the people against the dangers posed by the multinationals has been inimical to the national welfare.

Some of the dangers from multinationals have been well pointed out by CC [expansion unknown] delegate Augusto Cesar Espiritu, a former member of the National Economic Council (Froilan Bacungan, Philippine Perspectives on Multinational Corporations, pp 78-80), as follows:

1. Multinational corporations are not panaceas for development; they are at best development facilities and at worst, instruments for domination of the economies of host countries.

2. Multinational corporations are "islands of conscious power (economic and perhaps, political and cultural) in an ocean of unconscious cooperation."

3. Foreign investments and multinationals are not there to help underdeveloped countries in their quest for economic growth but are there in quest of profits in the developing countries.

4. Whatever the net effects of multinational corporations on economic growth, they are not now know to help in the equitable distribution of wealth in society and on the contrary, they tend to accentuate rather than reduce inequalities within host countries in the absence of proper government policies.

5. There may be economic growth in a country in terms of gross domestic product and the increase of industrial establishments, while participation of local management, technologists, engineers and skilled workers may be highly limited. And such limited participation as there exists may often times lead to the alienation of such local multinational management and workers from their own people, with their outlook toward life and their civic consciousness being strongly conditioned by their loyalty to their "multinational family."

In my view, no safeguards against multinationals by a single nation can be adequate and effective for the reason that the bargaining power of the multinationals is decisive as long as there are other nations that are competitively agreeable to the terms desired by the multinationals. Developing nations must adopt common and universally applied safeguards. Until this is achieved, a regime that adopts an open-door policy toward multinationals does a disservice to its people.

It is hardly disputable that the U.S. bases in the Philippines serve American interests and not Philippine external security needs. By the American support for the first authoritarian regime under the Philippine Republic, the bases and the compensatory military and financial aid given to the regime have instead been used to repress the rights and liberties of the Filipino people. Under these circumstances, the continuation of the bases beyond 1991 when the bases treaty ends has utterly lost justification.

Apart from the inflated cost of the Bataan nuclear plant, its construction, particularly at its present site, is detrimental to the safety and well-being of the Filipino people. It will also aggravate the country's dependence on foreign countries for its energy requirements since nuclear energy needs the importation of uranium and of uranium-processing technology which is a foreign monopoly.

The regime's foreign policy and relations may be rated as below par. The policy has opened the country and its economy to exploitation and dominance by foreign countries. The image of the Philippines as an American puppet has been accentuated under martial rule.

The policy has placed the country not only under American but also Japanese and Chinese dominance. In ASEAN, the Philippines has surrendered leadership to Indonesia because of the Mindanao Muslim problem. In the Third World, the policy has subjected the country to humiliation and disdain because of the Filipino ruler posing as the Third World leader and spokesman. In the Arab and Muslim world, because of the regime's inability to handle the MNLF rebellion, which it caused, as a domestic problem, it has invited foreign interference in domestic affairs and made the Philippines politically and economically dependent on the oil-rich Arab countries. In Latin America, the Philippines has lost good will and cooperation because of the regime's abandonment of the use of the Spanish language.

[Feature: Part VIII and last of "An Interview With Former President Macapagal"]

[Text] 16. Q. Do you think there is a basis of unity between the legal and violent oppositionists? If so, in which areas? If not, please explain.

A. Horacio Morales, heretofore mentioned, who ranks high in the Radical National Democratic Front (NDF), a broad alliance of Filipino revolutionaries which includes communists although "the majority are not," has expressed the view that "there are bright prospects for cooperation forces" (FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW, August 21, 1981). Such cooperation and unity, he said, can extend into a "civilian junta" that could take over the reins as a caretaker government after the overthrow of the Marcos regime. He maintained that such civilian junta cannot happen without the participation of the armed radicals.

It may be stated in addition that in the 1981 presidential election the legal and violent oppositionists both boycotted the elections.

Q. How would you assess the current Marcos government? Please describe the gains and losses and shortcomings of the present regime. What do you think are the solutions to remedy the current authoritarian regime?

A. After seventeen years the Marcos government has failed to solve the problems of the country. For instance, in metro Manila even the rudimentary problems of a metropolis like light, water, telephone and postal services, and traffic have not been solved and have instead worsened.

Under the overextended regime, the Filipinos have been deprived of democracy and their God-given rights and liberties. The nation has become torn in disunity and strife to the verge of turmoil and territorial dismemberment. The people have retrogressed economically and the masses have sunk deeper in poverty and hardships. The Philippines it today the least developed industrially in the region, the real income of the people is the lowest, and the gap between the rich and the poor the widest.

Moreover, graft and corruption in government has spread like a pestilence, visibly in high places. Peace and order has deteriorated and crime has taken frightful forms. Moral and ethical values have tobogganed, as witness the introduction and proliferation of casions, rise and sophistication of prostitution, nationally syndicated jai-alai and other gambling, criminality and lack of discipline in law-enforcement agencies.

The alleged gains are too insignificant in comparison with the wrongs inflicted. For example, the claim of accomplishment in infrastructure. Actually, on total this constitutes a loss. Too much borrowed capital has been sunk in nonproductive structures to the irretrievable detriment of the economy, moreover, considering the leakage in graft money and wasteful extravagance in the use of the funds allocated to infrastructure, more and beneficial infrastructure could have been built out of the allocated funds without graft, waste, and extravagance.

The main solution to the authoritarian regime is to change it to a democratic government by restoring democracy and free elections in which a democratic leadership sensitive to the public needs and desires can be freely chosen by the people.

Short of changing the regime outright, a solution could be the formulation of a satisfactory process of succession in which the successor will be determined not by the incumbent ruler or his party but by the vote of the people in a genuinely free, honest, and orderly election. In formulating the right method of succession, technical questions of constitutionality should not be a hindrance because the regime has repeatedly demonstrated lack of difficulty in amending the constitution when it wishes.

The key to such an acceptable process of succession is the formation of a new Comelec [Commission on elections] that enjoys the people's confidence in its impartiality and fairness as it used to be before Marcos imposed martial law. It is essential in particular that the Comelec chairman be a person of high repute and prestige that inspires confidence in his probity, justness, and firmness. Other helpful electoral measures should include the following:

There should be no block-voting which is a proven implement for electoral frauds and undue advantage to the administration. Fairness is the name of the game.

If the government party is represented in the electoral committee which will conduct the balloting and canvass the votes cast, the main and genuine opposition party must likewise be represented in the committee.

All restrictions to the right to petition, peaceful assembly, public rallies, as well as the right to freedom of speech and of the press, save the law on libel, should be discarded. These rights should be enforced by deeds in a manner which will promote a clean and fair election.

We venture the conjecture that if a satisfactory process of success is formulated, together with fair election rules that will enable the Comelec to conduct a poll the results of which will reflect the true will of the electorate, the opposition will see its way clear to burying the hatchet in favor of national reconciliation and avoidance of the looming national catastrophe in a violent transition.

STEEP DROP IN COMPANY PROFITS NOTED

HK100212 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 9 Sep 82 p 2

[By research head Delia M. Castaneda: "Top 1,000 Corporations' Profits Continue Decline in 1981"]

[Excerpts] Reflective of the worsening economic condition, the country's 1,000 largest corporations (in terms of gross revenue) suffered a huge 58 percent cut in profits last year as against a much lower 15 percent drop in 1980.

According to this year's edition of the BUSINESS DAY 1,000 top corporations in the Philippines (now off the press), aggregate net income of the elite group was pared to peso 2,387 million from the previous year's peso 5,662 million. This was despite a 16 percent increase on gross revenues from P182,676 million to P212,030 million.

The individual financial yearend reports of the top 1,000 revealed several factors which led to this lackluster performance. Foremost was the high cost of borrowed money. Aggravating the situation were lower sales, lower prices ofa number of traditional products in the export market, higher cost of raw materials and higher energy bills.

Heading the list of top losers was the financially strapped Marinduque Mining and Industrial Corp. [MMIC], the country's No 1 producer of nickel. Beset by the soft prices of metals in the world market and high interest payments, the mining firm more than trebled its 1980 loss with P989.75 million deficit last year to displace erstwhile top loser, Philippine Airlines, Inc.

The top 10 in terms of losses suffered an aggregate deficit of P2,387 million, accounting for 56 percent of the combined P4,790-million loss of the 221 firms which landed in the red last year.

Industry losses: In contrast to the previous year where only the services sector incurred a loss, five of the nine major industry groupings recorded negative returns last year.

The biggest loss of P913.59 million was reported by the mining firms, a turnaround from their combined net income of P983.83 million in 1980. MMIC's loss alone came to 98 percent of the industry's total.

The second biggest industry loss was reported by the community, social and personal services sector whose loss expanded by 283 percent last year. From P59.95 million, in 1980, the sector's combined loss almost quadrupled to reach P229.76 million.

Responsible for the industry's loss was the hotel group which reported a combined loss of P245.94 million, 9 percent more than the whole industry's total loss.

Ranking third in terms of industry loss was the transportation, storage and communications sector which reported a combined loss of P116.05 million, in stark contrast to the P132.61 million in profits recorded in 1980.

Although only 23 of the 58 companies in this sector which made it to the top 1,000 roster ended 1981 with losses, the combined net income of the other firms was not enough to put the sector in the black.

Philippine Airlines' loss alone of P595 million was five times the sector's combined net loss last year.

The remaining five sectors, although they were lucky enough to end 1981 on the money side, experienced cuts in profits. Even the moneymaking financial sector was not spared, although it had the small decrease of 12.23 percent.

The biggest profit squeeze of 74 percent was experienced by the construction industry. From P315.32 million in 1980, net earnings plummeted to P80.58 million.

Gross revenues: When BUSINESS DAY first came out with the list of the country's 1,000 leading companies in terms of revenues last year, four oil companies dominated the list. These four retained their positions in the listing for 1981.

Sectoral Share: As in the past, the manufacturing industry, composed of 433 firms, contributed the bulk of the top 1,000's aggregate revenues in 1981. The group grossed P94,589 million, accounting for 45 percent of the top 1,000's revenue pie.

A distant second was the wholesale and retail trade sector, which pitched in 20 percent of the total. The industry, composed of 245 companies, sold P41,737-million worth of goods last year.

In third place was the financing, insurance, real estate and business service group (143 firms) which reported a combined revenue of P34,696 million, contributing 16 percent of the top 1,000's revenues. This marked a hefty 38 percent hike from the previous year's P25,207 million. Largely responsible for this growth was the entry of a number of offshore banks.

The other sectors and their corresponding shares in the top 1,000's total revenues were: transportation, storage and communications--6 percent (P11,810 million--56 firms); construction--5 percent (P10,355 million--45 firms); mining and quarrying--4 percent (P8,903 million--23 firms); electricity, gas and water--2 percent (P5,339 million--seven firms); agriculture, fishery and forestry--1 percent (P2,860 million--28 firms); and the community, social and personal services--1 percent (P1,741 million--20 firms).

Meanwhile, the total resources base of the top 1,000 firms expanded by 20 percent, from P336,098 million in 1980 to P402,562 million last year. The bulk of the increase, however, came from creditors as the [word illegible] saw its total liabilities grow by 23 percent in contrast to the 5 percent additional investments of stockbrokers. From P268,275 million, the total obligations of the group reached P331,299 million by yearend '81. On the other hand, stockholders equity stood at P71,264 million, a little more than the previous year P67,823 million.

ANTIGOVERNMENT SUBVERSIVES ARRESTED--Military authorities arrested yesterday two more antigovernment plotters in metro Manila and a Catholic nun and two other subversive suspects in Catbalogan, Samar. Arrested in metro Manila were (Tomas Laurel) and (Roman Lafentes). Their arrest brought to 29 the number of persons now in Philippine Constabulary detention in Manila for the plot to terrorize the country, disrupt the economy and assassinate civilian and military officials and eventually seize the government. Those arrested in Catbalogan, Samar, were identified as Sister (Helena Gutierrez), (Juanita Delamida) and (Antonio Asistio). Eastern Command Chief Brig Gen Salvador Mison said subversive documents and literature and printing paraphernalia were also seized during the raid at the Catholic Social Action Center in Catbalogan. A revolver was also seized from the center. General Mison said six others including two priests and two nuns are being hunted. He said they were also involved in running the social action center and the printing of the subversive materials and possession of the unlicensed revolver. In Manila, the military said some 60 persons linked to the September conspiracy are still at large. [Text] [HK040031 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 3 Sep 82]

MILITARY TAKEOVER 'RIDICULOUS'--President Marcos told a small group of reporters after his nationally-televised news conference yesterday that the idea of a military takeover in the Philippines is ridiculous, but he said if the National Assembly fails to provide a bill on presidential succession before his departure, he will issue an emergency decree giving presidential powers to a currently 10-member executive committee in the event anything happens to him on his U.S. trip. Meanwhile at the Batasan, the bill on presidential succession was approved on second reading early this morning, with a few changes. The Batasan agreed to hold a marathon session until the bill is approved on third and final reading before the assembly adjourns on Friday. In other developments at the Batasan, the 61.8 billion peso national budget for 1983 was also approved last night on third and final reading. The bill will be sent to Malacanang today for signing into law by the president. Also approved was a bill which would penalize any person falsely accusing another of subversion. LABOR LEADER DISCUSSES POLITICAL EVOLUTION

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 16 Aug 82 pp 16 17

[Interview with Amat Khamthetthong: date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] What role and structure will the council stipulate?

[ANswer] Concerning the actions of the council, in which I will take part, and the structure or policies, I think that things must be stipulated at the conference of the new committee. However, we feel that we must try to hit the targets that have already been set. The main principle is to try to raise the standard of living of the workers. As for how this will be done, many more things must be done. For example, we must turn the Labor Council into a strong institution that the laborers can really rely on. But having said this, much more needs to be said about this.

[Question] Will political work be stressed?

[Answer] As for political activities, we will stress educating the laborers so they know "what is what." Since laborers do not have political knowledge, they are at a disadvantage and are inferior in everything in society. Thus, we will emphasize education. We will divide this into the following major topics: First, we will stress labor relations, that is, living cooperatively and negotiating and bargaining for labor rights. Second, we will emphasize skill development in order to increase the capabilities of the laborers. Finally, we will provide economic and political education. In short, our activities will stress various matters.

[Question] Concerning the struggle over the labor problems, will the council or the labor unions, in the form a a federation, be the spearhead in the struggle?

[Answer] From now on, the Labor Council will serve as a coordinator.But in coordinating things, there must be a basis, a federation. The problems will then be brought before the council. The council will decide what is correct. The party with the problem will be invited to come discuss the matter. Whenever it is felt that a struggle is necessary, the council will serve as the coordinator, that is, the council will serve as the mentor in the movement with each person, that is, the members, really working. But if we are to carry on a movement at the national level, we must certainly use the name of the Labor Council. But the real movers are the unions and the federation.

[Question] What will relations between the Democratic Labor Party and the labor unions be like?

[Answer] Concerning this, we have each gone our own way and there is no connection between us. But in educating the laborers, we must make the laborers understand that, as citizens, they must play a political role. As for this party, we must realize what the laborers really want. What they want is a better life and human dignity. Since this is what the laborers want, in promoting the interests of the laborers, matters will involve the employers and the government. We realize that in the struggle of the laborers, we should have an organization and fight in certain ways. Thus, in the struggle of the laborers, we will hold to the labor union movement, or to labor unionism as it is called. But at the same time, we must call for the political system to be corrected so that there is democracy. That means that we must use political measures along with other measures. Thus, even though the council and the labor party have each "gone their own way," we must make the members understand that politics in Thailand concerns all laborers and let each laborer decide for himself whether or not to join the labor party. We will just inform the workers concerning which parties are working in their interests. The council will not tell them which parties they must support.

[Question] How great a role do you think the laborers will play in the political development of Thailand?

[Answer] I think that the laborers have a great role in this. National development requires the cooperation of people from many sectors. All of these sectors must cooperate. But from what I have seen, in countries where the laborers have not joined in, political development has not been completed. Past examples in several countries show that the laborers are the heart in developing a democratic system. I think that Thai laborers should play a greater political role than they have in the past. In the past, the government, or the capitalists, constantly tried to prevent the laborers from taking part because they knew that the laborers were the ones who had been greatly oppressed by the capitalists. Thus, if the laborers gained [power], they would lose [power]. They thus tried to prevent this, saying that the laborers should not become involved in politics. This is clearly dictatorial thinking. But the capitalists are clever. They know that if they themselves say anything, the laborers will not believe them. They are thus relying on some labor leaders to speak for them and so conflicts have arisen.

[Question] Does this mean that the employers or the government have helped foster disagreements in the labor movement?

[Answer] I think that this has happened because they are unaware of the facts. Or it may be due to their policies. Both are possible, but I feel that it is more likely that they are unaware of the facts.

[Question] Concerning the conflicts in the labor movement, do you think that a compromise can be reached?

[Answer] I think that if we employ the same strategy, we should be able to cooperate with each other. But we will probably not be able to cooperate with a faction that has some other vague strategy. However, I am confident that those labor leaders who look to labor unionism only will someday begin to see that it is necessary to act and use political measures too. Concerning labor unionism, actually, the labor unions must be efficient. It depends on the administrative system too. If the system is democratic, the labor unions will be an efficient tool of the laborers. But if the administrative system is dictatorial, the labor unions will not be efficient in carrying out things. This is because, in a dictatorship, the various mechanisms are blocked.

[Question] In the future, what are the chances that the three labor councils will join together?

[Answer] Forming a single council is a long-term project. We have discussed this. During this first period, we will carry out activities jointly. Concerning problems that are common labor problems, we will discuss things together, work together and speak with one voice. In the future, we hope to be able to form a single council.

[Question] Will the labor movement stress forming a relationship with the farmers and students in the movement and will the ties between these three be strengthened?

[Answer] I think that the laborers must cooperate with all groups, including students and farmers. If an organization that will work for the interests of the masses is formed, we will join. I think that this is a policy.

[Question] Does this mean that you will also join together with some military groups?

[Answer] As I have said, our policy is to cooperate with all groups. If something is in the interests of the laborers and of the people [in general], we will associate with these groups and exchange ideas, regardless of wheter it is a military group or some other group. It depends on selecting people, or groups, that think the right way and that support the needs of the laborers and people.

[Question] What is your view of the present political situation in Thailand?

[Answer] As for Thai politics at present, the political situation is dictatorial. The interest groups that have pooled their capital are the ones who play a role and who have power. In particular, economic and political matters are controlled by a few people with economic influence. Thus, these people will expand their economic control throughout the country. As for Thailand's [political] structure, parliament [theoretically] has the greatest power. It holds administrative power and has the power to arbitrate matters. But in reality, all this is just a trick. That is, they are using a parliamentary dictatorship. As for real power, things depend on those few poeple who have a monopoly on power and who have more power than parliament. Thus, these people have the power to control parliament, the cabinet and even the various organs of the state. This is what the political situation in Thailand is like at present. To correct this, there must be a democratic revolution in order to topple these power [holders] so that real power rests with the people and reflects the interests of the majority of the people. We will certainly have to carry out a revolution. But when I say revolution, what I mean is that we must make changes and move from what is bad to something that is better.

STUDENT GROUP ASSAILS RTG STAND ON KHMER COALITION

Bagnkok PATINYA in Thai 16 Aug pp 6,7

[Letters column: "A Policy of Disaster"]

[Text] The present foreign policy of the Thai government has been criticized widespreadly by almost all circles, inlcuding students, intellectuals and the people in general. They are critical of the fact that the Thai government, particularly the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has been the prime mover in establishing the Khmer coalition government, that is, the government composed of the Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Khieu Samphan and Son Sann groups with Prince Sihanouk serving as president. The aim of this is to have the Khmer coalition government restore the independence of Kampuchea and free it from Vietnamese influence, in which Heng Samrin is the leader [of the Vietnamese-backed group]. Concerning this support, the government has claimed that it has done this in order to carry out things in accord with the resolutions of the United Nations and Asean in order to improve the image of the Khmer Rouge government and to intercept the enemy (Vietnam) outside the country.

Because some people have criticized this policy, people in general have become confused. They are confused because some groups support this policy while others are against it. Those who support this policy are mainly powerful people in government circles or people who have close ties to the government. Those who oppose the policy include the mass media and people in general.

Before we can say whether Thailand's foreign policy concerning the formation of the Khmer coalition government, which has great importance for the security and safety of Thailand, is right or wrong, the things that we must consider are:

1. Concerning the claim that such action has been taken in order to carry out things in accord with the United Nations' resolution, actually, the United Nations has not really taken a neutral position. That is, it is under the influence of two or three great power countries. And in the past, the resolutions of the United Nations have not had any real effect. If these great powers do not agree unanimously, the United Nations cannot compel any country to do anything. For example, when the United States and Mainland China were "reconciled," Taiwan lost its seat in the United Nations. When Vietnam invaded Kampuchea, when Argentina seized the Falkland Islands, when Russia invaded Afganistan and, most recently, when Israel crushed Lebanon, the United Nations was not able to do anything besides pass aimless policies. Stated simply, the United Nations is a paper tiger.

2. Since Asean became involved in the Kampuchean problem, Thailand is the only country that has been pushed into the position of being the spearhead in confronting Vietnam and Kampuchea. Some parts of Thailand are in a state of war. Thailand has had to take responsibility for the refugee problem and so on, and the other Asean countries have not had to take responsibility for any of the problems. Just the opposite, some Asean countries such as Singapore and Malaysia have taken this opportunity to make a trade profit with the Indochina countries and spread false propaganda about the war situation along the Thai border in order to make people in the world think that Thailand is not safe for tourists or investors. And after the formation of the Khmer coalition government was announced, the foreign affairs minister of Singapore took the opportunity to spread the news that Nguyen Co Thach had threatened to retaliate against Thailand. This again made the world think that things are not safe in Thailand. As for the ability to provide help if Vietnam should invade Thailand, it can be seen that, concerning resources and military forces, the Asean countries do not have the capabilities to help Thailand. They do not even have the capability to save themselves.

3. As for helping to improve the image of the Khieu Samphan government, the thing that happened in the past was that, during the period when the Pol Pot-Khieu Samphan group had great power in Kampuchea, one-third of the Khmer population was extirminated using cruel and barbaric means. They helped the CPT form the Siem Organization in order to carry out acts of terror in Thailand. Khmer rouge soldiers came and killed Thai citizens, including children and pregnant women, at Ban Noi Pa Rai and at other villages. As for Prince Norodom Sihanouk, when he held power in Kampuchea, he always acted like an enemy of Thailand.

4. As for the claim that [we must] support the Khmer coalition in order to keep the enemy outside the country, actually, Kampuchea and Vietnam alone cannot use force to invade Thailand unless they receive support from a great power. And if Thailand is really neutral, the great power will not have any reason to provide this support. Just the opposite, supporting the Khmer coalition will give the great power a just reason for supporting Vietnam and Kampuchea. Thus, instead of halting the enemy, this will induce the enemy to invade the country and it will not be possible to halt them. Because in waging a war along the Thai-Kampuchean border, they may cross over into Thailand. This will force Thailand to have to increase its military forces and budget unnecessarily because of this.

5. Concerning the formation of the Khmer coalition government, actually, it was China and the United States that wanted this in order to use this as a tool to preserve the Pol Pot faction's seat in the United Nations. This is because, during the past period, the number of votes in support of Heng Samrin has been increasing. If the Heng Samrin faction wins the seat in the United Nations, the other Khmer groups will be resolutely suppressed and the interests of China and the United States will be lost. Thus, both China and the United States have helped exert pressure on Asean, particularly Thailand, to serve as their agents in carrying this out. The result has been that Thailand has become the servant of these two great powers in the eyes of the people of the world.

It can be seen that this policy is completely wrong. That is, instead of Thailand profiting from this, this has greatly harmed Thailand's interests and may be disastrous for the country. That is:

First, besides the fact that the government will have to increase the budget for border defense, this has damaged Thailand's climate for foreign investment, tourism and international trade, especially trade with the Indochina countries. The profits from these things have gone to the other Asean countries, particularly Singapore and Malaysia.

Second, as long as the war in Kampuchea continues, for Thailand: (a) The number of Khmer refugees will increase. (b) The war may spill over into Thailand. In particular, at present the government is not secure and if a rebellion breaks out in Thailand, this may provide the communists with a chance to interfere. The result may by that Thailand will become communist in the end. (c) If Vietnam receives much pressure from Thailand, it may change its policy and "be reconciled" with China and then "feast on" Thailand, as happened in Lebanon when it allowed the Palistinian guerrillas to use Lebanon to carry out acts of terror outside the country. (d) This will provide Vietnam an opportunity to "swallow" Kampuchea more quickly. When most of the people are Vietnamese, the Khmer coalition government will not have a popular base of support and the Khmer coalition forces will flow into Thailand. Khmer Rouge forces will carry out terrorist activities in Thailand in cooperation with the CPT, just as has happened with the Vietnamese refugees here.

Third, this has placed Thailand at a strategic disadvantage in bargaining with the great powers since we have not carried out a policy of real neutrality.

Because the government has carried out such a policy, we, as students at Ramkhamhaeng University, feel that we should not give attention just to the enemy in the East, that is, Vietnam. We should look at the enemies all around. And if we look around, we will see that the nearest enemy is China. Furthermore, we feel that Thailand will not gain anything by fighting a war as a proxy for the great powers, which will only result in a disaster for the country.

We thus ask that the government review its foreign policy in the matter of uniting the three Khmer factions. The correct thing is for Thailand to implement a policy of real neutrality. That is, it should not be the enemy of any country. The internal affairs of Kampuchea should be left to the Kampuchean people to handle. At the same time, our country should be developed so that it makes progress. -- Two student solidarity groups, Border Struggle Project, Coffee Council, Ramkhamhaeng University.

EDITORIAL: FEAR OF CONFRONTATION MAY BE INCREASING

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 16 Aug 82 pp 2, 3

[Editorial: "Beware of a People's War"]

[Text] Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the Thai minister of foreign affairs, held direct talks with Mr Nguyen Co Thach, the Vietnamese minister of foreign affairs, and Thailand relaxed its attitude of confrontation and held more friendly talks. This may be because of objections by the mass media and various groups that do not want Thailand to become engaged in a war in place of a great power or some other country or because of some other reason of the government. But pressure is still being exerted by those who want Thailand to interfere in the affairs of other countries and who want Thailand to fight a national war against the Indochina countries and this pressure is becoming even stronger.

Even before Nguyen Co Thach came to Thailand, there were reports from Singapore that the Vietnamese minister of foreign affairs had threatened Thailand. But to date, it has not been possible to prove whether it was the Singapore minister of foreign affairs or the Vietnamese minister of foreign affairs who said this. Malaysia's unwillingness to hold any talks with Vietnam almost caused Thailand to make preparations for a confrontation with Vietnam. This would have caused Thailand to miss an opportunity to talk with Vietnam about the problem that has caused tension over the formation of the Khmer coalition.

In Thailand, relying on the government's mistake in supporting the Khmer coalition, some groups are citing the government's policy, the Asean and United Nations resolutions and humanitarian principles, or justice, to further aggravate the conflict between Thailand and Vietnam. For example, they have held seminars for those who support a confrontation with Vietnam in order to exert pressure on various countries to give greater support to the Khmer coalition. This will further increase the tension between Thailand and Vietnam.

Propaganda efforts are being made to have Thailand close the door and not negotiate at all. This propaganda points out that whatever Vietnam says cannot be believed and that it should be remembered that, since Vietnam invaded Indochina, it will also invade Thailand.

This propaganda points out that Thailand's interference in the affairs of other countries is just. At the same time, the people in this group condemn other countries for having sent troops to invade another country, saying that this is not just. But they are making a great effort to have Thailand do just that. Thus, the real intention of these people is to have Thailand jump into the war.

Even though those who do not agree with this and who feel that the war in Kampuchea is a dispute between communists and that free countries such as Thailand will not gain anything from this, they still say that we must become involved. Since capitalist powers once interfered in the affairs of these socialist countries, this means that Thailand, which is a small capitalist country, should follow them. Concerning this view, if it is not slave mentality, it will lead Thailand into a pitfall. The people in this group have constantly attacked the capitalists and imperialists for their terrible deeds and for invanding [other countries]. But now they want Thailand to do something that they have always condemned.

Besides this, we will discuss the polity of "inviting the enemy into the house." It is said that Thailand has done this and that this has led Vietnam to harbor ill feelings toward us. Because of this, it will think about settling accounts with Thailand and this will force Thailand to defend itself by "exerting pressure on Vietnam to withdraw from Kampuchea." They do admit, however, that Vietnam is experiencing great economic problems and cannot invade Thailand. And they are not clear about how "Vietnam is to be expelled." But the result of this is that we have made Vietnam an enemy and this will lead to a war in the future.

We do not know what the people in this group want. But the results are identical to the results desired by China and the CPT, which want to see Thailand become involved in a national war against Vietnam in order to destroy both sides. China would be free of enemies to the south. Both the Thai government, which favors the free world, and the Vietnamese government, which is a soviet-faction communist [government, would be destroyed]. The CPT would no longer have to fear the Thai government. This would enable the two groups [China and the CPT] to turn Southeast Asia into a Chinese-faction communist area without having to invest very much capital.

Concerning solving the problem in Kampuchea, PATINYA feels that the Thai Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the National Security Council should do everything possible to maintain the following image: 1. Thailand must really be neutral. 2. Attention must be given to peace. 3. There must be reasons for things and the data from all factions must be given attention. 4. We must be self-reliant. 5. We must use diplomatic means.

These things will enable us to avoid the national war planned by the great powers.

THAI PAPER URGES ASEAN TO 'STAND FIRM' ON KAMPUCHEA

BK080924 Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 6 Aug 82 p 3

[Editorial: "Asean Ministerial Conference"]

[Text] Asean foreign ministers will meet at the Oriental Hotel on 6 and 7 August for consultations and to review the situation following the establishment of the coalition government of the three Khmer factions and also to adopt a common Asean stand with a veiw to solving the problem.

From our observations, we believe the following issues will be the subjects of consultations:

First, there is the progress made by the Tripartite Khmer coalition government in forging unity within the Kampuchean forces and whether this would constitute political pressure leading to a Vietnamese withdrawal from Kampuchea. As the formation of the coalition government of the three Kampuchean factions came into reality thanks to the support of Asean countries, Asean would look at how this coalition's goals can be achieved without Asean's direct support or involvement except for political and moral support.

Second, the meeting would assess the reaction from Indochina, especially Vietnam which is acting as the leader of the Indochinese group, and especially during the visit to Asean countries and Burma by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach who claimed that the visit was very successful, but did not say in what way.

We do not know the real purpose behind Nguyen Co Thach's claim that a conference between Asean and Indochina will be announced soon. However, we are quite sure that it is unlikely that such a conference will occur especially if it is not held under the framework of the un-sponsored international conference on Kampuchea. The proposed talks between Asean and the Indochinese countries might be a Vietnamese ploy to fulfill its plan to set up an Indochinese federation.

We therefore hope that the Asean foreign ministers will stand firm on their policies and display their solidarity in tackling the problem so that they will have a strong bargaining position in dealing with Vietnam.

Since the formation of the Tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea, Vietnam has become very worried about the Kampuchean seat at the United Nations and is now doing everything in order to oppose and obstruct it.

It is therefore the duty of the Asean foreign ministers to map out a "strategy" to counter any Vietnamese move so as to achieve a just and lasting peace for the region free from the activities of "hooligans."

ATHIT CRITICIZES BBC REPORT; COMMENTS ON ARMY

BK200754 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0000 GMT 20 Aug 82

[Text] The Bangkok peacekeeping force, which comprises military and police officials, has set up checkpoints in an effort to prevent untoward incidents. Assistant Army Commander Gen Athit Kamlang-ek had this to say to newsmen:

[Begin recording] The Bangkok peacekeeping force has set up several checkpoints in Bangkok to conduct searches in an effort to prevent untoward incidents. People are asked to understand this action and to report to the Bangkok peacekeeping force or the metropolitan police headquarters any information which they believe might be useful to the maintenance of public safety. We must all help to maintain peace to the best of our ability.

[Question] The BBC has commented that the explosion at the prime minister's residence was a result of displeasure in some military circles with your tentative appointment as army commander. Can you comment on this?

[Answer] I do not care what the BBC or anyone else may say. I myself don't even know if I will be appointed to that post--the appointment is up to the considerations of superiors. As for the radio comment, I don't know if it actually occurred or if it was a report on the comment by someone. I believe facts will always be facts. Soldiers who work for the country know what is correct and what are facts. You can ask them about it. I feel that this matter is an internal affair or superiors. I don't think a radio station can comment about this and that acurately. How could a foreign radio commentator know more than Thai radio personalities? The Thai mass media certainly knows more than foreign journalists, who could not possibly have profound knowledge of how Thai people think--their knowledge is only superficial. Moreover, how could they know the minds of the military officials? Not even Thai journalists have commented in this regard. I don't think one should pay attention to the radio comment.

[Question] When will the annual military reshuffle be up for consideration?

[Answer] You must ask the army commander. I think the subject will be considered in late September.

[Question] Has the consideration process begun?

[Answer] I don't know; it is up to superiors. [End recording]

THAI PAPER VIEWS JAPANESE INVESTMENT POLICY

BK280754 Bangkok THAI RAT in Thai 27 Jul 82 p 3

[Editorial: "Proceed Toward Industrialization"]

[Text] A goal of national economic development is to transform the country from its current agricultural base to an industrialized country. In this process various forms of promotional privileges are provided to investors. A recent report from Japan states that the Japanese industrial council requires that as much as 47 percent of the raw materials used by Japanese industries in Thailand must come from Japan. If this is true, Japan is taking advantage of Thailand to import complete or semicomplete products into Thailand free of import duties under the Thai investment promotion law.

What percentage of locally made parts goes into the assembly of automobiles in Thailand and what percentage is imported? What about electrical appliances with which we come into contact every day? This is tantamount to us importing the goods directly but labeling them made in Thailand.

If this situation persists, it is doubtful whether our balance of trade picture will improve and whether industrial development will be as successful as called for in the national development plan. Although we may have more factories and more people employed, we will have to pay more foreign exchange for the import of products for assembly here.

We must watch Japan closely. In its investment overseas, Japan wants to export its technology, raw materials and as little capital as possible for production costs. It also exploits workers in the host countries, as is evident to many countries already. We are marching toward becoming an industrialized country but we still are unable to correct the trade deficit problem. In the end, we will have factories only for the assembly of products, which are produced abroad, for the consumption of the people here. Hence we will spend more foreign exchange every year.

It is important that we be able to reduce the balance of trade deficit as the result of our economic development program. The problem which we noted above is one of the obstacles to our economic development and we must seek every inoffensive way to rectify our disadvantages.

CAPTURE OF CPT CAMP--The current suppression campaign, codenamed: Tai Rom Yen 11, in Ranong and Chumphon has enabled the national forces to capture the communist terrorists to flee the area. Col Thammarak Itsarangkun Na Ayutthaya, the 4th army region intelligence officer, gave the following report today: [Begin recording] The capture of the communist terrorist camp at Khao Phai has forced the communist terrorists to flee to the nearby jungles and the villages where their supporters are located, while some fled to their home villages. We tried to enter satellite camps after the capture of the major camp, where on 30 July we discovered a rifle, 485 rounds of rifle ammunition, 10 tins each containing 40 liters of rice, 3 carts of unhusked rice, 11 rounds of shotgun shells, farm tools, carpentry tools, uniforms, clothes and cooking utensils. Last night an informant told us that about 7 communist terrorists, believed to be those who had fled from the Khao Phai Camp, were seen in Tha Chana District. We dispatched a unit to the area at about 0130 this morning and it clashed with the communist terrorists for about 10 minutes. The communists were able to flee to the surrounding jungle; some dressed in their underwear. Our men could not follow them because the jungle was quite dense and because of darkness. The inspection showed, however, that some of the communist terrorists were wounded. A shotgun, two handgrenades, eight shotgun shells, some clothing, caps, radio sets and citizen identification cards were found in the area. KING'S HEALTH--From 24-29 August his majesty the king's health has improved steadily. There was an occasional abnormal heartbeat. The x-ray of his lungs showed that the infection has improved. On 30 August the abnormal heartbeat occurred again for a short period. This abnormal heartbeat could take place again due to the fact that his heart muscles are still recovering from the infection. The panel of doctors thus advised that he avoid official duties for some time in the future. LARGE-SCALE DEVELOPMENT PLANNED FOR SEMARANG PORT

[Article: "Contract Signed for Semarang Seaport Development"]

[Excerpt] Semarang seaport which heretofore has been considered to be merely an ordinary port will look different by the end of 1985. Ocean-going vessels with a displacement of over 3,500 dwt which now have to anchor outside the dam because of the limited facilities available will be able to tie up with no problems at the pier. The contract for developing the Semarang seaport was signed on Saturday morning [7 August] by Pongky Soepardjo, sea communications director general, and four contractors who formed a consortium. The four contractors are Simizu Ltd, Penta Ocean Ltd, Toyomenka Keisha, and the national contractor PT Bangun Tjipta Sarana.

According to R. Soedibjo, Semarang port administrator, the seaport development is planned to be accomplished in three phases. The first phase will begin at the end of September while the second and third phases will be handled from 1985 through the year 2000. The first development phase, for which the contract was signed on Saturday morning, covers 10 types of activity including the construction of a 5,150-meter long breakwater, a 605-meter long concrete pier, a new 6,000-square meter godown, and a 21,060-square meter outdoor storage area.

The civil work of phase one, R. Soedibjo said, will cost 59.2 billion rupiah. Of this total, 69.7 percent will be obtained through a Japanese loan of 13,979,152,000 yen or 41,242,706,000 rupiah, and 30.3 percent from budgeted funds. Five billion rupiah have been allocated for the fiscal year 1982-83. The sea communications director general noted that the contract signed on Saturday is the biggest contract in the sea communications field and must be completed within 3 years. At least 1.2 million tons or cubic meters of stone and about 2 million tons of sand are needed to build the more than 5-kilometer long breakwater. This must be completed within a period of 1 year as scheduled by the contractor.

If all goes according to schedule, the director general said, an average of 2,000 to 3,000 tons of stone must be hauled to the project site each day. If each truck hauls 6 tons of stone, 500 trucks will be needed each day. This clearly will have no small impact on the traffic flow in Semarang.

NATUNA GETS FIRST TRANSMIGRANTS

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 11 Aug 82 pp 1, 12

[Article: "Natuna To Receive 2,000 Transmigrant Families"]

[Excerpts] The Natuna Archipelago will receive 2,000 transmigrant families from Java in the near future. On Monday afternoon [9 August] Murwanto, regent of the Riau Archipelago, explained in Ranai that the 50 families that just arrived are part of the 360 transmigrant families planned to be moved in the first phase of the transmigration program.

Transmigrants will be located in the resettlement area in Sungai Ulu, East Bungur Subdistrict, 23 kilometers west of Ranai.

The transmigrants will be directed to make their living from plantations such as clove and other hard crop planatations. Clove trees prosper in the Natuna Archipelago. Regent Murwanto admitted that though the archipelago has a wet climate very few persons will create wet fields for planting paddy. The majority of the native inhabitants of the archipelago gain their livelihood as fishermen and non-wetfield farmers. It is expected that transmigrants will open up wet ricefields gradually. The population of the West and East Bungur Subdistricts of Natuna Archipelago totals about 20,000. BULOG [Logistics Bureau] maintains several permanent godowns on the island to meet the basic needs of the local people, including rice. Yet it is expected that with the arrival of the transmigrants, the inhabitants will become self-sufficient in meeting their daily needs.

Natuna Island is far more developed now than it was 2 or 3 years ago. Roads are relatively good, and recreation is provided through a TVRI relay transmitting station capable of receiving broadcasts from Jakarta. The concept of moving transmigrants to the Natuna Archipelago was first raised by Lt Gen Soesilo Soedarman, commander of Defense Region Command I, when he visited the area in the middle of this year.

Moving transmigrants to Natuna has a dual purpose, namely to reduce population density on Java Island and to fill up the sparsely populated archipelago area which is viewed as a very strategic area from a defense standpoint. "Prosperity for the people and regional security are the aims of shipping transmigrants to the area," a defense and security officer said.

SOCIAL ASSIMILATION DISCUSSED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 13 Aug 82 pp 1, 12

[Article: "Sindhunata, BAKOM PKB Chairman, Says Implementation of the Indigenous and Nonindigenous Assimilation Program Is 'Still Poor'"]

[Excerpts] The implementation of the program to assimilate the nonindigenous (read Chinese--editor) and indigenous people in Indonesia was evaluated by K. Sindhunatha, general chairman of the Central Communication Group for Stimulating National Unity (BAKOM PKB), as "still poor."

"I admit that the Main Line of National Policy stated that assimilation must be upgraded, but I feel too little has yet been done about it. This has been a feeble effort to date," Sindhunatha told KOMPAS on Tuesday [10 August].

The reason for the poor implementation, Sindhunatha said, does not rest solely with the nonindigenous or the indigenous people or even with the government but with the three groups as a whole. "As a whole the three groups still deal emotionally with assimilation," he remarked.

The problem of assimilation, he said, cannot be resolved solely in one field but it must be integrated and consistent so that a policy in one field is not cancelled by a policy in another field.

For instance, Sindhunatha said, we want to develop an assimilated young generation in the formal education field by eradicating all sorts of views in society about the differences between "indigenous" and "nonindigenous" people. However, in the economic field some policies explicitly differentiate between "indigenous and "nonindigenous" persons or a special recognition code is noted on the identity cards of "nonindigenous" persons. There is no need to create such obstacles, Sindhunatha said, for though they seem insignificant, they affect the desired assimilation process.

"The government must be able to create an atmosphere of nationhood and nationality which enables the process of assimilation to move along naturally and smoothly. If this is not created by the government, trouble ensues," he added.

Meanwhile the indigenous group generally does not feel or view the nonindigenous group as equals, as brothers in citizenship, in homeland, in nationality, and so on.

The nonindigenous group, Sindhunatha said, in broad outline consists of three categories: first, those already assimilated; second, those in no way assimilated but holding an Indonesian citizenship certificate and whose conduct, language, and life style are still those of an alien. In category three are those who fall between the two groups mentioned above: those who are in the process of becoming assimilated but who are not yet fully assimilated. They still have some doubts about assimilation.

Although these three categories exist, Sindhunatha said, the government and the indigenous society often treat them all alike. If they speak of the nonindigenous group, the picture painted of them is still a foreign one. As a result the policy or regulation which is formulated is based on this alien image, and it ignores the fact that there is a fully assimilated nonindigenous group.

"As a result those who are assimilated give some thought to the difference in treatment again, or those who are still doubtful about assimilation, don't assimilate," he added.

Exclusive

Other than the weaknesses existing in the government and the indigenous group, Sindhunatha added, the primary weakness in the assimilation process is the nonindigenous society itself. "We cannot expect the assimilation process to come about solely through the efforts of the government or the indigenous society, but there must be some reciprocity from the nonindigenous society. This is determined by their attitude and conduct."

The BAKOM PKB general chairman admitted that in truth there were some who were called "nonindigenous" who still were not fully Indonesianized. They still feel they have no rights in or responsibilities toward Indonesia. They as yet have no commitment to their homeland. "This causes trouble because this attitude of itself strengthens society's prejudices toward the nonindigenous group."

Sindhunatha cited the example of last Idul Fitri holiday as celebrated in the Puncak vacation area. He saw many young nonindigenous children playing together in all non-indigenous groups. Such exclusivity, Sindhunatha said, does not encourage assimilation.

Or, he said, the use of the Chinese language by people in public places. This in no way accords with assimilation. "If you want to speak Chinese, please do so at home but do not use Chinese in public places; moreover, where it can be heard by everyone," he added.

Living together in ethnic communities, Sindhunatha said, is also a weakness in itself, although this really is linked to commercial areas or the "wholesaling" of most of the homes in one housing area, for instance, as is done in "real estate."

This, Sindhunatha said, is mainly related to economic capability or the ability to buy a home. But even this is a weakness because it reveals that there is an "economic gap" between the indigenous and nonindigenous groups which in the end makes assimilation more difficult.

Despite the fact that it is generally agreed that the nonindigenous group must be melded into society, we must be aware that "especially good" conduct is expected of them -- attitudes and conduct which are better than those of the other group. "This of course is a sacrifice but a necessary one since it is not enough to be ordinary like the other group. Needed is the capability to make a greater commitment to carry the flag of the Indonesian people." This, Sindhunatha said, must be reflected in daily conduct, in social gatherings, in trade, and in other activities.

BAKOM PKB is an agency that is expected to function as a bridge in the process of assimilating indigenous and nonindigenous people in Indonesia. It consists of public and government figures who participate as individuals and not in their official capacities. Nevertheless, Sindhunatha admitted, this agency is unable at this time to be maximally effective as expected because its managers are also busy with their respective primary occupations.

BAKOM PKB has organized a strategy for this assimilation process for the period 1983-2000. It is broken down into a long-range, middle-range, and a short-range strategy accompanied by the respective programs.

NEW INSTRUCTION ON POLITICAL EDUCATION OF YOUTH

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 20 Aug 82 pp 1, 12

[Article: "Presidential Instruction on the Political Indoctrination of the Young Generation"]

[Text] To give the young generation political education, since they provide the continuity for the Indonesian national ideals, President Suharto has issued Instruction No 12 of 1982 concerning, "Political Education for the Young Generation," which con tains a section on patterns of indoctrination and development called, "Patterns of Indoctrination and Development for the Political Education of the Young Generation."

In the INPRES dated 11 August 1982, the chief of state instructed the Coordination Group for the Indoctrination and Development of the Young Generation (BAKOR P3GM) to use the "Patterns of Indoctrination and Development for the Political Education of the Young Generation" as a guide and particularly as political education material for carrying out the task of indoctrination and development of the young generation.

After reporting to President Suharto at the Bina Graha on Thursday [19 August], Dr Abdul Gafur, vice minister for youth affairs, said the "Pattern of Indoctrination and Development for the Political Education of the Young Generation" to be used as a guide consists of six chapters. They include clarification of the basic concept, purpose, and goals needed for political education as well as the basic platform for political education of the young generation.

Regarding the basic concept, among other things, the document explains that political education of the young generation, in principle, is a series of efforts to upgrade and stabilize political and national awareness to support the everlasting Pancasila and 1945 Constitution as the national cultural policies.

Political education also must be part of the process of reforming Indonesian national politics which is being done at this time within the framework of attempts to create a political system that is really stabely democratic, dynamic, effective, and efficient.

The purpose of the training, he said, is basically to provide a guide to the young Indonesian generation to heighten their consciousness of their nationality and statehood in line with the aims and ideals of the Indonesian people.

The goal is to create a young Indonesian generation which is aware of their nationality and statehood based on Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution. It is an attempt to raise sound Indonesians whose nature will be reflected in their identity and personalities.

They will have an identity and a personality that is aware of their rights and obligations as well as their responsibilities to the interests of the people and the country. This principally is to be realized by setting good examples -- by obeying the law and the Constitution, by having a self-, social, and national discipline, by being farsighted as well as being determined to struggle for advancement objectively, based on the people's capabilities.

Conscious of their identity and personality, they will take active part in supporting the national way of life democratically. They will take an active and creative part in the life of the people and the state, particularly in efforts toward national development. They will actively support the union and unity of the people and will have an awareness of the diversity among people.

They will be aware of the need to preserve harmoniously the environment and nature, making adaptations and keeping them in balance. Based on a pattern of reasoning or logic concerning Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution, they will be capable of evaluating concepts, standards as well as threats that arise outside Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution.

It is important in this political education that the young Indonesian generation obtains political education based on the aspirations which are derived from the Indonesian people's identity and which have been agreed upon nationally. Such education should not go so far as to be an individually developed education which, moreover, might conflict with the desired education because it has its roots in various political aspirations.

The basic platform for carrying out political education is one which, in principle, is based on the Indonesian people's national life, that is, Pancasila, the 1945 Constitution, the Main Lines of National Policy, and the Youth Oath of 28 October 1928.

By issuing this instruction, Abdul Gafur said, the president offered guidance so that all students, as young people, will begin to be given political education using methods suitable for their age groups in cooperation with the Republic of Indonesia Teachers Association (PGRI).

University students will follow the P4 [Patterns of Indoctrination and Development for the Political Education of the Young Generation] track and here the chief of state offers guidance so that it is handled as effectively as possible.

For the implementation of political training through the Indonesian National Youth Committee Communication Forum, education is to be simplified for youths. Gafur added that the president judged P4 to be the precise method for educating Indonesian youth politically so that it can acquire leadership elements.

Gafur responded to a question saying this instruction makes it possible for political parties to continue to indoctrinate cadres. "For this purpose also an indoctrination pattern has been issued so that we all speak the same language and provide the same guidance," he added.

The president, he said, also instructed that people be made cadres in the broadest possible sense so they begin to be excited about politics.

BRIEFS

NEW NAVAL VESSEL--On Thursday [5 August] the Navy fleet was strengthened by the addition of a landing ship, tank (LST). This warship, the KRI Teluk Banten, was built at the Tacoma Marine Industry shipyard in South Korea. Admiral Waloejo Soegito, Navy chief of staff, on that day was accompanied by Fleet Commander Rear Admiral R. Kasenda and other officials, all of whom observed the new ship at the Ujung Pier in Surabaya. The 4,100 nautical miles from South Korea to Surabaya were covered in 11 days at sea with a 4-day layover in Manila Harbor (the Philippines). The crossing was made under the command of Lt Col (P) Kuryono with an all-Indonesian crew. The KRI Teluk Banten is 100 meters long, 15.4 meters wide, and has a displacement of 3,750 tons. Its weaponry system consists of 40 and 50-mm guns, and cruising speed is 14.5 knots per hour. It is equipped with a helicopter deck for three helicopters of the super-Pima type, and it can transport landing troops. The crew consists of 11 officers, 40 noncommissioned officers, and 60 enlisted men. [Text] [Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 7 Aug 82 p 12] 6804

NATIONAL DAY GREETINGS TO BULGARIA

BK090800 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0358 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 9 Sep (SPK)--In the name of the KPRP Central Committee, the Council of State, the National Assembly, the Council of Ministers and the entire Kampuchean people, the PRK leaders warmly greeted the Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee, the Council of State, the National Assembly, the Council of Ministers and the Bulgarian people on the occasion of the 38th anniversary of the national day of the People's Republic of Bulgaria on 9 September.

The message of Heng Samrin, secretary of the KPRP Central Committee and chairman of the Council of State; and Chan Si, chairman of the Council of Ministers, to Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee and chairman of the Council of State; and Grisha Filipov, chairman of the Council of Ministers says:

"During these 38 past years, the People's Republic of Bulgaria, led by the Bulgarian Communist Party, fruitfully developed in the construction of developed socialism.

"Its policy of peace, in particular its policy of neighbourliness and understanding in the Balkans region, eloquently contributes to the raising of its international prestige.

"Would you please let us seize this occasion to express our sincere thanks to the Bulgarian Communist Party, government and people for their precious support and aid which they have provided and continue to provide to our people in their task of reconstructing their beloved fatherland, advancing toward socialism and defending their revolutionary gains against the acts of aggression of the Beijing expansionists and hegemonists in collusion with the United States.

"We are pleased that the international socialist relations between our two countries are intensified for the well-being of our two peoples and are in the interest of peace and social progress."

They wished Bulgarian leaders new successes in continuing to achieve the goals determined by the 12th Bulgarian Communist Party Congress.

The message of Chea Sim, chairman of the PRK National Assembly, to Stanko Todorov, chairman of the national assembly of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, says:

"The efforts made by the Bulgarian people during the past 38 years achieved remarkable socialist gains in Bulgaria and have significant scope for peace and the social progress of humanity.

"I have the firm conviction that fraternal friendly relations and cooperation between our two countries are always consolidating for the well-being of our two peoples, for peace and socialism."

On the same occasion, Kampuchean Foreign Minister Hun Sen sent his greetings to his Bulgarian counterpart Petur Mladenov.

CHEA SOTH SPEAKS AT EDUCATION CONFERENCE

BK021119 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0444 GMT 2 Sep 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 2 Sep (SPK)--"Our education system, the foundations and (? senses) of which are different from under the old regimes, must actively contribute to building our society on the road to socialism according to the path traced out by the KPRP," declared vice chairman of the council of ministers and member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau Chea Soth.

He said this on Monday at the closing ceremony of the week-long third general meeting on education held in Phnom Penh.

The meeting determined the goals of education for the period 1982-85, and particularly for the 1982-83 school year. In the past school year, 293 education vanguard units received congratulatory certificates and honor flags against 180 in the previous year.

In his closing speech, Vice Chairman Chea Soth said:

Quantitative and qualitative developments in the field of education have without doubt satisfied the urgent and pressing needs of our people--needs they share with the whole of progressive mankind--to demolish the vestiges of the reactionary culture and live in a society of peace, freedom and revolutionary optimism where exploitation, oppression and inequality are banned.

I am firmly convinced that due to their boundless patriotic spirit, the great solidarity around the party and the government, and the union between the authorities and our people on the one hand, and to the support of our socialist friends--in particular our Vietnamese and Soviet friends--on the other part, these goals will be successfully achieved.

In the face of the great victories scored by our revolution in all fields--particularly in the education field--our enemies have become more savage like wounded dogs. They seek all manner of means to slander us and to destroy our revolution. The formation of the so-called "tripartite government" is such a reaction. All their efforts, however, are doomed to failure. Our revolution is growing up and is irreversible. With every passing day it becomes stronger because our entire people are united as one behind the KPRP, the (?three) revolutionary currents and, in particular, the world socialist system in which are the USSR and Vietnam provide firm support for us. At present, our enemies are in agony and cannot in any way block our path.

HENG SAMRIN ADDRESSES NATIONAL EDUCATION MEETING

BK280430 Phnom Penh SPK in French 1439 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 25 Aug (SPK)--The successes achieved by the Ministry of Education and all the people during the past 3 years, particularly during the 1981-82 school year, stand as concrete testimony to the authentic patriotism of our cadres and teaching personnel, Chairman Heng Samrin, general secretary of the KPRP Central Committee, stressed at the third national education meeting which opened in Phnom Penh on Tuesday, 24 August.

The chairman congratulated the teaching personnel for overcoming all obstacles in carrying out the revolutionary task under the clear-sighted leadership of the KPRP.

Education Minister Pen Navouth, several other ministers and representatives of various services and mass organizations were among the personalities present at this meeting, which was held for the purpose of summing up educational work and fixing new targets.

"These successes confirm the progressive and absolute advance of the revolutionary force and the irreversible character of the Kampuchean situation," Chairman Heng Samrin said. He also expressed approval of the directives on education for the 1982-83 school year, whose socialist concepts were depicted by the education minister.

While recalling the massive massacres and the all-out destruction caused by the genocidal POL Pot-ieng Sary-khieu Samphan regime, Chairman Heng Samrin said in essence.

We will always keep alive the good service of the national united front for the salvation of Kampuchea and of the party, government and particularly the fraternal people's army of Vietnam for saving our people from the deadly pit and liberating our magnificent land of Angkor from the genocidal danger of the POL Pot-ieng Sary-khieu Samphan Gang, the ignorable lackeys of Beijing.

Following the historic victory of 7 January 1979, our dearest wish is to live in peace while concentrating our efforts on national defense and reconstruction. During the past 3 years, under the clear-sighted leadership of the KPRP and animated by patriotism, our people have surmounted many obstacles and defeated all the perfidious maneuvers of our enemies.

Our successes in all fields have annoyed the Chinese hegemonists and the U.S. imperialists as well as their lackeys of all stripes, including the exiled reactionary Khmers. These latter have resorted to all sorts of perfidious maneuvers with the single-minded aim of returning and once again dominating our population. In Kuala Lumpur recently they fabricated the so-called "Tripartite government" in order to mask the crimes of the genocidal regime, which is hated and spit upon by the whole world.

The chairman also talked about our successes in the political and diplomatic fields, the third session of the National Assembly and the sixth conference of the Indochinese foreign ministers.

"We have an increasing number of friends, "he said," especially those who make up the three revolutionary currents and, particularly, the world socialist system with the USSR as the true bulwark, and Vietnam, a friend of long-standing with whom we share a common struggle tradition.

"All these factors eloquently show that the situation in Kampuchea is irreversible," Chairman Heng Samrin stressed before adding:

At this time when the enemy seeks to destroy us, when our rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in all fields urgently call for qualified and truly proletarian leading, technical and scientific cadres and workers, we must develop, in addition to general education, programs of higher education, technical education, vocational training and adult education. Our education system must eliminate all vestiges of the former regimes--which were regimes based on oppression and the exploitation of workers--and create a new culture in the service of the Marxist-Leninist socialist revolutionary cause.

In order to attain these two fundamental objectives, the chairman pointed out that education must, among other things, contribute to increasing labor yield and inculcate in workers--the real masters of the society--a new attitude toward work; responsibility toward the state and collective property; the authentic patriotism associated with socialist internationalism; loyalty, courage and the spirit of solidarity; the collective spirit; and the love of learning.

The chairman gave assurances that the work of the teaching corps will enjoy the constant support of all circles and that "the KPRP and the PRK government will continue to provide firm moral as well as material support for our new education sector because it is a fundamental factor in the definitive achievement of our efforts to build socialism."

PRK'S CHEY SOPHEA INTERVIEWED IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

BK050941 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0403 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 5 Aug (SPK)--Immediately after the liberation of Kampuchea (7 January 1979), the KPRP and the PRK government have paid special attention to the restoration of culture, said Chey Sophea, deputy minister of information and culture.

In an interview granted to RUDE PRAVO during his stay in Czechoslovakia to attend the 23d International Film Festival at Korlovy Vary, Chey Sophea laid stress on the Kampucheans' love for arts, particularly music and dance, which helped them to "overcome difficulties" and to "score encouraging results."

Chey Sophea said that 4 art troupes had been founded and are performing in Phnom Penh and the provinces; 19 cultural centers have been established with [the] theater and cinema service; a school of fine arts has opened its doors to 500 students assigned to various subjects: music, dance, sculpture, plastic art and circus; and an institute for literary and scientific research will be founded.

We have received material aid from the Soviet Union, Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, the GDR...for the establishment of a system of movie distribution. The documentary film "Scar and Hope" presented at this festival is a Khmer-Czechoslovak joint production. We have received from Czechoslovakia many films which are distributed in our movie halls. We highly appreciate the assistance of the Vietnamese movie makers who have shared every meter of film with us since the beginning.

The radio broadcase network has been expanded. We are making preparations for television broadcasting. We thank Czechoslovakia for its aid in training Kampuchean technicians in this field.

Chey Sophea denounced the POL pot gang for having abolished the Kampuchean people's moral patrimony during their rule. Many monuments were destroyed, artists, authors...were massacred; cultural establishments have been in ruins. We are making immense efforts to preserve for future generations the cultural patrimony of our ancestors. We are undertaking the reconstruction of the Angkor West Temples with the assistance of UNESCO, the Soviet Union, France and India. It is not easy. However, we do our best to maintain the cultural treasures of our nation, Chey Sophea stressed.

CHAN SI MEETS WITH PLO SPECIAL ENVOY 'ALI FAYAD

BK030228 Phnom Penh SPK in French 1440 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 2 Aug (SPK)--Today, Chan Si, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau and chairman of the council of ministers, held talks with 'Ali Fayad, the PLO special envoy in charge of southeast Asian affairs, who is currently visiting Kampuchea.

Chan Si affirmed the total support of the party, government and people of Kampuchea for the just struggle of the Palestinian people for independence and freedom and against the U.S. imperialists and the Zionist Israelis. He said he was convinced that the Palestinian people's just struggle will win, due to the aid and support of the peace-loving and progressive people of the world.

Chan Si talked about the Kampuchean people's determination to restore and build their country despite the maneuvers of sabotage and division waged by the imperialists, the expansionists and other reactionaries and about the Kampuchean people's steady progress due to the support of fraternal socialist countries and other progressive people of the world.

'Ali Fayad thanked the Kampuchean people for their support of the Palestinian people. He expressed his support for the firm position of the KPRP which has led the Kampuchean people in restoring and building the country and for the initiatives of the three countries--Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos--which were aimed at reestablishing peace and stability in southeast Asia. The Palestinian people are determined to struggle until final victory, affirmed 'Ali Fayad.

PLO SPECIAL ENVOY MEETS CHAN VEN; DEPARTS

BK030801 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0434 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Text] Chan Ven, secretary general of the Council of State and vice chairman of the KUF NCD National Council, received 'Ali Fayad, special envoy of the PLO in charge of southeast Asian affairs, in Phnom Penh on Sunday, 1 August.

The two personalities exchanged views on the tension in southeast Asia, the Middle East and the world caused by the interventions of the imperialists, expansionists and other reactionaries.

Chan Ven said that the Kampuchean people closely follow the tension in the Middle East generated by the Israeli Zionists, who, under the protection of U.S. imperialism, are opposing the just struggle of the Palestinian people. He reaffirmed the solidarity of the Kampuchean people with the people of Palestine in their struggle against the Israeli aggressors for independence, freedom and happiness.

'Ali Fayad asserted his support for the just cause of the three Indochinese peoples for independence and peace in the region and the world and he also expressed high appreciation for the progress in every field achieved by the Kampuchean people during the past 3 years.

The PLO special enovy left Phnom Penh on Monday, 2 August, at the end of his 5-day visit to Kampuchea.

He was seen off at the airport by Min Khin, acting secretary general of the KUF NCD National Council.

During his stay in Kampuchea, the PLO special envoy visited the Tuol Sleng school-prison, the mass graves at Cheung Ek, the former royal palace, the National Museum, the "Kolab 2" orphanage and the textile factory at Russei Kev.

KUFNCD MEETING SUPPORTS PLO IN LEBANON

BK011221 Phnom Penh SPK in French 1436 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Excerpt] Phnom Penh, 31 Jul (SPK)--This morning the KUF NCD Council held a meeting in Phnom Penh in solidarity with the Arab Palestinians and Lebanese peoples--victims of the Zionist Israelis's war of aggression.

Present at Thai meeting among others were: Chan Ven, vice chairman of the KUF NCD Council and general secretary of the council of state; superior Bonze Tep Vong, vice chairman of the KUF NCD Council; and Heng Teav, vice chairman of the Kampuchean Federation of Trade Unions Central Committee.

Ali Fayad, PLO special envoy, was also present.

The diplomatic corps accredited to Kampuchea were also present.

Chan Ven opened the meeting by saying that "the KUF NCD Council convened this meeting in the spirit of internationalist proletarian solidarity, friendship and mutual cooperation between the Kampuchean, Palestinian and Lebanese peoples in their struggle against the U.S. imperialists the Zionists and racism; for independence, peace, democracy and social progress; and to show indignation over the Israeli aggression against independent and sovereign Lebanon and the massacre of the Palestinian people."

The meeting unanimously declared its complete support for the proposals put forward by the chairman of the presidium of the USSR supreme Soviet L. Brezhnev aimed at establishing universal peace in the Middle East and in the world.

In his speech, Ali Fayad talked about the present struggle of the Palestinian people against the cruelest aggression in their history.

He denounced the British and U.S. imperialists who have backed Israel in maintaining its hold on Palestine since 1948 and Zionist attempts to exterminate the Palestinian people.

The meeting unanimously adopted a resolution severely condemning the U.S. imperialists' aggression and interference, the Zionist Israelis' aggression against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, which is aimed at putting an end to the PLO revolutionary forces, creating tension in the Far East and threatening world peace. This meeting insisted that the U.S. imperialists and the Zionist Israelis immediately cease their aggression and promptly and unconditionally withdraw their troops from Lebanon and stop without delay their bombardment of Beirut.

The participants declared their complete support for the just and valiant struggle of the Palestinian people led by the PLO and for the Lebanese people and other Arab countries in the defense of their fundamental rights against the aggression and interference of the U.S. imperialists and the Israelis.

All of the Kampuchean people must do everything possible to reinforce the ties of militant solidarity with the PLO, the Palestinian and Arab peoples in their struggle against the Zionist Israelis and other reactionary powers, says the resolution.

KONG KORM MEETS WITH PLO SPECIAL ENVOY

BK021014 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0417 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 2 Aug (SPK)--On Saturday, 31 July, Kong Korm, deputy minister of foreign affairs, held talks in Phnom Penh with 'Ali Fayad, the PLO special envoy in charge of southeast Asian affairs, who is currently on a visit to Kampuchea.

'Ali Fayad talked about the situation in the Middle East, emphasizing the massacres of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples perpetrated by the Zionist Israelis. He denounced the barbarous Israeli aggression and described the heroic struggle of the Palestinian people in the defense of their just cause. He expressed their determination to join together with the Kampuchean people in the struggle against their common enemy--U.S. imperialism. He said he was convinced that the protests of the Soviet Union, socialist countries and progressive countries against the Israeli aggression in south Lebanon and their support for the Palestinians and Arabs will lead to an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. He highly praised the struggle of the Kampuchean, Vietnamese and Lao peoples against the expansionists and the imperialists.

Kong Korm hailed the heroism with which the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples are fighting against the Zionist Israelis, who are supported by the U.S. imperialists. The Israeli aggression is a barbarous act in violation of international law. Israel must lift the siege of Beirut and unconditionally withdraw its troops from Lebanon, Kong Korm said. He stressed that the Kampuchean people make common cause with the Palestinian people at present and in the future.

Kong Korm denounced the maneuvers of the Tripartite coalition government of Sihanouk, Khieu Samphan and Son Sann, which seeks to massacre the Kampuchean people once again, deceive international opinion and maintain its seat at the United Nations. He informed 'Ali Fayad of the declaration of the sixth conference of the foreign ministers of Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos.

AGRICULTURAL REPORTAGE FOR 16-22, 23-29 AUGUST

16-22 August

BK230635 [Editorial Report] Monitored Kampuchean media have reported the following agricultural developments in the reporting period 16-22 August:

Koh Kong: Phnom Penh Domestic in Cambodian at 0400 GMT on 16 August reports on agricultural production in Kompong Som municipality: So far, more than 4,000 hectares of early, ordinary and late rice have been transplanted and about 200 hectares of corn, sugarcane, potato, manioc, banana and other secondary food crops planted. Phnom Penh SPK in French at 1432 GMT on 17 August adds that fishermen in Kompong Som municipality and Kampot caught 1,900 tons of fish in the first half of this year. They plan to catch 3,000 tons in the second half. Kompong Som fishermen also caught 55 tons of shrimps, 2 tons of cuttlefish and crabs and produced 90 tons of dried fish and 50,000 liters of pickle.

Battambang: Radio Phnom Penh at 1300 GMT on 16 August notes that in Moung Russei District, so far more than 1,600 hectares of floating rice and 13,000 hectares of late rice have been broadcast and 1,000 hectares of late rice sown. In addition, about 900 hectares of late, ordinary and early rice have been transplanted. SPK at 1430 GMT on 17 August adds that as of early August, Mongkolborei District had planted 47,500 hectares of rice, achieving 90 percent of the plan norm. The district people have deepened irrigating canals in two communes totaling 4,000 meters in length and dug a new canal 700 meters long. The district authorities have distributed rice seeds, chemical fertilizer and insecticide to various localities.

Kandal: SPK at 1432 GMT on 16 August says that Koah Thom District, Kandal Province, by mid-August, had planted 4,200 hectares of rice, or 740 hectares above plan. The peasants also harvested 400 hectares of IR-36 rice and (?3,515) hectares of corn. The district authorities have supplied various localities with chemical fertilizer, insecticide and raticide. At 1432 GMT on 17 August the news agency adds that Kandal Province's veterinarians, by early August, had vaccinated about 40,000 pigs against infectious diseases.

Siem Reap-Oddar Meanchey: Phnom Penh Radio at 0400 GMT on 17 August carries a statement by Mrs Khou Chandara, National Assembly member from Siem Reap-Oddar Meanchey Province, to a station correspondent, describing development in all fields in her province. In agriculture, she reports that by the end of July, the province had planted and transplanted 50,450 hectares of rice, or one-third of the plan norm and planted an unspecified amount of secondary food crops. She notes that in the last fishing season, the province caught 8,266 tons of fish. She adds that the peasants also sold to the state more than 10,000 tons of rice and hundreds of tons of mungbean, lotus seed and dried fish.

Kompong Cham: Peasants in Dambe District, Kompong Cham Province, have planted rice on 2,640 hectares, according to SPK at 1432 GMT on 17 August.

Takeo: Radio Phnom Penh at 0400 GMT on 18 August notes that peasants in Samraong District, as of 10 August, had tilled more than 8,600 hectares of land, sown about 2,000 hectares of late, ordinary and early rice, transplanted 580 hectares of late rice, 900 hectares of ordinary rice and 1,200 hectares of early rice, and harvested more than 270 hectares of October rice. In Kirivong District, the radio adds at 0400 GMT on 18 August that so far 14,550 hectares of rice have been transplanted, 3,223 hectares of rice sown and 2,227 hectares of broadcast rice planted. PRK, DK DEFECTORS RALLY TO SIHANOUK

BK010716 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 31 Aug 82

[Text] According to a Thai military source in Prachin Buri Province, about 78 former members of the Heng Samrin forces left their hideout to join the Moulinaka, a Kampuchean resistance group loyal to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, in their fight to liberate Kampuchea from the Vietnamese occupation.

All the dissident troopers deserted their unit in Battambang last Tuesday. Most of them were armed with assault rifles, RPG launchers and a large number of ammunition.

The defectors were met by an assistant of the leader of the Moulinaka at a place about 6 kilometers from the Thai-Kampuchean border.

All of them were later taken to the Moulinaka's camp on the Kampuchean side opposite to the Thai village of Ban Nongchan in Ta Phraya District of Prachin Buri.

The defectors reportedly said they decided to desert the Heng Samrin forces because they could no longer live under the Vietnamese rule. They also said that they wanted to help the Moulinaka overthrow the Vietnamese-led Heng Samrin regime and liberate Kampuchea.

The Khmer Rouge commander told reporters at a meeting place in Kampuchea about 17 kilometers south of Aranyaprathet that some of the Khmer Rouge fighters were so demoralised that they deserted their units to join the other Kampuchean resistance groups.

THIOUNN MUMM AT UNESCO CONFERENCE--The world conference on cultural policy, organized by UNESCO, was held in Mexico City, Mexico, from 26 July to 6 August. It was attended by delegations from 129 countries and more than 50 international organizations. The Democratic Kampuchean delegation, led by Thiounn Mumm, chairman of the National Commission in Charge of UNESCO Affairs, also attended this conference. Our Democratic Kampuchean delegation addressed the conference, exposing the crimes of the Le Duan Vietnamese aggressors in their war of aggression to exterminate the Kampuchean race and destroy Kampuchean culture and civilization. Our delegation talked about Democratic Kampuchea's efforts to organize cultural activities in the zones controlled by Democratic Kampuchea. Our delegation also exposed the maneuvers of the Hanoi enemies, who keep talking about peace but whose concrete actions take the form of aggression to annex neighboring countries and destroy peace and stability in Southeast Asia. VIETNAMESE SOLDIERS MUTINY--On 4 August, Vietnamese soldiers posted in Trapeang Svay, Puok District, Siem Reap Province, mutinied and killed their company commander before fleeing back to Vietnam. The reason for this was because this cruel commander kept forcing the soldiers to go out and fight. This kind of mutiny, due to low morale among Vietnamese soldiers fighting in Kampuchea, happens frequently on every battlefield all over Kampuchea. CUBAN DIPLOMAT VISITS--Phnom Penh, 2 Sep (SPK)--The Kampuchean people firmly support the cause of the Cuban and Nicaraguan peoples in the defense of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of their respective countries, declared Kampuchean Foreign Minister Hun Sen to Miguel Puentes Fraga, Cuban charge d'affaires to Kampuchea. In an audience he granted on Monday to the Cuban diplomat, the latter informed him that recently the U.S. Senate bestowed on the U.S. President the power to deploy the armed forces against the Cuban people. Minister Hun Sen strongly condemned the decision, terming it a hostile act flagrantly threatening the Cuban and Nicaraguan peoples as well as other peoples in the region. All perfidious maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists against the peoples in that region are doomed to failure, he emphasized. [Text] [BK031249 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0441 GMT 3 Sep 82]

OUTGOING POLISH AMBASSADOR--Phnom Penh, 29 Aug (SPK)--Polish ambassador to Kampuchea Sergiusz Mikulicz on 28 August called on Heng Samrin, general secretary of the KPRP Central Committee and chairman of the Council of State, before returning home to undertake other functions. Chairman Heng Samrin stressed the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two parties, governments and peoples which are strengthening with every passing day. He affirmed his support for the just struggle of the Polish Government and people against U.S. imperialism and international reaction which, he said, cannot tear the Polish people from the socialist community and make them stray from Marxism-Leninism. He talked about the successes scored by the Kampuchean people under the just leadership of the KPRP thanks to the disinterested aid of Vietnam, the USSR and other countries of the socialist community, including Poland. The ambassador of Poland deeply thanked the Kampuchean party, government and people for greatly helping him in the accomplishment of his mission. HIGHWAY BRIDGES' REBUILDING--Hanoi, VNA, 25 Aug--Vietnam is helping Laos build 13 concrete bridges and 550 culverts along the three highways in the northern provinces of Xiangkhoang and Houaphan also built with Vietnam's assistance. Construction has been greatly hampered by the numerous unexploded bombs and mines planted by the enemy during the last war, as well as by shortage of materials and equipment and wretched weather. So far, 8 concrete bridges and 370 culverts of Highway 7 have been completed. The longest bridge is the Nam Tiem arch bridge, 60 metres long and 9 metres wide. Work continues on the other 5 bridges on Highway 6 and the Phu Lau-Muong Hiem highway. In the first half of this year, the builders achieved 64 percent of the yearly target, 14 percent higher than in the same period last year. [Text] [Hanoi VNA in English 0721 GMT 26 Aug 82 OW]

LNLF ATTACKS ON SRV TROOPS--Here is a combat report from Sithandone District in Laos: On 8 August the guerrillas of the Lao National Liberation Front [LNLF] attacked the Vietnamese enemies at (Nadi) position killing three soldiers and wounding four others. On 10 August the guerrillas ambushed a Vietnamese platoon moving by boat downstream from (Muong Mun). The boat was sunk and five Vietnamese soldiers, including a sub-lieutenant, were killed. The guerrillas also seized a pistol, a B-40 rocket-launcher, 2 AK's, an AR-15, 18 rounds of pistol ammunition, 4 B-40 rockets, 80 rounds of AR-15 ammunition and a quantity of materiel. In sum, during these two days, the LNLF guerrillas killed or wounded 12 enemy soldiers, including the killed sub-lieutenant; destroyed a boat and a quantity of materiel; and seized a pistol, a B-40 rocket-launcher, 2 AK's, an AR-15 and a quantity of ammunition and materiel. FOREIGN MINISTER CRITICIZED ON POLICY DIRECTION

Sit Views On PRC, SRV, Khmer Coalition Assailed

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 23 Aug 82 pp 6-9

[Article: "Foreign Policy, Courting Trouble"]

[Text] After one stage of the implementation of Thailand's foreign policy on supporting the formation of the Khmer coalition government was completed, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the minister of foreign affairs, invited reporters in the country to meet with him so that he could make a statement and discuss the matter with them. The meeting took place at the conference hall of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the evening of 10 August.

On this occasion, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi explained the principles of Thailand's foreign policy to the reporters. He said that the policy is based on the principle of preserving [the country's] independence and sovereignty. In practice, it changes depending on the situation. But efforts are being made to always keep it within this framework. Concerning the charge that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has done things outside [the framework] of the policy announced to parliament, the minister of foreign affairs has informed parliament and parliament understands. Also, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said that Vietnam is very clever. It was able to defeat th United States because it was able to make use of the people in the United States to the point where the government could not do anything and finally lost the war. This is like a warning to those here who oppose this policy.

Vietnam and the Soviet Union: The Immediate Enemies

Air Chief Marshal Sitthi mentioned that when North Vietnam seized South Vietnam, it also expanded its forces in Laos and Kampuchea, which posed a danger to the security of Thailand, particularly when Vietnam sent troops to occupy Kampuchea. The Thai minister of foreign affairs feels that if Thailand or Asean do not protest, Vietnam's border will extend all the way to the Thai border. And Air Chief Marshal Sitthi does not believe that Vietnam will stop there. As an example, he mentioned the advances of Hitler, who took over countries one by one like this. And based on his own experiences, the foreign minister said that what Vietnam says cannot be believed. For example, Vietnam once said that Vietnam alone can guarantee the safety of Thailand. But then the Non Mak Mun affair happened. Thus, if Thailand does nothing about Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea, it will be the next target. And it would be difficult for Vietnam to change this because this is a matter that would have to be considered by the Politbureau.

At the same time, when the reporters asked him whether Vietnam would really invade Thailand, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi replied that, at present, Vietnam's economy is very poor. And, although it has large military forces, they are spread about guarding a wide area in Indochina. The morale and discipline of the troops is poor. Many soldiers have deserted and many are sick. The Heng Samrin forces are not strong, and they have conflicts with the Vietnamese troops. Because of these things, Vietnam cannot fight Thailand directly. The worrisome thing is that Vietnam can use the method of infiltration to destroy us. And something else that is important is that Vietnam has threatened Thailand because of pressure from the Soviet Union, which wants to gain influence in Southeast Asia in order to seize control of the Strait of Malacca, which is a strategic point in the world. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi pointed this out, citing the fact that the Soviet Union has bypassed Vietnam and helped Laos directly.

China: Everything Can Be Believed

Concerning the threat to Thailand, or Southeast Asia, from China, in response to questions by reporters, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said that he had held frank talks with the Chinese concerning the matter of the Communist Party of Thailand. He said that he asked China to regard this as an internal affair of Thailand which Thailand would handle itself.Chou En-lai and Zhao Chu Yang constantly replied that [China] would not support the CPT and that , if the government provided support, the Chinese people would protest because they do not favor acting "like a prince." At present, China has greatly reduced the support given to the communist parties in the Asean countries. For example, it closed the Voice of the People of Thailand radio station (VOPT) and that of the Malay Communist Party. And the help given to Thailand in the oil matter was Chinese help.

Besides this, the Thai minister of foreign affairs believes that China will not pose a threat to anyone since it still has problems. It must greatly develop the country during this period.

In disputing Vietnam's claim about the Chinese threat, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi mentioned the reply by Tan Si Ghazli, the Malaysian minister of foreign affairs, who said: 1. Concerning the claim that the Chinese threat to Vietnam comes from the Khmer front, where Pol Pot is China's agent, this is not true because Pol Pot came to power because of Vietnamese intervention. 2. As for Chinese intervention and acts of destruction in Kampuchea, Ghazali feels that it is Vietnam that has interfered and carried out acts of destruction in Kampuchea. 3. Concerning China launching a war to teach Vietnam a lesson, Ghazali thinks that this happened because Vietnam let the Soviet Union in. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi agrees with all of this and he repeated that he went and observed things and did not see one Chinese soldier in Kampuchea. Therefore, how can it be claimed that there is a threat from China?

Besides this, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said that China had agreed to the proposal concerning forming a Khmer coalition and allowing the Kampucheans to select their own leader and that China was prepared to negotiate with Vietnam if Vietnam would withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. In conclusion, the minister of foreign affairs said that we should not fall into the trap set by Vietnam and believe that the Vietnamese invasion was launched in response to the Chinese threat. China is not as worrisome as Vietnam, which has pulled the Soviet Union into things.

Thailand's Role: Who Is Providing Support?

Concerning the meaning of the words "Thailand's policy of neutrality," Air Chief Marshal Sitthi responded to reporters' questions by saying that, on the political front, we are not neutral between Democratic Kampuchea and Vietnam's methods. We have always opposed this. And because of the belief that Vietnam poses a danger to Thailand and Asean, Thailand exerted pressure on Asean to issue a resolution calling on Vietnam to withdraw all of its troops from Kampuchea and allow the various Khmer factions to decide things for themselves.

Besides this, the view that Vietnam will not be able to use military methods to totally destroy the forces of the opposition Khmer groups and that the formation of a Khmer coalition should be supported in order to oppose Vietnam as a group, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi feels that since Vietnam has already been encircled economically and politically, if a little military pressure is exerted, Vietnam will have to negotiate with Asean.

Air Chief Marshal Sitthi pointed out that the formation of the Khmer coalition was a Kampuchean affair. They united by themselves; Thailand was not the prime mover in this. The only thing is that, when it looked as if the Khmer groups would split apart, we saved the situation and a loose coalition was formed. They made the announcement elsewhere. And when Sihanouk came here, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs did not get involved at all. Thus, we have not provoked Vietnam. And concerning this, no country, not even Vietnam, has complained about anything.

However, the Thai minister of foreign affairs feels that preserving the Khmer coalition's seat in the United Nations is important and that we must help preserve their seat. If the seat is given to the Heng Samrin group, no one will be able to help the Khmer coalition legally. The things done by Thailand and Asean have succeeded and foreign support has continually increased. For example, when Non Mak Mun was attacked, we received weapons from the United States. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi also appealed [for people] to forget the Khmer Rouge's history of killing because this is an internal affair of their country. And he said that the killing of Thai people at Ban Noi Pa Rai affected just the border area. These Kampucheans do not pose the danger to us that the Vietnamese do. Talking about the history of Pol Pot makes people hate Pol Pot. Besides the fact that this is interference in Kampuchea, it has resulted in some countries not recognizing their seat in the United Nations. If a country starts this, others will also withdraw [their support] and Vietnam will easily occupy Kampuchea.

Thai Policy: Courting Trouble

From these statements of Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, it is clear that Thailand had to become involved in the Kampuchean problem to the point where it is feared that this may pose a danger to the country because of Asean's and Thailand's belief that Vietnam is a threat to the peace of this region and that Vietnam will not stop its invasion at this point because of pressure from the Soviet Union, which wants to gain influence in this region. This has resulted in Thailand defining the word "neutral" incorrectly, that is, making a comparison between Democratic Kampuchea and the Vietnamese invasion. Thus, no matter which way we move, Thailand will constantly interfere in the internal affairs of these two countries, if not Kampuchea, then Vietnam. What the word "neutral" should mean is remaining neutral between the great powers, that is, China and America on one hand and the Soviet Union on the other. Both of these power groups have constantly tried to compel small countries such as Thailand to fight proxy wars. Remaining neutral in this latter sense will enable Thailand to consider matters and decide on a foreign policy by holding to the interests of the country, that is, remaining neutral by not arguing with Vietnam, which would benefit China, and not arguing with China, which would benefit the Soviet Union.

The Enemy of an Enemy Is Not a Friend

If the Thai minister of foreign affairs returns to a position of neutrality in the latter matter but continues to view China and Russia from the point of view of which country is the greater enemy of Thailand, this is not logical. This may stem from outside inducements or from some fear that has led to prejudice. An example is the view that Vietnam is a danger to us even though we know that they cannot invade us. And so we have implmented a policy that will increase the tension with Vietnam. At the same time, we view China as a friend who has good intentions toward Thailand since it provided help with oil and reduced its aid to the CPT. And we believe everything China says. This matter should be given much thought. If we do so, we will see that, historically, both China and Vietnam have always supported the CPT in its attempt to destroy Thailand. Because Vietnam and China split apart, it was not convenient for China to support the CPT and so it had to reduce its support. Another reason is that China feels that Thailand is doing what China wants, that is, opposing Vietnam by supporting the Khmer coalition, which will beneift China in its attempt to surround Vietnam and simultaneously limit Soviet influence. Thus, China has reduced its disagreements with the Thai government. If Thailand someday fails to follow China's policy, it is entirely possible that China will find a way to pressure Thailand by again supporting the CPT. Thus, the fact that China is an enemy of Vietnam does not mean that it is a real friend of Thailand. Because there are many cases in which the enemy of an enemy is an enemy.

Besides this, there is another reason why the CPT has now become weaker and that is that the conflict between China and Vietnam has resulted in Vietnam expelling the CPT, which is a Chinese-faction communist party, from Laos. The CPT does not have a rear base and so it has become weaker. Thus, when the Thai government has launched suppression operations, it has been able to destroy the CPT easily. The thing that the Thai minister of foreign affairs should not forget is what Chou En-lai was really saying when he said that [China] would not support the CPT. Every time Thailand protested about this, the Chinese government said that this was a party-to-party matter and that the government was not involved, even though the Chinese Communist Party is the one who always stipulates the policies of the government. And when Deng Xiaoping announced the "4 moderns" policy, China launched the war to teach Vietnam a lesson because Vietnam had occupied Kampuchea. If China was going to teach Vietnam a lesson for Vietnam having brought in the Soviet Union, it probably would have done so before then. Or it would have announced at that time that Vietnam must separate from the Soviet Union. But there was no report on this. Thus, as for the statement by the Thai minister of foreign affairs, besides concealing the facts, it clearly shows that [we] are protecting China and preserving Chinese interests.

Even though the support provided by the Thai government to the Khmer coalition is limited to political support, the great powers such as China have sent supplies to the Khmer Rouge group.

Concerning being the prime mover [in the formation of] the Khmer coalition, even though Thailand has tried to explain matters by saying that it was not involved very much, the things that have been done, the statements by the Khmer coalition and the Asean countries in praising the Thai minister of foreign affairs as the prime mover and the fact that Sihanouk and Son Sann have been allowed to pass back and forth across the Thai border make it impossible to deny the fact that Thailand has been a busybody in this.

Besides this, concerning the view of the ministers of foreign countries who feel tht the formation of the Khmer coalition will not lead to a national war, these countries can be compared to spectators at a boxing match in which Vietnam and Thailand are the fighters. Thus, the view of the fight is different. Things are fun for the spectators. But as one of the fighters, things are painful for Thailand. Thus, [Sitthi] cannot use their views as criteria, except to cite them in order to reinforce views that support his position.

The Way Out Is With National Interests

Concerning the fact that PATINYA has criticized the policy of supporting the Khmer coalition in order to prolong the war, we have not fallen into a trap set by Vietnam as Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila has said over and over. We have criticized the policy because we are afraid that the minister of foreign affairs will fall into the trap set by the great powers that want Thailand to fight a war in their place. And we are afraid that he is looking at the problems in a very superficial way and that this may be very dangerous for the country.

PATINYA feels that Vietnam's invasion was wrong. We call on Vietnam to act in accord with the resolution of the United Nations. We feel that Vietnam may pose a danger to Thailand in the future, but we do not think that Vietnam is now in a position to fight Thailand since there is no way that it can defeat Thailand. Thus, concerning the fact that the CPT and China have been doing everything possible to push Thailand into a war with Vietnam, with the CPT and China constantly announcing that they will support Thailand if Thailand is invaded by Vietnam and with Thailand implementing a policy that has increased the tension, this is simply creating a problem where none existed. Thus, PATINYA feels that Thailand should implement a policy of neutrality and not get involved or serve as the tool of some great power. Instead, Thailand should quickly try to build up its economic, political and social strength during this period when Vietnam is still unprepared. The result will be that no enemy will dare tangle with us, even if we do share a border with Vietnam. Concerning implementing a policy of neutrality that will preserve our interests, we can do this if we do not belittle our own capabilities or become so transfixed by the cheers or the small benefits that the great powers throw our way that we overlook the interests of the nation. An example is Israel. Even though it was condemned by the entire world for its invasion of Lebanon and even though its backer, the United States, opposed this, Israel had to do this in order to maintain its security. Using this as an example does not mean that Thailand has to invade someone like Israel did. It just points out the fact that preserving the national interests is important, regardless of how great the risk is. This is different from our policy on the Khmer coalition, which places us in a risky position without our gaining anything from this.

Students: Great Powers Use Thailand

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 23 Aug 82 pp 10-12

[Article: "The Students Have Challenged the Minister to Return to School"]

[Text] The present foreign policy of the Thai government has been widely criticized by people in almost all circles, including students, intellectuals and people in general. That is, there has been criticism about the Thai government, particularly the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, being the prime mover in the formation of the Khmer coalition government, a government composed of the Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Khieu Samphan and Son Sann groups with Prince Sihanouk serving as president. The aim is to have the Khmer coalition government restore the independence of Kampuchea and rid itself of Vietnamese influence, in which Heng Samrin is the leader [of the Vietnamese-backed faction]. Concerning this support, the Thai government claims that it is providing support in order to do things in accord with the resolutions of the United Nations and Asean and in order to improve the image of the Khmer Rouge government and halt the enemy, Vietnam, outside the country. Concerning the fact that people have criticized Thailand's foreign policy, this has caused confusion among the people in general. This is because some people, most of whom are powerful people in government circles or people who have close ties to the government, support this policy while others, particularly people in general and the mass media, oppose this policy.

[Concerning this latter group], there was an open letter from SIAM RAT in the 21 June 1982 edition and an open letter form PATINYA to the prime minister. And Mr Prayun Chanyawong wrote [such strong] articles in his column that he has now been silenced. But there is still continued opposition to this policy.

Students Voice Opposition

On 3 July, approximately 30 Ramkhamhaeng University students who are members of the Border Project and Coffee Council groups gathered together at the Government House to submit an open letter to General Prem Tinsulanon. The letter expressed their opposition to the government supporting the Khmer coalition. There were many posters with various slogans. For example: "Peace [with] Vietnam by [Vietnam] withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea and Thailand not supporting the Khmer coalition." "Thailand must not be the tool of the great powers." "Will uniting the Khmer factions halt the enemy outside the house or invite the enemy into the house?" At the same time, they distributed a statement opposing Thailand's foreign policy on the Khmer coalition. The statement said that this policy amounts to inviting the enemy into the house and that it serves the policies of the great powers who want Thailand to fight a war as their proxy and expand their polwer. This would not benefit our country at all. Rather we would suffer losses by doing so. Thailand would have to spend more money to defend the border. Concerning the atmosphere for investment, tourism and trade, instead of profiting, we would lose huge profits. And if we blunder into a war, in the end this may well lead to a disaster.

In this statement, the view of the Ramkhamhaeng University students is that we should not look out for enemies from just one direction, that is, Vietnam. Rather, we should look out for enemies from all directions, particularly China, which already has a proxy, the CPT. Thailand will not benefit at all by fighting a war as a proxy for a great power. At the end of the statement written by the students, they called on the government tc review its foreign policy in the matter of uniting the Khmer factions. They also proposed [what they consider to be] the correct path to take. That is, Thailand should implement a policy of real neutrality. The internal affairs of Kampuchea should be left to the Kampucheans to handle. At the same time, we should turn to developing our country so that it makes progress and so that we can face any enemy by ourself.

With This Policy, We Have Done the Best Thing

Rear Admiral Prakop Wasinon, the deputy secretary-general for political affairs, went and met with the students. He told the students that the "government will solve this problem in accord with the resolution of the United Nations, which is an international organization, and the resolution of Asean. With this policy, we have done the best thing. We do not want to fight with military forces. Rather, we want to handle things politically." The deputy secretary-general also said that "if Vietnam does not stop carrying out such activities, the government will look for a way to solve the problem politically." He said that the government would soon provide a written response concerning this matter.

Sitthi Is Angry: Students Should Return to Their Classrooms

Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the minister of foreign affairs, answered reporters' questions concerning the matter of Ramkhamhaeng University students protesting in front of the Government House and calling on the government to review its policy of supporting the formation of a Khmer coalition. He said that "students have no business getting involved in this matter. If they have some question, they can go ask the MPs since the Ministry of Foreign Affaris presented the matter to parliament and parliament passed a resolution approving this." The reporters replied that the "students are afraid that Thailand will end up like Lebanon." Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said that "if the students have such doubts, they shouuld go study things more deeply. How could Thailand be like Lebanon? This is impossible." The minister of foreign affairs also said that "if the situation in Thailand was really like that in Lebanon, Mr Co Thach would already be in Thailand."

The Students Have Challenged the Minister to Return to the Classroom

After Air Chief Marshal Sitthi spoke with reporters about student opposition to the policy of uniting the Khmer factions and said that the students had not studied the Kampuchean problem deeply and should, therefore, return to their classrooms and not interfere in politics, students from the Border Project, Ram-Tabi and Coffee Council groups at Ramkhamhaeng University responded to Minister Sitthi by saying that "we, as students at Ramkhamhaeng University, which is the largest university in the country, have discussed the attitude and interview statements of the deputy secretary-general and minister of foreign affairs.We do not think that this was the proper attitude or that these were proper statements for people holding high-level positions and who have great responsibility for governing the country." The students feel that, even though Air Chief Marshal Sitthi became the minister of foreign affairs without the approval of the people, that is all right. But, he is a "despicable" minister because he has used his power to implement a policy that risks leading Thailand into a disaster. He is unwilling to listen to the opposing views of the people, and he has not responded to the various questions. Instead, he has told [the students] to go ask someone else or said only that "this is a correct policy."

Besides this, the statement issued by the students also said that Air Chief Marshal Sitthi has "insulted" the students by saying that they do not really know anything and should return to their classrooms. The students said that this was a great "insult" to the students and people since these students have at least a high-school education. The minister of foreign affairs has not been willing to speak with them. As for the people in general, who have less education than the students and who are in the majority in the country, he has not been willing to meet with them at all. The students also stressed that "he cannot forbid the students and people from criticizing the government's foreign policy. The only people he can forbid from doing so are government officials and newspapermen, such as in the case of Mr Prayun Chanyawong." In their statement, the students challenged Minister Sitthi by saying that "Air Chief Marshal Sitthi received his degree in engineering and, therefore, he is not capable of formulating a correct foreign policy. He should return to school in order to study international politics." The end of the statement stressed that "it is not too late for Minister Sitthi to change himself and become a good minister for Thailand."

Conclusion

The government's policy has been widely opposed by the mass media and by the students and people. But the government, particularly Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, has expressed dissatisfaction and said that this is not their business and that they should not interfere. The government has also stressed that what has been done was the right thing to do and the best way to handle the matter. The views of others are, therefore, not important and they are incorrect. PATINYA feels that in order to develop the administrative system and move from today's semi-democracy to a full democracy in accord with Policy No 65/1982, the government should give all people a chance to express their views freely, including views that support and views that oppose the policies of the government. Patriotism should not be restricted to just one group. Otherwise, not only will the minister not have a place to further his studies, he may not even have a country to live in.

Open Letter Refutes Sit Rejoinder

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 23 Aug 82 pp 11, 12

[Article: "The Minister of Foreign Affairs Should Return to School"]

[Text] Representatives of the "Border Project" and "Coffee Council" student groups at Ramkhamhaeng University sent an open letter to General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister, on 3 August 1982. The letter expressed opposition to the government's foreign policy and asked the government to review the policy concerning the matter of the government serving as the prime mover in the formation of the Khmer coalition government. The [students'] view is that the implmentation of the Thai government's foreign policy in the matter of giving full support to the Khmer coalition will result in Thailand having to fight a war on behalf of great power countries. This amounts to inviting the enemy into the house, and Thailand will not profit at all. Just the opposite, Thailand will suffer great losses, including having to increase the money spent on defending the border and damaging the atmosphere for foreign investments. And if Thailand gives much support to the Khmer coalition government, Vietnam will have to eradicate the forces of the Khmer coalition. When the Khmer coalition forces suffer heavy losses, more and more of them will flee into Thailand and Vietnam will have a legitimate excuse to pursue and eradicate the Khmer forces that have fled into Thailand. Thailand will become a "second Lebanon" or, at the very least, a "national war" will break out. Thailand will experience a disaster and may become communist in the end.

When this open letter was submitted, the prime minister did not personally come out to accept the letter. Before someone came out to accept the letter, [the students] had to talk with officials at the Government House for a long time. In the end, Rear Admiral Prakop Wasinon, the deputy secretary-general of the Office of the Prime Minister for Political Affairs, came out to accept the letter. He told the student representatives that the [government's] foreign policy is a correct policy that was formulated in accord with the resolutions of the United Nations and Asean. At the same time, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila granted an interview to reporters concerning the matter of students submitting this open letter. He said that the foreign policy had been carefully considered by many sectors and that it had been approved by the cabinet and parliament. Thus, if the students have any questions, they should ask MPs. He also said that the students have not studied the Khmer problem seriously and that the students should return to their classrooms. They should not interfere in politics.

We, as students at Ramkhamhaeng University, which is the largest university in the country, have carefully considered the attitude and interview statements of the deputy secretary-general of the Office of the Prime Minister for Political Affairs and of the minister of foreign affairs. We do not feel that this was the proper attitude or that these were proper statements for people holding high-level positions and who have great responsibility for governing the country. Our reasons are as follows:

First, even though Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila became the minister of foreign affairs without the approval of the people, that is all right. But when he got power, he used his power to implement a policy that risks leading Thailand into a disaster. He is unwilling to listen to the opposing views of the majority of the people. He is a very "despicable" minister.

Second, in developing the administrative system and changing from the present semi-democracy to a full democracy, an important thing is that the government must give all the people a chance to ask questions about the government's policies at all times. And the ministers who are directly responsible must answer the various questions. They must not tell the people with questions to go ask someone else or just say that "this is a correct policy."

Third, his statement that the students should return to their classrooms and not interfere in politics or administrative matters and that the students do not have any real knowledge is a great "insult" to the students and people. That is, the students have at least a high-school education but the person who serves as the minister of foreign affairs will not talk to them. As for the people in general, who are less educated than the students and who form the majority of the people in the country, he will not meet with them at all.

Based on the attitude and interview statements of people who are directly responsible for the implementation of this foreign policy, we would like to inform Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the (Thai) minister of foreign affairs that:

1. You can take measures to prohibit the mass media and government officials from criticizing this foreign policy (such as in the case of Mr Prayun Chanyawong). But you cannot prohibit students and people in general from criticizing the policy.

2. Concerning your statement that you will resign from the position of minister of foreign affairs if this foreign policy is wrong, this is a totally irresponsible statement. If it turns out that the policy is wrong, it will mean that the country will have already have experienced a disaster, that is, there will no longer be any government for you to resign from.

3. The person who holds the position of minister of foreign affairs must be a knowledgeable and capable person who is an expert in international politics. Thus, the person holding this position must be a person who has continuously studied and thought deeply about the world situation. Concerning this, the student representatives who have submitted this open letter have studied and followed world events, particularly the situation in Kampuchea, both in the classroom and outside the classroom. As for in school, even though they have not graduated, they are still capable of determining which policies are right and which are wrong. This is different from Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila who graduated with a degree in engineering. He is thus incapable of determining which foreign policies are right and which are wrong. Therefore, he should return to school in order to start studying international politics.

4. A minister in a country should maintain the interests of his country. A Thai minister should not be working to maintain the interests of Kampuchea, China, Singapore or the United States.

What has been said here is meant to inform Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila that it is not too late for him to change himself so that he becomes a good minister for Thailand. And we would like to remind him of an old proverb that says that a "toad will not realize its own nature until it sees its own liquid." As for Thailand, we hope that Thailand does not have to wait "until the liquid runs out" before it wakes up. -- Border Project, Coffee Council and Ram-Tabi student groups, Ramkhamhaeng University, August 1982.

OPINION LEADERS GIVE VIEWS ON RTG INVOLVEMENT WITH KHMER COALITION

Bagnkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 19 Jul 82 pp 38-43

[Article: "Various Views"]

[Text] The two phrases that are being spoken by many people with regard to the matter of Thailand, in the name of Asean, playing a great role in the formation of the Khmer coalition government are "the farmer and the cobra" and "inviting the enemy into the house." There are many people from various circles in Thai society who do not agree with each other. And the Thai government does not want to express a view that differs from the policy implemented by the minister of foreign affairs. Even a giant daily newspaper like THAI RAT received an official warning from Section 5, Police Precinct 3, Special Branch Division, about its senior cartoonist, Pratun Chanyawong, on Sunday, 4 July. "Mr Suklek," the originator of this cartoon, has thus had his mouth gaged since 11 July.

The weekly magazine CHATURAT, which you are reading and which was recently involved in a case, had to "change" but the editors are the same group as before. Even though on one hand there is a good understaiding of "what is what," on the other hand we cannot ignore our duty as part of the mass media. This special report, "Various Views," was created by gathering the opinions and ideas of people in various circles as time and space permitted.

According to Thai grammar, the phrase "invite the enemy into the house?" must really be read "has the enemy really been invited into the house?"

A Major Mistake

I think that this is a major mistake in carrying out Thailand's foreign policy. I have continually expressed the view that Thailand should not become deeply involved in the Kampuchean problem. We should remain truly neutral. There are various strategic and international political reasons for this, in particular:

1. By tying itself to one faction, Thailand will lack flexibility and international bargaining power. It is true that Vietnam invaded and occupied Kampuchea. The Heng Samrin government is the puppet of Vietnam. But at the same time, Prince Norodom Sihanouk has acted like an enemy of Thailand ever since the Khao Phra Vihan affair. He constantly cheered the Chinese communists and attacked the Thai government until he was overthrown and fled to China. Pol Pot and Khieu Samphan committed many crimes against their people. Approximately one-third of the people in the country were killed in cruel and barbaric ways. They supported the Communist Party of Thailand in forming the Siem Organization in order to carry out acts of terror in Thailand. Khmer Rouge soldiers came and brutally killed Thai citizens, including pregnant women and children, at Ban Noi Pa Rai. They planted mines and frequently ambushed Thai units on patrol along the border. These Kampucheans are now stateless. They are of no value to Thailand and they have no value in the eyes of the majority of the Kampuchean people since they are the people who destroyed Kampuchea.

2. As for supporting the Khmer coalition in order to prolong the war in Kampuchea, which is in accord with the policies of China, the United States and some Asean countries, particularly Singapore, Thailand will suffer economic losses, the investment atmosphere will be damaged, tourism will be harmed and international trade will suffer. We will continue to have a refugee problem and more and more refugees will be left behind in Thailand since the governments of other countries are experiencing greater problems in helping Khmer refugees leave Thailand. Furthermore, the tension along the border created by the policy of prolonging the war will create at least three other important problems:

First, the war may spread to Thailand at any time as long as the conditions are present. In particular, if there is a rebellion in Thailand and the communists get involved, this will drag in both Vietnamese and Chinese communist forces and Thailand will become the battlefield for the various sides, with the result being a communist Thailand.

Second, prolonging the war may compel Vietnam to change its policy and join hands with China and then invade Thailand. When that happens, the Khmer Rouge of Pol Pot and Khieu Samphan will stream into Thailand and/or cooperate with the CPT in waging a large-scale revolutionary war.

Third, prolonging the war will hasten the extermination of the Khmer race and give Vietnam a chance to swallow Kampuchea more quickly. When the majority of the people in Kampuchea are Vietnamese, the Khmer coalition will no longer have a base of Khmer people to provide support and, in the end, they will enter Thailand. We will thus have Khmer Rouge forces coming in and causing trouble in Thailand.

3. Carrying on a policy of supporting the Khmer coalition will ruin Thailand's chances of using its correct strategic position to bargain with the great powers and the communist countries to keep them from intervening in the internal affairs of Thailand. At the same time, we should implement a policy that will make Thailand a center in creating peace and neutrality in this part of the world. One thing Thailand can do is to weight the balance of power between the Soviet-Vietnamese side and the Chinese side and enable the Indochina countries to become a buffer state between China and Southeast Asia. -- Dr Somchai Rakwichit, an independent scholar.

Support Should Be Given

I think that we have to look at this policy from two angles. First is the effect on Kampuchea itself. Vietnam invaded Kampuchea and there have been problems ever since. People throughout the world have opposed this and since the Thai government recognizes world opinion, there is nothing strange about the fact that we have supported the legal government of Kampuchea. The second point concerns the people of Kampuchea. This country, a neighbor of ours, was invaded. The peoples of Thailand and Kampuchea have been closely involved wih each other historically concerning both border matters and race. The Thai people should help the Kampuchean people fight the invaders. Thailand will benefit directly from this. Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea has created constant tension along the Thai border and so I agree with the Thai government's decision to play a role in uniting the Khmer factions. But our supportive attitude is still confusing and there is a lack of unity. For example, some government units have used the radio to question this policy. I do not understand why some high-ranking administrators are trying to make the people suspicious of this policy. The government should quickly clarify its position and explain why it has taken the position it has. However, in providing help, careful plans should be made by studying the lessons of the past. I do not want to see us used as a tool by the great powers and then have them come in and settle matters directly using force. Rather, we should help the Kampuchean people gain the right to choose their own rulers. -- Anan Lohaphattanabamrung, president of the Mahidol student council.

There must Be a Show of Decisiveness

I agree. Vietnam is still in Kampuchea. Why shouldn't we help the opposition forces? Don't let them stand alone. We must show decisiveness too. We do not have to act furtively or be shy any more. As for what effect this will have on us, if we do not do anything, we will still be affected. Vietnam is in Kampuchea and is strengthening its position. We have already been affected. Things have been bad for a long time. Thus, regardless of whether we support the opposition forces or not, we will still be affected. But doing things this way may produce better results. -- Hem Siriwattanatham, former [student-body] president, Silapakon University.

Too Many Excuses

I think that Thailand has made too many excuses. Looking at the pluses and minuses, the three Khmer factions have not yet succeeded in uniting. Each of these people was a major leader in his faction. If these groups fail to unite and Vietnam later uses the domino theory, it will be claimed that Thailand interfered greatly. And if Vietnam uses force to pressure the Khmer forces and the Khmer troops stream into Thailand, what will we do? Another thing, Vietnam is trying to compromise with Asean and improve relations with Indonesia. Indonesia is still wavering. Things will be dangerous for us if we act like the spearhead. Is it worth it? CHATURAT probably knows. -- Charun Saengsathon, president of the Sinakharin University student council.

Aseans's Game of Buying Time

Asean is just buying time. Asean certainly knows that the war for Kampuchea will continue for a long time. The immediate problem is Kampuchea's situation in the United Nations. Concerning this situation, even if Thailand has to give up its neutral position, this is necessary. Personally, I do not agree. But by chance we nave had pressure applied by neighboring countries. Mr Prasong Sunsiri, the secretary-general of the National Security Council, is very right-wing. He does not see the problems arising from the real situation or from history. The influence of the Secuirty Council and from the military have caused us to do this. I think that it is just another drama. Nothing much can be done. I think that Thailand will be very disappointed in the future. And when that happens, Mr Prasong and Mr Sitthi (Sawetsila) should have an answer ready for the younger generation [when they ask] "why?" -- Sonthi Limthongkun, the journal CHIWIT DONG SU.

We Must Distinguish Between Our Enemies and Our Friends

I think that what the government is doing is for the survival of the country. Everything that is being done is for the good of the country, for the survival of Thailand. I agree with what is being done. The action taken is one measure. Who said there is something behind this? I do not know. Other countries are secretely involved to the utmost. They have gone into all of Kampuchea. They have stationed 200,000 troops there. I think that we must distinguish between our enemies and our friends. As for what our government has done, I think that this is the correct thing. Thailand does not want some other country to occupy our country and then tell us that it has done so in order to help set up an administrative system and run our economy for us. As for Kampuchea, we know what has happened, don't we? Those who do not agree with what the Thai government has done have a part in this. I would like to ask them whether they agree with what Vietnam has done in Kampuchea. Do they agree with what the Soviet Union has done in Afganistan? Do they agree with what the Jews are doing in Lebanon? If they agree, then all right. But as for me, I do not agree with what has been done in these three cases. These countries have invaded other countries. But we have gotten involved only slightly and people are afraid. What is there to be afraid of? Things may not be good in the short term. There may be fighting. But things will be good in the long term. Do we want them to fight inside our country or outside our country? We want them to carry on the fighting outside our country, right? -- Chumphon Phonprapha, a businessman.

A Defensive Strategy

If something is wrong in the beginning, it will always be wrong. Our strategy is a defensive, not an offensive, strategy. When I say it is a defensive strategy, what I mean is that, since we feel that Vietnam may invade Thailand, we must make various military preparations. In the struggle, if attention is given only to defense from the very beginning, things will be difficult. Why don't we plan an offensive strategy? That is, we must think about how to attack Vietnam and how to attack Kampuchea and Laos. It isn't necessary to send troops to attack them. We can attack them economically. In such a situation, we have a good opportunity to gain economic influence over Kampuchea and Laos and even Vietnam. This is a new world today. What are we doing? -- Choetchu Sophonphanit, Bangkok Thanathon Company.

Inviting the Enemy Into the House

Whatever the government does it should act with caution. Otherwise, it will be like inviting the enemy into the house. Regardless of whether Asean provides support or not, we are the country that is nearest the problem. There are many enemies, like the Vietnamese refugees, in Thailand. The government may not be aware of this problem. But things should not be done openly. Also, in the hearts of Thais such as myself, there is still much resentment against Sihanouk.— Piya Kangwan, Public Relations, Railroad Union.

The Government Has Done the Wrong Thing

In my view, and I have discussed this with many people, the correct policy for the Thai government is to remain truly neutral. It should not side with any one side. This shows that the government has announced one thing but has done the opposite. The government has done the wrong thing. We say that we are neutral. But, at present, I would like to ask whether we are really neutral as we have claimed? When the Khmer groups formed their government in exile, they had to locate it near the Thai border. Vietnam is aware of this and if it cannot put up with this, it will attack us. We will have to fight back and a border war will break out. Is this good? -- Prathin Thammarongchoi, Railroad Union.

Each Day, We Are Putting Our Hands Further Into the Box

Its very difficult to say. From the standpoint of helping to form the Khmer coalition government, this is good only with respect to the immediate problems. It is all right for the short term from the standpoint of gaining world respect for this government. But I do not agree with this for the long term. For the long term, I think this will be dangerous for us. At present, each day we are putting our hands further into the box. And doing this greatly endangers our image and our security. This is my comment. -- Phichai Rattakun, the leader of the Democrat Party.

I Do Not Want to Say Anything Now

I do not want to say anything now. But I do want to say that I do have my own opinions. I have my own policy. I have an independent foreign policy. You can ask whatever you want. We must not get involved in the fighting in other countries unnecessarily. My foreign policy stresses preserving the interests of the country and holds this above all else. I will believe and listen to anyone if my country is safe and if it is respected and honored. Conversely, I will not listen to anyone who does something that is not in the best interests of our country. As for whether the government is right or wrong in getting involved in this, I do not want to say anything now. I only want to affirm that I have clear ideas. -- General Kriangsak Chamanan, MP from Roi Et.

A Hope For Political Results

Concerning the fact that the Khieu Samphan and Son Sann groups have agreed to form a coalition government with Prince Sihanouk as the head, this is a change that has a greater chance of bringing political results than economic results. The purpose of forming this coalition government is to have just one representative, or just one governmental body, that can be recognized by all countries, particularly the Asean countries and the People's Republic of China. A second aim is to preserve Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations, for which there may be a vote during the next session. Economically, if the formation of the Khmer coalition government is completed and the situation in the western provinces of Kampuchea along the Thai border is quiet enough, the border may be opened for trading and this would benefit the Thai economy. But this will probably depend on the attitude of the Heng Samrin government and of Vietnam. -- Dr Wichit Suraphongchai, Bangkok Bank.

The Chinese Have Beaten Us

I think that this was done without any awareness of the facts and that the timing was completely wrong. As for Sihanouk, if we are going to play with him, we should have done so long ago, not now. This doesn't make any sense. Thailand is thinking of only one thing and that is how to keep the war outside the country. This is not correct. This is not in accord with humanitarian principles. And the important thing is that, concerning this matter, Singapore thinks....Put simply, the Chinese think that they have beaten us, regardless of whether it is the island Chinese or the mainland Chinese. -- Sulak Siwarak, an independent scholar.

It Is We Who Are Close

I don't agree. We should do this openly. The profits will go to neighboring countries. We will gain very little. Our neighbors are far away. It is we who are close to the situation. -- Sangwien Miphaophong, Bangkok Bank.

Inviting the Enemy Into the House

This will not be good for Thailand. It is like inviting the enemy into the house since [this is happening] along the border. If a war breaks out, Thailand will be affected. We should remain totally neutral. -- Thoetphum Chaidi, a former labor leader.

What Will We Do?

This is a method that we like to use. That is, whenever there is a problem, we let the problem solve itself.We just let time pass and "wait and see." We do not know what the results will be. We don't know what we will do if the Khmer Rouge or Sihanouk face a crisis and ask us for weapons. The only result that can be seen is that this will preserve the Khmer Rouge's seat in the United Nations. -- Soemsiri Ekkachai, a senior newspaperman.

A Disaster Is About to Happen

We have involved ourselves in the conflict. Who can guarantee that Thailand will not have a conflict with them? We must hold to a policy of strict neutrality. A policy of neutrality is the correct policy. It has been praised by people throughout the world because it will help create peace in this region. The border situation will become more tnese. As for what we are doing, it can be seen that we are not maintaining our neutrality. As an MP, I am afraid that a disaster is about to happen. As for what I have said here, I am not siding with anyone.

People in all groups are against Thailand getting involved. Even Mr Prayun (Chanyawong) does not agree. Who are the Khmer Rouge and where do they come from? They once killed our people and we filed a protest with the United Nations. Sihanouk once said that he would never again come to Thailand. In the Khao Phra Vihan affair, he returned his honorary academic degrees. This shows that Thais forget easily. However, concerning this matter, we should not forget the great danger to the country. -- Wong Phonnikon, an MP from Nong Khai.

Inviting the Enemy Into the House

This is a very risky matter. Some mistake may be made. We were once neutral in the Khmer war. But since we have taken the lead in uniting the three Khmer factions, we have become the enemy of Vietnam. They may try to "pick an argument" with us. This is like inviting the enemy into the house. We should look for a political solution so they can solve their own problems. -- Sunthon Thasai, an MP from Korat.

A Fire of War

I cannot give you an opinion because foreign affairs is a very delicate matter. It might have an effect on national security in the future. We do not yet have accurate data. But I am going to submit a motion to have parliament discuss this matter. I think that there will definitely be a confrontation between Thailand and Vietnam. And I would like to ask whether this is the only path open to the government. At present, the government is playing with fire. This fire has both benefits and penalities [depending on] whether you know how to use it. But the fire that the government is playing with is not an ordinary fire but the fire of war. -- Piyanat Watraphon, an MP from Sisaket.

Inviting the Enemy Into the House

I don't think that Thailand should have gotten involved in uniting the three Khmer factions. Most of these are exiles who use bases in Thailand. I do not agree because:

First, this is inviting the enemy into the house. I am afraid that the same thing will happen as happened with Israel and Lebanon.

Second, whenever a country has a problem, that country should be the one to solve the problem. We should not get involved. Even though we are a member of Asean, we should remain neutral like other countries. But we rushed to recognize Sihanouk and [he] has used Thai territory to provoke the enemy, who can use this an an excuse to invade us and cause trouble, which may result in a war breaking out. They can claim that Thailand caused the trouble and provided their enemies with rest areas and supplies.

Third, actually, Sihanouk and Son Sann are just paper tigers. The aim is just to preserve the seat in the United Nations. They have no chance of ever regaining state power in Kampuchea. When Sihanouk had power, he could not keep his power. And all three groups have always been enemies of each other. At present, they are like people without hope.

I think that if the government continues to carry out such a policy, this will cause trouble for the people. I intend to submit a motion to parliament this Friday. -- Bunkoet Phimwonmethakhom, an MP from Khon Kaen.

This Is Good

This is good, especially from the standpoint of having been threatened by the imperialists in this area. This decision by the Thai government may help ease the threats of the enemy. At the very least, this will reduce the danger of a direct confrontation resultign from these threats. And if we look at this from the standpoint of the effect of this, the fact that Vietnam is upset with us is no surprise. Because in the past period, we have already been confronting them quietly. -- Komat Chungsathiensap, head of the Administrative Organization, Chulalongkorn Student Association.

A Good Beginning

This is a new stage of development in Asean's attempt to unite the three Khmer groups that oppose Heng Samrin. I do not know how successful the three Khmer groups will be in this attempt to reach the basic goals. But this is a good beginning. Since they have officially united, they can discuss the problems together. The urgent problem is a military problem rather than a political problem. The political problem is not too great. As for the seat in the United Nations, the great powers are providing support. The major problem is the military problem. Each faction has its own troops. There must be a coordination of military operations. Besides this, there is the problem of arms support. -- Dr Chaianan Samutwanit, a professor at Chulalongkorn University.

A Minor Matter

I think that this is just a minor matter. It is not a major problem. Thus, I do not want to give an opinion. Its a minor matter. Concerning this, the thing that I find interesting and that I think is a major problem at present is what is happening in our country. If you want to talk with me, you should ask me about the major problems in our country. But you must follow the same rules. That is, you must write the questions and I will write my responses. -- Prasoet Sapsuthon, a democratic revolutionary.

Not Interested

I am not interested. Tell your editor that I am not interested. -- Suwanni Sukhonthieng, the journal LALANA.

This Will Lead to Violence

I do not agree with this. The government may have considered things carefully but I personally do not agree. This will lead to violence since:

1. The free Khmer forces will unite and be stronger. Command will improve.

2. The Khmer government supported by Vietnam will request additional forces from Vietnam.

3. The fighting will be fierce. There will be fighting along the Thai border and Thailand will definitely be affected.

4. Who can foretell the results of this war? -- Sihanat Rutcha, an MP from Chaiyaphum.

Raising a Cobra to Kill a Rat

Vietnam has constantly taken a threatening attitude toward Thailand. Thus, I think that it is impossible for us to not get involved. Since they united, we have not given any military support. If Vietnam was in Thailand's position, I think they would do the same thing. If we just remain idle, things will be even worse. Thus, the best thing is for us to get involved. Kampuchea, Laos and Vietnam may unite to form one country. If they do, they will pose a threat to us. Are we sure that there will not be a third world war in the future. Many people have compared Thailand's support for the Khmer groups to a farmer raising a cobra. I would like to remind them that if we do not raise the cobra, mice will overrun the fields and eat all our rice. We must raise the cobra to kill the mice. -- Thiraphan Phetrasuwan, an MP from Chumphon.

Do Not Support Anyone

I don't agree. If we get involved, they will start fighting and killing each other. Vietnam has been fighting for a hundred years. But if we get involved and things improve for them, they should be given support. We shouldn't support anyone for the time being. Don't support those who killed millions of Kampucheans. -- Peter Bunnak, designer.

Thailand Should Not Get Involved

Thailand should not get involved. Since we are not sure what the situation is like in Kampuchea, we should let them handle things themselves. And how sincere with us are the Khmer groups? There may be a confrontation between Thailand and Vietnam. Vietnam is definitely unhappy about our taking the lead in this. I think that the best thing is for Thailand to stay out of this. -- Dapchai Akkharat, an MP from Sakon Nakhon.

In the Midst of Studies

I would like to put this matter aside for now. I am in the midst of studies. However, I do think this is good. If our neighbor Kampuchea really gets a government and there is peace and order, we will feel better. But if we involve ourselves totally and give full support, this is not good. If they unite and cooperate to achieve national soldiarity, I agree. But if we interfere andallow them to use our territory, I do not agree. We should not do this. -- Thoetphong Chainan, an MP from Tak.

Few Thais Are Knowledgeable

I am greatly against our taking part in this openly like a busybody. This action is very worrisome for the lives of the more than 40 million Thais. Few Thais are knowledgeable about this. In particular, MPs, who are the representatives of all the people, have not had a chance to express views. This has been handled only by the minister of foreign affairs and the secretary-general of the National Security Council. I think that, at the very least, the government should allow the MPs to voice their views. They have acted in a furtive manner and made it seem as if there are influential [people who] have forced them to do this. We welcomed Sihanouk with great fanfare. He met the highest leader of the country at Ban Na Rai Banthomsin. He [Prem] was the first state visitor. This was very different from in other Asean countries. When he visited these other countries, Sihanouk did not receive any tumulutuous welcome. The highest official that he met in these countries, including Indonesia and the Philippines, was the minister of foreign affairs. -- Sanan Wongsuthi, the president of the Employees' Council of the Labor Council of Thailand.

The Government Must Issue a Statement

Resolution 153 allows the government to issue a statement to parliament on any matter without having to pass a motion, and it is not necessary that a motion be made by an MP. I think that the government must issue a statement to parliament since this is not a minor matter. This is a very sensitive matter. If anything happens, everyone may be affected. I think that this is a matter of great importance to the country. The government must take responsibility for this and must clarify this matter for everyone in society. Concerning our involvement with the Khmer coalition government, the [Thai] government has done things with an air of secrecy. I think that it has tried to make an important matter seem like a minor thing. But this is not possbible. -- Prayun Suraniwong, an MP from Khon Kaen.

RUBBER PRODUCERS' STOCK PROPOSAL REJECTED

BK311534 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 31 Aug 82 p 19

[Text] Thailand has rejected a proposal by the rubber producing countries to hold back 350,000 tons of natural rubber from the world market in order to save prices from falling further.

Thailand's objection of the proposal was made at the meeting of six rubber producing countries in Kuala Lumpur last week, Agriculture Minister Chuan Likphai said yesterday. The other five nations represented at the meeting were Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, India and Sri Lanka.

Other measures proposed at the meeting and aimed at avoiding a price slump called for:

--A reduction in plantation areas;

--Planters to reduce the use of latex stimulant to speed up rubber production;

--Increasing the level of rubber stocks in all producing countries; and,

--A new variety of rubber tree be promoted to replace old trees.

Minister Chuan said that Thailand could only accept one of the proposed measures; that promoting a new variety of rubber tree.

Thailand found it difficult to accept other measures because it is difficult for the government to control plantations as they are owned by about 800,000 small land holders.

It would also be difficult for the government to hold back large stocks of rubber because they are held by traders and not the government, Mr Chuan said.

The proposal for Thailand to reduce the plantation areas contradicted the government's present policy to diversify areas where tapioca is grown to rubber production, he added.

In order to solve the world's rubber price slump, Thailand will ask the International Natural Rubber Organisation (INRO) to raise the first tier guaranteed price for natural rubber from the prevailing $1.767 to $2 a kilogramme.

Mr Chuan said raising the guaranteed price would result in the responsibility to prop up international rubber price being shared among rubber producing and consuming countries.

All rubber producing countries are expected to hold another ministerial meeting next month to consider this matter in Kuala Lumpur.

LEFTIST MUSER FACTION POSES GREATER THREAT THAN SUA

BK300453 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 30 Aug 82 p 6

[Article by Phiphat Loetkittisak]

[Excerpts] Mae Ai, Chiang Mai--Local Thai authorities here view leftwing Muser group of Ai Bi as posing a greater threat than the Shan rebels led by narcotics kingpin Khun Sa, who has ousted the communist hilltribesmen from Doi Lang and is strengthening his powers at the new base to resume heroin production on the Thai-Burmese border here.

The threat from the Ai Bi's force to Thailand is greater as it is a close ally of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP) while the Shan United Army (SUA) concentrates on producing heroin only, said a high-ranking official here who asked not to be identified.

Security officials in this border district also agreed to the 'theory,' saying Khun Sa's men appeared less hostile to Thai officials than the communist hilltribesmen.

However, Kamnan [Tambon officer] Saeng Sunan told the NATION in Tambon Thaton here that Khun Sa was less hostile to Thai officials because he needed their 'cooperation' for transporting his heroin via Thai soil to foreign markets.

"Unlike Khun Sa who could offer bribery to Thai officials, Ai Bi's group intends to seize power from the central government and is not involved in the production of heroin," said Kamnan Saeng, who has been familiar with various minority groups on the border. Kamnan Saeng is a former commander in the Shan State Progressive Party (SSPP).

Kamnan Saeng also called on the Thai authorities to pay more attention to their campaigns against narcotics production as a threat to human beings as a whole.

"We stand a chance of defeating the communists, but it is almost impossible to defeat drug addiction. Take the Vietnam war as an example, the United States was aware of the fact that up to 70 percent of its soldiers in Vietnam were drug addicts and curable only when the troops were withdrawn from the Indochinese country," he said. [sentence as published]

He said that Ai Bi had rallied about 500 fighters at Muang Sai but his force still could not match with the SUA which commands about 1,000 soldiers. The SUA's influence is prevalent along the Thai-Burmese border from the areas opposite Mae Hong Son to Mae Chan District in Chiang Rai, according to the kamnan.

"So, the prospect of Ai Bi restoring his influence on Doi Lang which is his economic base is very dim," he commented.

However, some Muser hilltribesmen here said that they believed Ai Bi, who was rallying his forces from his strongholds on the Chinese-Burmese border, would have to attack Doi Lang to recapture it as the terrain was a significant economic zone for BCP.

BRIEFS

KING'S HEALTH--It is evident that false rumors about His Majesty the King's illness originated from abroad, both by individuals and in printed matter, according to Interior Minister Gen Sitthi Chirarot. He said from now on the Interior Ministry might prohibit such ill-intended writers and materials from entering the country. The interior minister said authorities concerned have followed up on and investigated the sources of rumors about the king's health and have discovered that the rumors originated abroad. He said prosecution will be undertaken if there is sufficient evidence, noting that current law permits prosecution of the case. [Excerpt] [BK070916 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0530 GMT 7 Sep 82]

MIDDLE EAST TRADE POSITION--According to the business economics department director general, Thailand's trade deficit with the Middle East countries in 1981 totaled 27 billion baht, or 41 percent of the country's total foreign trade deficit. Thai exports to the Middle East in 1981 totaled 13.5 billion baht, while imports accounted for 40 billion baht. Saudi Arabia had the largest trade surplus with Thailand--26.3 billion baht--while Qatar was next at 7.05 billion baht. [BK071133 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0000 GMT 6 Sep 82 BK]

ELECTION RUMORS REPORTED CIRCULATING IN DACCA

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Aug 82 p 3

[Text] Reports that general elections may be held in Bangladesh in March-April 1983 have begun circulating in Dacca, even as Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. Ershad is said to be planning to declare himself President, reports IPS-Bharati.

'Protocol' considerations have led to high level talks within the administration on providing civilian sounding description for what essentially will remain martial law, reports from Dacca said on Friday.

Lt. Gen Ershad is now being introduced to foreign missions and governments as the 'Chairman of the Council of Ministers', though there is strictly no such council responsible to anyone outside the council of advisers that Ershad had set up as soon as he took over power in the March coup.

This, it is said, is because the post of Chief Martial Law Administrator is not identified abroad as that of a Head of Government.

The nominated council of Advisers was named the Council of Ministers in June this year on 14 August. Its members were authorised to display flags on their vehicles and homes as 'Ministers'.

Consultations are now going on according to the weekly KHABOR, on naming as one of the members of the council as the Prime Minister.

There is also speculation that Lt Gen Ershad may offer the post to a civilian politician. One of them is former Prime Minister under ousted Abdus Sattar Government, Shah Azizur Rahman.

Meanwhile, 'pressure' is reported from countries and institutions that provide economic and other assistance to the Ershad Government, that political activities should be allowed to be resumed soon.

The weekly ITTEHAD says one such institution (thought here to be the World Bank-IMF) and some countries have written to the Ershad Government, saying they will not be able to increase their assistance to Bangladesh unless the 'political process is restarted'.

ITTEHAD says a 'minister has been entrusted with the job of ascertaining how best to get the political process restarted'.

It is not also clear whether the election, if held, will be under the old civilian constitution or after changes are introduced in it to provide the armed forces an integral and supervisory role.

REPORTAGE ON GANDHI VISIT TO MOZAMBIQUE

Activities on 25 Aug

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 26 Aug 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Prime Minister Indira Gandhi today called for frustrating all attempts to sow discord and suspicion in the non-aligned movement and in the Organisation of African Unity (OAU).

Speaking at the official bilateral talks with Mozambique President Samora Machel, Mrs Gandhi said this was necessary while exploring avenues of reinforcing political and economic cooperation among the developing countries in the context of South-South cooperation.

Such cooperation had an important role in strengthening each one of us she said adding that India had helped its friends and shared its technological knowhow with them.

Rousing Welcome

Mrs Gandhi was accorded colourful and rousing reception on her arrival here this afternoon on her three-day first State visit to this frontline African state.

Mrs Gandhi was received at the airport by President Samora Machel, his cabinet colleagues, diplomatic corps, senior civil and military officials.

As she alighted from the special Air India Boeing 707, a large crowd of men, women and children carrying buntings and national flags of both the countries burst into thunderous applause and several colourful cultural groups danced to African folk songs.

Posing the question how could militarily weak nations deal with this challenge, she said history had often revealed the weakness of the strong and strength of the weak.

Similarly, Mrs Gandhi said, the Palestinians today were the victims of Israel's insensate assault but would ultimately be triumphant.

She said the black and coloured majority of South Africa and Namibia would also emerge victorious. This will be sooner than most people think, she added.

Speaking at a banquet in her honour by President S Machel, she minority government for building "a structure of institutionalised terror against its own people, merely on the basis of colour and skin". [as published]

On Namibia, Mrs Gandhi said: "India stands solidly with you. We applaud your courage and determination. We shall continue to support the process of bringing nationhood and freedom to Namibians."

Expressing India's firm opposition to any kind of racial discrimination, Mrs Gandhi recalled how India's first major international initiative in the United Nations (after becoming free) was "a crusade against racial discrimination and apartheid."

In a soul-stirring reference to Nelson Mandela, Mrs Gandhi said: "I salute the gallant freedom fighters of South Africa, whose shining advocate Mandela is."

Sharing the deep agony of the black and coloured people, who were suffering in South Africa, Mrs Gandhi said: "We share their faith in their ultimate victory."

She said India realised the responsibilities of the frontline states.

In a raised voice, she said "Zimbabwe is now free. So shall Namibia be. And in the not too distant future, South Africa too will be free of oppression, opening the doors of opportunity to people of all races."

Warning

Mrs Gandhi hoped that attempts to destabilise the situation in Mozambique and other countries in the region would cease.

The Prime Minister warned of the increasing efforts by the affluent and powerful countries to expand their "sway over the seas" as more and more land areas were becoming free.

Expressing her concern at big power rivalry in the Indian Ocean, Mrs Gandhi said, "How painful it has been to watch how during the last decade or more, the Indian Ocean has become increasingly militarised, generating tension after round."

"While we who live along its shores wish it to be a zone of peace, highly sophisticated weapons systems are being introduced on small, remote islands by those who have no shortage of weaponry in their own arsenals," she remarked.

The Prime Minister also highlighted the common commitment of India and Mozambique to the nonalignment movement and said that "in the coming years it can and must make its influence felt in favour of disarmament, especially nuclear disarmament and the reduction of economic disparities."

"We share a common approach to problems of world peace. We realise that a new internati whether political or economic, can endure only if based on equality and justice," she said.

Mrs Gandhi pointed out how the erosion in detente had already led to disastrous consequences under which "a country like Israel feels no compunction in taking such brazen military action inside Lebanon against even the Lebanese and Palestinians."

26 Aug Press Conference

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 27 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] Maputo, August 26 (PTI).

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today said that no final decision had yet been taken about the venue of the seventh non-aligned countries' summit.

Addressing a press conference here, Mrs. Gandhi said, both Iraq and Iran had approached India for holding this summit but no final decision had as yet been taken.

Mrs. Gandhi explained on her own that some misunderstanding had been created in the Indian press perhaps because of her request to the Mauritius Prime Minister at Port Louis yesterday to attend the non-aligned conference if held in India early next year.

She said that it was not for her to take a final decision about the venue. In fact, the final decision had to be taken by the finance ministers of all the non-aligned countries, she added.

Describing it as a "slip of tongue on her part or some misunderstanding on the part of the press," Mrs. Gandhi said, talks were being held among the non-aligned countries and she hoped a final decision would be taken soon.

In fact, India wanted to host the eighth non-aligned conference but in view of the new political developments India was willing to hold the seventh summit if everybody in the movement wished so.

UNI adds: Answering a question about the non-aligned movement, the Prime Minister said it was as relevant in the present-day world situation as when founded. The movement could help relieve tensions in the world and strive for peace among nations and against apartheid and racialism.

She added that India had been firm and consistent in its stand from the beginning.

About Indo-Mozambique relations, Mrs. Gandhi said a team of experts in industry will soon visit this country while some experts in railways and agriculture had come before.

Other fields in which the two countries could co-operate were being identified by officials.

She assured Mozambicans that India would like to help them to the maximum, but at present "we are facing a very grave economic crisis." Asked whether India, along with other Indian Ocean states, would make concerted efforts to see that the United States was forced to give up its nuclear base in Diego Garcia and the island was restored to Mauritius, Mrs. Gandhi said all littoral states wanted the area to be a zone of peace, but she was doubtful the nations concerned could do nore than raising their voice of opposition to build public opinion.

Call for Unity

In this context Mrs. Gandhi called for unity among the non-aligned and reiterated that despite attempts to disrupt the movement, the countries would continue to be together.

She said India was as poor as Mozambique at the time of independence. Although it had not been able to remove poverty, there was a visible change.

About South Africa, Mrs. Gandhi said India supported the Mozambique stand that the racist regime in Pretoria was a threat to the frontline states as well as the right of the Namibian people to self-determination. Similarly, India supported the cause of the Palestinian people.

In official talks between the Indian and Mozambique sides led by Mrs. Gandhi and President Samora, Mozambique wanted a fresh line of credit to import goods as their foreign trade had been totally wrecked due to military action. It said its production of exportable goods like sugar, timber, tea and prawns had fallen.

Only one-third of an earlier Indian credit for purchasing machinery had been utilised and no new proposals for using the rest had been sent in, an official spokesman said.

A joint statement will be issued tomorrow detailing new areas of economic co-operation between the two countries.

Earlier, the Mozambique President, Mr. Samora Machel, appealed to India to join in a common endeavour to end the military bases in the Indian Ocean which, he said, posed a serious threat to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of his country.

Speaking at a banquet he gave in honour of Mrs. Indira Gandhi last night, Mr. Machel also hit out at the Pretoria regime for neutralising efforts at co-operation among the free states of southern Africa.

"Great tension persisted in southern Africa because of Pretoria's occupation of Namibia and part of the Angolan territory and terrorist actions against Lesotho, Botswana, Zambabwe and Zamibia," he added.

Report on Joint Statement

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 28 Aug 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Maputo, Aug 27 (PTI, UNI).

India has decided to provide a new line of credit of Rs 50 million to Mozambique for purchase of Indian goods.

This was announced in a joint statement issued at the end of the three-day state visit of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi here today.

The terms of the new credit would be finalised after consultations between officials of both sides.

This is the second credit by India to this front line African State for promotion of its economic development. The bulk of the earlier credit still remains unutilised, but it is understood that the Mozambique Government has assured India that it had prepared plans for its utilisation.

The two leaders--Mrs Gandhi and Mozambique President Samora Machel expressed satisfaction at the implementation of cooperation programmes agreed upon during the latter's visit to India in April last.

Training Facilities

The statement said that the possibilities of further strengthening the economic and cultural relations between the two countries were discussed by the two leaders and it was agreed that India would provide technical training facilities for Mozambican personnel in Indian institutions as well as by deputing Indian experts to Mozambique.

An Indian team of industry experts would be visiting Mozambique in September next, it said.

The statement said that Mrs Gandhi's visit had provided an opportunity to both the leaders to exchange views on important international questions and to review Indo-Mozambique bilateral relations.

S. Africa Condemned

The two leaders also condemned South Africa's military intervention in the internal affairs of Mozambique by conducting an undeclared war against it with the object of obstructing economic and social development and destabilising its government.

They declared that the racist minority regime of South Africa was a remnant of colonial era whose policies of suppressions and exploitation of African people in South Africa and interference in the affairs of frontline states and other neighbouring countries posed a threat to peace and security of the region.

The two sides condemned, in particular, the occupation of part of the territory of the People's Republic of Angola by troops of the racist regime of South Africa and demanded their immediate and unconditional withdrawal.

They felt that the world community as a whole should take cognizance of and deal suitably with this grave and menacing situation.

The President and the Prime Minister condemned South African regime's repugnant policies of racism and apartheid. They demanded immediate release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners languishing in South African jails. They expressed their firm support to the African National Congress in its struggle against the racist system of apartheid.

Both the leaders strongly condemned the Pretoria regime for its recalcitrant attitude concerning Namibian question. They reaffirmed their solidarity with the Namibian people and with SWAPO, its sole legitimate representative, in their struggle for independence.

They expressed hope that Nambia would achieve independence by early 1983 according to the UN Security Council resolution 435.

In reviewing the situation in West Asia, the two leaders concemned Israeli invasion of Lebanon and demanded immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from that country.

They expressed their support for the just struggle of the Palestine Liberation Organisation for their inalienable rights, including the right to a sovereign, independent state of their own.

They reaffirmed their commitment to the police of non-aliengment and declared that it was an essential requirement for developing countries in their pursuit of independence, sovereignty, equality and development.

The Prime Minister is understood to have impressed upon heads of Indian missions in the southern African region to ensure projection of India's foreign policy in its correct perspective.

Addressing a meeting of heads of the five Indian missions in Zimbabwe, Zambia, Malawi and Mozambique here Thursday night, she asked them to identify themselves with the larger interests of the countries where they were accredited and to assist them in their developmental efforts within the framework of the Indian foreign policy.

Mrs Gandhi will leave for India on Friday. She will have a technical halt for over an hour at Port Louis, capital of Mauritius on her way back to home.

GANDHI TALKS TO NEWSMEN EN ROUTE FROM AFRICA

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] New Delhi, August 28.

The Prime Minister has said that India's stand on South African apartheid and illegal occupation of Namibia and on Diego Garcia has remained consistent.

Talking to press correspondents on board the special Air-India plane on her return journey from Mauritius and Mozambique, Mrs. Gandhi said India could only help the African countries to strengthen their economic base.

Asked if the African nations were looking for an alternative to South Africa on which they were dependent for trade, Mrs. Gandhi said there was no question of an alternative.

The African countries regarded India as a good friend and they were seeking its help to build up their economies. "Even though our own resources are limited," she said, "we would help them to the extent possible."

When her attention was drawn to her remarks expressing sympathy with the Ilois people who had been pushed out of Diego Garcia in 1965 and dumped in Mauritius, she said: "The Ilois people's is not a new issue."

Useful Visit

The Prime Minister described her visit to Mauritius and Mozambique as "very useful." Personal contacts always helped to create better understanding.

She said the leaders at the helm of affairs in both Mauritius and Mozambique were young and dynamic.

She had met Mr. Aneerood Jugnauth, prime minister of Mauritius, and President Samora Moises Machel of Mozambique during their visits to India. She had now renewed her acquaintance with them and met other members of their government.

Mrs. Gandhi said the Indian communities in African countries were performing a "positive" role. "I have always advised them, even long before independence, that they must make common cause with the local people."

Asked whether and when she would reshuffle her cabinet, Mrs. Gandhi said: "I don't know". She said the question of reshuffle had become a "permanent joke". Whenever she went on a foreign trip or returned from it and before a parliament session began or after it was over, there was always talk of cabinet reshuffle.

In an interview with Mauritius television at Plaisance airport where the Air-India plane had a technical halt on its way from Moputo to New Delhi, Mrs. Gandhi stressed the need for South-South co-operation.

She said her visit to Mauritius was very useful and she met the new government leaders within two months of their assuming office.

Mrs. Gandhi said non-alignment was as relevant today as before. If everybody agreed, she said, India was willing to hold the next non-aligned summit in New Delhi.

To a question on militarisation of the Indian Ocean, the Prime Minister remarked: "We are trying to create an atmosphere for settling disputes through negotiations." Fortunately, she added, the peace movement in the world was growing.

Asked about her recipe for keeping young, Mrs. Gandhi said: "I wish one could remain young. Age catches up. But age is no reason why one should lose energy."

Official sources deny the impressions that India has gone soft on the Diego Garcia issue.

India is studying the legal implication of the agreement between Britain and Mauritius on the future of Diego Garcia before taking the next course of action.

During the Prime Minister's visit to Mauritius, "we told them that we will support whatever action they choose to take."

The issue can be taken to the International Court of Justice only if both sides--Britain and Mauritius--agree. Britain is unlikely to do so. But it is a course which cannot be ruled out altogether.

The alternative is to intensify the agitation over the issue of return of Diego Garcia to Mauritius. Mrs. Gandhi in her speech at Port Louis struck a new note when she underlined the plight of the refugees from the Atoll, now turned into an American military base.

Expert opinion is that the Mauritius-British agreement has a clause about sub-soil rights which, in other words, means that the sovereignty of the Atoll vests in Mauritius.

Official circles feel that Mauritius, Mozambique and other African nations are looking for political and moral support and economic help to minimise their dependence on South Africa.

President Machel of Mozambique was very impressed by the level of industrialisation in India during his visit in April and feels that Indian expertise, experience and assistance could be of great benefit to his country.

Mozambique, like some other African countries, was rich in resources. But these have to be exploited.

According to observers, Mrs. Gandhi's message to the African countries was clear and hopeful. One was: "We have done it: you can do it, too." The second: "Within the severe constraints of our resources, we will render whatever help we can."

GANDHI REVIEWING PARTY PERFORMANCE IN STATES

Madras THE HINDU in English 27 Aug 82 p 9

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 26.

After completing the long overdue Cabinet reshuffle at the Centre, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, intends to take a hard look at the performance of the Congress (I) Governments in some of the States, according to her confidants here.

The very talk of impending changes in these States is having a destabilising effect, adding to the travails of the hard-pressed Chief Ministers who have become increasingly uncertain about their continuance in office in these circumstances.

The Central agencies concerned have produced a series of reports on the political and administrative situation in various States for the information of the Prime Minister, who is reported to be rather upset over the sagging prestige of the ruling party despite its vast majorities in the respective legislatures. But it is entirely a matter for her judgment and discretion as to what should or could be done to set things right before the simmering discontent in the party boils over into open defiance by some sections of disgruntled Congress (I) legislators in these States.

The Prime Minister returns late tomorrow night from her trip to Mauritius and Mozambique to devote the next three weeks to internal affairs, before she takes off for Moscow on September 20 on a six-day visit to the Soviet Union. If Mrs. Gandhi does not complete the proposed changes during this period, it may be too late later on since she has been thinking of advancing the winter session of Parliament by a month and concluding it before the commencement of the Asian Games.

Punjab situation: The explosive situation in Punjab requires her immediate attention to take some pre-emptive steps against the threatened intensification of the Akali campaign. The Chief Minister, Mr. Darbara Singh, who has a reputation for personal integrity, has unwittingly made himself the main target of the Akali wrath by provoking them.

But in neighbouring Haryana the police defiance is only a disquieting symptom of a deeper political malaise afflicting the state where the Centre has unwittingly allowed itself to be identified with the rough and tough ways of Mr. Bhajan Lal's governanace.

Dissensions: The internal dissensions in Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and Bihar continue to worry the Congress (I) leadership at the Centre, but it is the prospect of a poll in another six months in Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka and possibly Assam as well that has been causing some concern here.

But here again there is no clarity of what exactly Mrs. Gandhi proposes to do to strengthen the ruling party before these elections. She continues to receive conflicting reports about the ability of the Opposition parties, especially Mr. N. T. Rama Rao's Telugu Desam in Andhra Pradesh, to pose a serious threat to the Congress (I)'s predominance.

Jagmohan's transfer: After transferring Mr. Jagmohan abruptly from the Lt. Governorship of Delhi to Goa 16 months ago at the instance of her party colleagues, Mrs. Gandhi has decided to bring him back again on the advice of some local Congress (I) leaders because of the coming Metropolitan Council elections. His undue identification with the ruling party could prove counter-productive in a highly volatile Union Territory like Delhi with a strong Jan Sangh hold on it.

Corruption: The more perceptive observers of the confusing political scene in the country are getting worried over the vaguely negative atmosphere building up in several States. Apart from the smell of violence in the air, the talk of increasing corruption in high places is damaging reputations and undermining the prestige of several State Governments.

The cumulative effect of the smouldering public resentment and sense of grievance is leading to the feeling that something is going wrong all the time, although it is difficult to pinpoint the real cause of the dissonance in each instance. But Congress (I) leaders themselves keep complaining about the party's ability to act decisively with the necessary firmness of purpose.

As one who is quite sensitive to the changing moods of the people, the Prime Minister can ill afford to let the impression prevail that she is doing nothing to set matters right. And it is this feeling that she cannot afford to let this drift continue any longer that has been generating the hope that she would take some strong steps soon.

REPORTAGE ON GANDHI VISIT TO MAURITIUS

Arrival, Airport Speeches

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 24 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Article by J. D. Singh]

[Text] PORT LOUIS, August 23.

THE Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, lost no time after arriving here this afternoon in referring to an issue — the Indian Ocean — which is expected to figure prominently in her talks in Mauritius and Mozambique.

Referring to an affectionate welcome on arrival here on a three-day state visit by her Mauritian counterpart, Mr. Anerood Jugnauth, and a select gathering of citizens at Plaisance airport after a seven-hour non-stop flight from New Delhi, Mrs. Gandhi said that the Indian Ocean was bristling with prolems whose portents threatened the entire world.

The Prime Minister's words found a deep echo in many hearts. Mr. Jugnauth dealt with the issue at a greater length during the course of which he thanked India for its support and "deep understanding."

Mr. Jugnauth reiterated his government's stand on demilitarisation of the Indian Ocean and eliminating hte super power presence from that area.

He said his country was persistent in its effort to get a reduction of the super power military presence in the Indian Ocean. In the long term, it would seek the total withdrawal of these powers from the region.

Mrs. Gandhi was greeted by warm smiles and a bright sunshine. This is the end of the winter in Mauritius and the temperature is somewhat like Delhi's in November.

As the Boeing-707 came to the end of its flight, it looked as if this tiny island was floating on water. Verdant fields, dark green hillocks and azure waters of the Indian Ocean made it a picturesque scene.

IDENTITY OF VIEWS

The speeches by the two Prime Ministers at the airport reflected the close identity of views that exist between India and Mauritius. Both Prime Ministers made it a point to refert o this fact.

Mr. Jugnauth thanked India for its support on the Chagos archipelago, for its assistance in the development of his country and its role in Africa and the world, in general.

He described India as a trusted friend of Africa. Witht he failure of the Organisation of African Unity to hold a summit in Tripoli in May, he condemnedt he efforts of 'outside forces" to destabilise and disunite the African continent.

His strongest comments were reserved for the Chagos archipelago and he expressed his government's firm resolve to regain possession of the archipelago, including Diego Garcia.

On Indo-Mauritian relations, Mr. Jugnauth hoped that Mrs. Gandhi's visit would strengthent he bonds of friendship, which were "deep and cordial." Mauritius on its part looked to an era of even closer co-operation with India.

Mrs. Gandhi, in her response, expressed her delight to be in Mauritius once again. "Our lands are linked by the Indian Ocean and our people keep friendship by ties."

She said there were ties in some of the languages they spoke but more important than words was the language of freedom and equality, freedom and secularism, non-alignment and co-existence, peace and brotherhood.

As felolw members of several international organisations, she said, India and Mauritius shared many concerns. "We are engaged in the same task—that of national construction and development, of providing our people a higher level of material well-being and a deeper sense of pride and personal fulfilment."

The international situation, events near and far, cast their shadows and disturb our endeavours, Mrs. Gandhi said. Conflict and confrontation, disparities and denigration of our earth —all seemed to be escalating.

She told the Mauritian Prime Minister: "You have spoken of many serious matters. In most of these, our two countries have similar views. I hope, in our discussions, we shall work out ways of increasing our co-operation."

Speaking in French towards the closure of her speech, Mrs. Gandhi said shee looked forward to "exchanging views with you and your young, dynamic and forward-looking colelagues."

On her arrival, Mrs. Gandhi was received by Mr. Jugnauth and his ministerial colleagues. A 19-gun salute was fired and she inspected a guard of honour and met diplomats and distinguished citizens before driving to the governor-general's residence, where she will stay for the next two days.

Although Mauritius is a multi-racial society, people of Indian origin constitute a majority of the population and this preponderance was reflected in the crowd that had collected to geet Mrs. Gandhi.

According to her revised programme, Mrs. Gandhi will not visit Seychelles on her return journey in view of the troubled situation there. She decided to cancel the stopover so as not to overburden the already stretched security forces on the island.

PTI adds: This is Mrs. Gandhi's third visit to Mauritius. She had earlier visited in 1970 and 1976.

A large number of men, women and children lined the 40-km. route from the airport to Port Louis and cheered Mrs. Gandhi as she passed by.

STRESS ON FRIENDSHIP

At the airport speech, Mrs. Gandhi pointed out that between the two countries there was, fortunately, a tradition of trust and working together and added that she had come to strengthen them.

Friendship, like other things, she said, must be kept in shape and constantly renewed.

Mrs. Gandhi told Mauritians: "You have now a new government and new policies. Although many of the faces are familiar, it is important to make closer acquaintance with them and their ideas."

The Prime Minister said she brought to the Prime Minister and the warm-hearted people of Mauritius the greetings and good wishes of the government and people of India.

She is one of the few foreign heads of state to have been conferred with the freedom of the city of Port Louis and the degree of doctor of law (honours cause) by Mauritius University.

In his welcome address, Mr. Jugnauth pledges his country's wholehearted commitment to full implementation of the U.N. general assembly resolutions declaring the Indian Ocean a zone of peace.

He asserted that the new government would jealously guard its freedom, he said that his government would strengthen its traditional bonds of friendship with all its friends.

As far as India was concerned, he said, the present visit of Mrs. Gandhi would usher in a new era of increased co-operation in all fields—political, economic and industrial. Its ties with India would be based on mutual respect, he added.

Later, addressing a mass rally at the Champ De Mars — the historic ground where transfer of power to Mauritius from Britain took place in 1968 — the Prime Minister assured that India desired to help Mauritius in all its problems and forge closer economic links.

At least 10,000 Mauritians out of about 30,000 population of this capital town turned up to hear Mrs. Gandhi and gave her a standing ovation as she rose to speak.

They shouted slogans "Long live Indira Gandhi" and "Long live India and Mauritius."

As she ended her speech, the Prime Minister was lustily cheered by the crowd of people who were on a holiday on account Ganesh Chaturthi.

New Delhi (PTI): The Prime Minister left here this morning on a five-day visit to Mauritius and Mozambique.

She said she had no statement to make as she boarded the special Air-India plane for Port Louis.

Mrs. Gandhi was seen off at the airport by her ministerial colleagues, members of the diplomatic corps, MPs and others.

Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, MP, and his wife Sonia were also present at the airport.

Mrs. Gandhi is accompanied on her visit by Mr. M. K. Rasgotra, foreign secretary, Dr. Arjun Sengupta, additional secretary in the Prime Minister's secretariat, and Mr. H. Y. Sharada Prasad, information advisor.

Mr. S. M. S Chadha, joint secretary (economic division), and Mr. N. R. Verma, director (Africa division) in the external affairs ministry, are already in Port Louis and Maputo to join in the official level talks.

The Prime Minister will return to New Delhi on August 28.

Speech to National Assembly

Madras THE HINDU in English 25 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] Port Louis, Aug. 24.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today expressed India's firm opposition to military interventions and presences and said it favoured political solutions to various crisis.

In her first-ever address to the 70-member National Assembly of Mauritius, she called upon developing countries to forge greater unity and cohesion to effectively resist the threat to world peace posed by the increasing military presence of superpowers in the Indian Ocean as also nuclear proliferation.

Mrs. Gandhi was lustily cheered by the members when she voiced India's unequivocal support to Mauritius in its demand for the return of Diego Garcia and other islands in the Chagos Archipelago, currently leased to the U.S. by Britain.

Wide spectrum: In a hard-hitting speech covering a wide spectrum of international issues, Mrs. Gandhi asked the littoral States to raise their voice in a bid to eliminate power basis from the Indian Ocean and preserve it as a zone of peace.

She regretted that repeated calls made by the littoral countries and the U.N. resolutions in this respect were disregarded.

Referring to the apartheid doctrine pursued by neighbouring South Africa, Mrs. Gandhi said its policies were an "affront to all the values dear to us."

Describing as "pernicious" the doctrines of apartheid and racist domination followed by South Africa, she said the Government and the people of India had consistently and firmly condemned the atrocities on the peoples of South Africa.

Mrs. Gandhi took the opportunity to reiterate India's unequivocal support for the cause of the African National Congress, of SWAPO and other liberation movements in South Africa.

She called for independence of Namibia and underlined the need for common efforts in cooperation with the frontline African States, to end these "abhorrent policies of racialism and colonialism."

Economic disparities: Mrs. Gandhi warned that economic disparities between and within nations created "explosive" situations and called for the establishment of a new economic order which could redress long-standing inequalities.

Recalling India's efforts at U.N. and in various summit and other conferences in this direction, she regretted that industrially advanced countries ignored the worldwide consequences of growing economic disparities between nations.

She also called for the creation of a new "dimension" of cooperation in trade and technology between India and Mauritius.

Invasion of Lebanon: Referring to the Israeli aggression in Lebanon and the massacre of thousands of innocent civilians in total defiance of world opinion, Mrs. Gandhi called for a just and comprehensive settlement of the West Asian crisis ensuring the vacation of aggression by Israel and restoration to the Palestinian people of their right to a homeland.

On the June elections in Mauritius, which had brought a large number of young people to Parliament, Mrs. Gandhi said, amidst applause, in India also, special efforts had been made to give the young their legitimate share of authority and responsibility.

She briefly referred to India's freedom struggle and the progress made since Independence and said India and Mauritius shared many things in common, particularly their allegiance to parliamentary institutions and democratic development.

Distinct personality: Unity in diversity in Mauritius was at its best display when thousands of men, women and children belonging to different communities and cultures turned out on Monday at a rally addressed by Mrs. Gandhi.

After seeing this conglomeration of mixed culture, Mrs. Gandhi was led to remark that she saw in it the emergence of a distinct personality of Mauritius as attained by India long ago.

The rally was held at "Champ de Mars," which is adjacent to the place where Mahatma Gandhi was received during his visit there in 1901.

Mrs. Gandhi told the rally that the size of the country did not matter. Even small countries like Mauritius could make their own contributions to the development of mutual understanding in the world.

In her address, partly in English and party in French and Hindi, she said the main preoccupation of India and Mauritius was to ceaselessly work for the elimination of poverty and creation of a just society.

Paying tribute to the people of Indian origin now constituting 52 per cent of the Mauritian population nearing one million, Mrs. Gandhi said they have succeeded in establishing themselves in Mauritius.

Earlier the Mauritian Prime Minister, Mr. Jugnauth, said India would remain a constant source of inspiration and guidance for Mauritius. His country looked forward to receiving financial and technical assistance from India for its speedy development.--PTI.

Report on Joint Communique

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 26 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Article by J. D. Singh]

[Text] PORT LOUIS, August 25.

INDIA and Mauritius today expressed grave concern over the "great power" military presence in the Indian Ocean and reiterated the need to intensify efforts for speedy implementation of the U.N. declaration to make it a zone of peace.

A joint communique issued at the end of the three-day visit of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, expressed apprehension at the transformation of Diego Garcia into a military base.

Mrs. Gandhi, who came to Mauritius at the invitation of Mr. Aneerood Jugnauth, Prime Minister of what she called "a great little country", reiterated India's full support for Mauritius' sovereignty over the Chagos archipelago, of which Diego Garcia is a part.

The communique, issued after wide-ranging talks between Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Jugnauth on bilateral, regional and international developments reveals a close identity of views on various issues.

The talks were marked by cordiality and mutual understanding "which have traditionally characterised relations between India and Mauritius", the communique said.

While Diego Garcia undoubtedly received special attention, the two sides deplored the South African government's attitude towards Namibia and its policy of apartheid.

They also expressed their grave concern over the situation in West Asia resulting from the Israeli aggression in Lebanon, and over the continuing conflict between Iran and Iraq.

On Afghanistan, the communique expressed the two leaders' faith in the cardinal principles of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of states and called for a political settlement on the basis of withdrawal of all foreign forces and strict respect for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status of Afghanistan.

The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their faith in the policy of non-alignment, described the existence of nuclear weapons and arms race as a grave threat to the very survival of mankind and regretted the continued stalemate in North-South relations and deterioration in the climate of multilateral economic co-operation.

Before leaving for Mozambique today, Mrs. Gandhi visited India House to address the Indian community and held a press conference at the governor-general's residence.

During the official talks, Mrs. Gandhi was assisted by Mr. M. K. Rasgotra, foreign secretary, Mr. H. Y. Sharda Prasad, information adviser to the Prime Minister, Dr. A. K. Sengupta, additional secretary to the Prime Minister, Mr. S. K. Bhatnagar, acting high commissioner in Mauritius, Mr. S. M. S. Chadha, joint secretary, and Mr. Prem Singh, Indian ambassador to Bahrain.

The Prime Minister of Mauritius was accompanied by Mr. Harish Boodhoo, deputy prime minister, Mr. P. R. Berenger, finance minister, Mr. A. K. A. Bhayat, commerce and industry minister, Mr. J. C. L'estrac, minister for external affairs, Mrs. Aumeeruddy-Cziffra, attorney-general and minister for women's rights, and Mr. K. Ruhee, minister for economic planning and development.

At the outset of the talks, Mrs. Gandhi congratulated Mr. Jugnauth on the recent overwhelming electoral victory of his party. Mr. Jugnauth on his part expressed the conviction that the traditional close ties between India and Mauritius would continue to grow. The hope was also expressed by the two leaders that such relations would be increasingly reflected in the cultural and economic links between the two countries.

According to the communique, the Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at the progress of bilateral relations. Both agreed there was scope for further expansion of mutually beneficial co-operation, especially in the fields of industry, oil prospecting and refining, scientific research and exploitation of mineral resources and shipping.

Mr. Jugnauth accepted Mrs. Gandhi's invitation to visit India in the near future.

Besides reiterating the need for agreement on launching of the global North-South negotiations, the Prime Ministers urged the developing countries to agree on a charter of action for the development of the full potential of their collective self-reliance.

In view of the dependence of Mauritius on South Africa for trade and tourism, the two paragraphs in the communique on Namibia and apartheid were significant.

On Namibia, the two leaders noted with serious concern the recalcitrant attitude of the South African government. They expressed the hope that Namibia would achieve independence in conformity with the U.N. security council resolution and pledged full support for the struggle of SWAPO and the people of Namibia to achieve their independence.

The Prime Ministers condemned the South African government's policy of repression and subjugation of the Black and Coloured majority of the country. They agreed that dismantling the structure of apartheid was essential for lasting security in the region.

They demanded the immediate release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners languishing in South African jails.

Port Louis Press Conference

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 26 Aug 82 p 9

[Text] Port Louis, August 25 (UNI).

India will hold the seventh non-aligned summit early next year in New Delhi, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, said here today.

Addressing a press conference shortly before her departure for Mozambique, Mrs. Gandhi said invitations had been sent to leaders of non-aligned countries to attend the summit which she said, would provide an occasion for exchange of views and ideas among the third world leaders on the current international situation.

Replying to questions, she ruled out any military grouping among the Indian Ocean nations, saying "one type of grouping attracts another type of grouping and may well cause tension in this part of the world."

Mrs. Gandhi criticised the military build-up by the United States in Diego Garcia. She said India was "against all military presences" in the Indian Ocean as it would endanger peace in the region.

On the controversy over holding the seventh non-aligned summit, she said she had no doubt that the non-aligned movement would survive the present situation.

She said invitations had been extended to leaders of non-aligned states and she expected the Mauritius Prime Minister, Mr. Aneerood Jugnauth, to participate in the non-aligned summit to be held in Delhi.

Mrs. Gandhi said: "People have prophesised that the non-aligned will collapse. I think this has been propagated at the time of every conference, but somehow we have survived the ups and downs and I have no doubt we will survive the present situation."

India's difficulties started with "the rise in oil prices, high price charged by industrial countries for our imports, high rates of interest and their reluctance to buy goods from us at rumerative rates", Mrs. Gandhi said.

She pleaded for the removal of the disparities between the developed and developing countries for justice, peace and stability in the world.

Mrs. Gandhi said she was impressed by the friendship and warmth of the people on Mauritius and the enthusiasm of the leadership to solve the complex problems the country faced like any other developing nation.

CPI-M CENTRAL COMMITTEE ON PUNJAB EXTREMISTS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 30 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] The CPI-M central committee, now in session in the Capital, has condemned the Punjab Government's action of rounding up Akali activists on the night of 27-28 August as a step "which is bound to worsen the situation and play into the hands of the extremists who are out to create communal tension" in the State and intensify the separatist movement.

In a resolution it adopted on Sunday, the committee urged the Central Government to call an all-party meeting with a view to effectively fight the divisive forces.

The committee pointed out that the State Government of Punjab had by killing many people under the cover of 'encounters' in the past, and not putting them on trial provided grist to the mill of the extremist elements.

It underlined that the CPI-M had sharply opposed the Sikh extremists and exposed their anti-national activities warned the Akali leadership of the need to demarcate from these extremists so as not to allow genuine grievances to be exploited for disruptive and separatist activities. What is more the party had conducted a statewide campaign for communal peace and against the threat to the unity and integrity of the country.

But it also felt that the Government and the ruling party had failed to rouse the people against the extremists' disruptive activities. 'It has not even placed the facts in its possession about the activities of the extremists through a white-paper. Earlier also the statements of the Chief Minister was an indication of the inept handling of the situation'.

In this context, the committee called on the people to be vigilant against the extremists and maintain peace and unity of the Punjabi people.

At the same time, while projecting its demand for an all-party meeting to be called by the Centre, it felt that the latter should not delay the consideration and decision of the demands of Punjab such as inclusion of Chandigarh and the Punjabi-speaking contiguous areas with village as the unit, reference of the canal water dispute to a Supreme Court judge. It further called upon the Government to immediately enact an all-India Sikh

Gurdwara legislation to end all interference in the democratic functioning of the gurdwaras.

'The central committee warns the Government that failure to solve the problems bristles with the danger of disruptionist forces spreading their tentacles in other parts of the country', the resolution read.

CPI-M ISSUES STATEMENT ON PUNJAB EXTREMISTS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Aug 82 p 4

[Text]

THE CPI-M has come out sharply against the Akali Dal leadership for placating the Punjab extremists as manifest in its conspicuous silence amounting to condonation of the latest hijacking incident and the attempt on Chief Minister Darbara Singh's life.

In a statement issued from the Capital on Saturday, the party's politbureau denounced the incitents in unambiguous terms and appealed to the people of Punjab—Hindus, Sikhs and others—to isolate the extremists and communalists in a bid to save the State from catastrophe.

It recalled that when the first hijacking took place, the CPI-M had warned that "any encouragement to extremist elements would create a very dangerous situation in the border state of Punjab", and had called upon the Akali leadership to demarcate itself from the extremists and condemn their "anti-national activities."

"Far from doing that, the Akali leadership to demarcate it-project the common demands of the Punjab people as religious discrimination against Sikhs, thus inciting communal passions and even included some of the demands of the extremists when it launched its 'Dharam Yudh' on 4 August. That this was playing into the hands of the anti-national elements was clear when the extremists, led by Bhindranwale, decided to give up their separate agitation and join the Akali morcha", the statement read.

The PB felt it necessary to once again warn the Akali leadership that its placating of the extremists, "its silence which actually becomes condonation of reprehensible crimes like hijacking, exhortation to killings and actual killings, making gurdwaras refuges for criminals, etc. have led to a situation where it is in the position of playing second fiddle to the extremists, and getting isolated from the democratic forces without whose support neither the demands of the Punjab people nor the demands against religious discrimination of the Sheikhs can be won".

It explained to the Akali leadership that from such a situation, only the extremists and Cong-I rulers would gain, "not the Punjabi people, not the Sikh masses, not even the Akali Dal."

PRESS REPORTS VISIT OF JAPANESE FOREIGN MINISTER

G. K. Reddy Report

Madras THE HINDU in English 28 Aug 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 27.

The Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Yoshio Sakurauchi, arrived today on a three-day visit to India accompanied by a 20-member delegation which includes two important members of Parliament besides senior officials dealing with both political and economic relations.

As the scope for increased Indo-Japanese economic cooperation has been discussed at great length in recent months in New Delhi and Tokyo by visiting Ministers, officials and industrialists, the programme drawn up for Mr. Sakurauchi's visit does not provide for any wide-ranging talks on the nature or extent of the proposed Japanese participation in some key sectors of Indian development.

Apart from signing an agreement for extending a yen credit of Rs. 126.7 crores for 1982-83 which was pledged at the last meeting of the Aid India consortium, no economic discussions as such will take place at Mr. Sakurauchi's level during this visit. He will be calling on the Finance Minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, for a general exchange of views on some of the issues that would be coming up for consideration during the annual meetings of the World Bank and IMF in Toronto in the next fortnight.

But the visiting Japanese Foreign Minister will be delivering a major speech on the prospects for increased Indo-Japanese economic cooperation at a dinner to be given in his honour by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) on Sunday night. It will indicate how far Japan is prepared to go in extending technological cooperation on competitive terms in selective spheres where India is in need of such assistance.

Otherwise the main accent during the talks with Mr. Sakurauchi on this occasion will be on political issues to pave the way for a better understanding of each other's attitudes. Though there are no bilateral problems as such between India and Japan, the two countries hold differing views on many international and regional issues since they tend to view them at times from different angles.

But since these differences of perception have not involved any direct conflicts of interest, the Indian and Japanese leaders have been able to share their concerns without undue reservations. The ministerial level consultative meetings have been utilised by both sides to discuss global or regional developments with a degree of objectivity voicing their apprehensions.

If Japan has made no secret of its unhappiness over India's stand on Kampuchea and Afghanistan, India has not been mincing words in making known its disappointment with the Japanese tendency to line up automatically with the West on almost all major issues. But there is a grey zone in this relationship that enables the two sides to discuss such developments quite freely to have the benefit of their assessments of each situation.

Readiness to talk: It is this readiness to talk to each other candidly that has enabled India and Japan to share their views at these ministerial meetings on the interaction of the policies and pursuits of the Big Powers in various regions.

If the Indian leaders do not let go such opportunities to get the Japanese views on the internal developments in China and its changing attitudes towards neighbouring countries including the Soviet Union, the Japanese Ministers have been equally keen on obtaining India's appraisal of the Soviet policies in Asia especially in relation to the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the Indo-China States.

These periodic exchanges have also helped the two countries to talk about subjects like each other's nuclear policies, particularly the attempts of the suppliers group to impose discriminatory safeguards in the name of non-proliferation. Though Japan has not gone to the extent of challenging the U.S. right to indulge in these double standards because of its special relationship with Washington, it has certainly been following with interest, not unmixed with a degree of admiration, India's stout resistance of these pressures.

During his talks with the External Affairs Minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, the visiting Japanese Foreign Minister will try to obtain some clarification of how India proposed to deal with the French move for much more stringent safeguards on the fuel to be supplied for the Tarapur plant. The Japanese have been following this controversy very closely since they are no less opposed to the concept of pursuit and perpetuity clauses.

But the Japanese Government is reported to be very particular that the tone that has already been set through a painstaking effort by both sides for increased cooperation can be sustained only through concrete action in some selective spheres.

Talks in Delhi

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Aug 82 p 1

[Excerpts] New Delhi, August 28. The talks with the visiting Japanese foreign minister, Mr. Toshio Sakurauchi, here have given tentative indications to India that Japan might now be prepared to intensify bilateral relations despite the differing political perceptions of the two countries.

During their 90-minute meeting, Mr. Sakurauchi and the external affairs minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, expressed their desire for closer relations between the two countries. They had frank exchange of views over the situation in South-East Asia, Afghanistan, and issues related to the North-South dialogue and disarmament.

The Indian external affairs minister apprised the Japanese leader of the process of normalisation of India's relations with Pakistan and China. He also acquainted the Japanese foreign minister with the latest situation regarding the non-aligned summit. Mr. Sakurauchi said his country respected India's policy of non-alignment.

Economic Ties

The two ministers also emphasised the importance of closer economic relations between the two countries and took note of the recent seminar in Tokyo which discussed joint projects in third countries.

At the talks, India did not discuss the defence posture of Japan nor did it refer to the textbook controversy and Japan's relations with China.

The Japanese side expressed concern over the volatile situation in West Asia. Mr. Rao underlined that the only solution to the West Asian problem was the establishment of a nation state for the Palestinians. The two leaders also discussed the Iran-Iraq war.

The two leaders reaffirmed their determination to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries while pursuing efforts to promote peace and stability in Asia and the world.

Speaking at a dinner he hosted in honour of the visiting foreign minister, Mr. Rao said: "We cannot notice without anguish events taking place close to us.

Mr. Rao appreciated Japanese participation in India's economic development and said that "opportunities for a more extensive co-operation between our two countries were increasing."

Mr. Rao referred to the active role played by Mr. Sakurauchi in developing Indo-Japanese contacts as president of the India-Japan Friendship Association.

Mr. Sakurauchi emphasised that Japan was "feeling the weight of India as a major country of Asia and her role in a new light." In this context he mentioned that with the increase in political stability in the region, India was showing "renewed interest" in east Asian countries.

Recalling a series of high-level contacts between the two countries, including Mrs. Gandhi's recent stopover in Tokyo, Mr. Sakurauchi said: "Japan and India had rediscovered each other and were about to enter into a new, closer bilateral relations within a broader framework of increased interdependence among nations today. We consider it very significant for the cause of peace and prosperity of Asia and the world."

Japan would do its best to promote political dialogue, economic relations and co-operation between the two countries, he said.

Japan has extended concessional loans amounting to about Rs. 126.77 crores for four projects in India. It has also offered grant aid of about Rs. 17.25 lakhs for cultural activities.

The notes on the concessional loan and grant aid to India were exchanged between the visiting Japanese foreign minister and the finance minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee.

The projects for yen credit include the Anpara 'B' thermal power station in U.P., an offshore supply vessel project for the ONGC, the Calcutta metro railways (phase II) and micro-hydro power stations in Tamil Nadu.

The yen credit for these four projects was pledged at the Aid India Consortium meeting in Paris on June 15 this year.

The grant aid for cultural activities is for the supply of audio-visual and photographic equipment to the centre for cultural resources and training.

The power sector is one of the most important sectors covered under the yen credit. Under the Anpara 'B' thermal power station project, two units of 500 MW will be installed.

The Tamil Nadu state micro-hydro power project envisages the setting up of three micro-hydro turbine generators at lower Bhavani, Pykara dam and Vaigai.

The Calcutta metro railway project is for the construction of a rapid transit system from Dum Dum to Tollygunge, a 15-km.-long stretch. This is an ongoing project.

Speech to Businessmen

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 30 Aug 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi has lauded the "great significance" of the current liberalised economic policies of the government of India, and observed that "open India offers unlimited possibilities".

His observation came in the context of his reference to the 'new development' witnessed in business collaborations between India and Japan, in which he specifically mentioned "motor car manufacturing".

Mr Sakurauchi was speaking at a dinner in the Capital on Sunday evening hosted by Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) president G K Devarajulu.

Later, briefing newsmen on Mr Sakurauchi's discussions in India, Deputy Director-General of the Asian Bureau of the Japanese Foreign Ministry H Fuji informed that the joint venture between Maruti and Suzuki, the accord on which is to be initialled in September, would mark a turning point in Japanese investment in India.

He also added that expansion in items of OGL was seen as dynamism of the Indian economy and was appreciated by Japan as India's willingness to have wider cooperation.

New Pattern

In his speech at the FICCI function, Mr Sakurauchi highlighted the important role of promotion of economic exchanges in the private sector. He said the fields of Indo-Japanese cooperation had of late vastly expanded. "The success of the recent conference on joint tendering and sub-contracting between Japanese and Indian firms in third countries, recently held in Tokyo, would have deep implications, indicating a new pattern of cooperation between the two countries", he added.

He disclosed that Indo-Japan Joint Business Cooperation Committee was studying an idea to expand in the coming five years trade between the two countries from the present level of two billion dollars to five billion dollars.

Earlier, Mr Sakurauchi conceded that although a major part of Japan's economic cooperation was extended to the Asian region and about 20 per cent of its Official Development Assistance was directed to South Asia, it was a fact that the total figures of Japan's trade and investment in the South Asian region in 1980 were less than those for a single member-State of the ASEAN group.

He listed several reasons for such a situation. One was the "complexity of the intra-regional and peripheral relations of the South Asian region" which constrained the Japanese to keep some distance from this area, thereby weakening relations with South Asian states. Additionally, "some of the countries in this (South Asian) region were maintaining a rather inward-looking economic system", the Japanese Foreign Minister averred, and said this eventually built a psychological wall between Japan and these countries

However, he felt, there were some positive signs now. First, the stability of South Asia "is steadily being restored" with serious efforts to improve Indo-Pak and Sino-Indian relations by which India "is strengthening her moderate non-alignment policy and conducting a foreign policy to maintain well-balanced good relations with the US and the Soviet Union".

Secondly, the advance made in promoting regional cooperation among South Asian nations, which Mr Sakurauchi felt was a "grand experiment". Thirdly, moves to enhance external economic ties which were welcomed by Japan which stressed that maintenance of the free trade system and liberalization of economic activities "are essential to revitalization of the world economy".

In these conditions, he was convinced that Japan's exchange with South Asian states could not be kept at current levels.

Problems Admitted

Quoting Japanese Prime Minister Suzuki's words during Mrs Gandhi's recent visit to Japan--"relations between our two countries are not commensurate with the international status currently held by them"--Mr Sakurauchi said: "Cooperative relations between Japan and India, a major power in the region, should be made stronger and closer." He did not wish away the problems, however, noting that in the 1970s there had appeared between Japan and India subjected to severe international circumstances, a "delicate difference in their political and economic interests" and hence Indo-Japanese relations had been left to move on at a level stable but not always satisfactory.

But, in 1980s, there was a "turn of tide" with India trying to improve relations with its neighbours and "new developments" in its ties with superpowers. "The recent visit by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi to the US is seen as an eloquent indication of these developments, and I am very pleased that it achieved significant results," he held. Hence, he declared: "The time has come for our two countries to recognise anew their respective roles and to cooperate, as important countries of the two regions of Asia, for peace and prosperity of these regions and the stability of the world."

To develop Indo-Japanese relations, he said they must cooperate (i) for peace by way of contributing to detente, disarmament, regional stability and promotion of North-South dialogue "regardless of their different positions", and thus must "increase their political dialogue and conduct effective global diplomacy"; (ii) for prosperity enhancing economic cooperation among them; (iii) to promote mutual understanding by increasing studies of each other's country, people, industry, market.

Regarding Japan's foreign policy, he said his country's declaration "never to choose the road to a military power that will threaten others" was rooted in the will of the Japanese people, who had deeply reflected upon the grave mistakes of the past, and on this principle was based its policy towards Asia. "I intend to endeavour to make the multifaceted cooperative relations between Japan and Asian countries a model of North-South relations in the global society of the new age," he underlined.

The FICCI president, in his speech, said there was considerable scope for expansion of two-way trade between India and Japan, as also for transfer of Japanese technology, supported by investment.

Mr Devarajulu said there was considerable scope for large imports from Japan, particularly of textile fibres, fertilisers, machinery, transport equipment and the like. India was also in a position to increase its exports to Japan of marine products, and engineering items like components, castings and forgings and garments.

Referring to Japan as an "excellent source of technology", Mr Devarajulu said India had so far concluded about 7,000 collaboration agreements, about eight per cent of which were with the Japan. [as published]

SUPREME COURT ISSUES NOTICE TO ZAIL SINGH

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 27 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 26.--The Supreme Court today issued notice to Mr Zail Singh and others on a joint petition by 27 members of Parliament challenging his election as the seventh President of India, reports PTI.

The notice was also issued to the Union of India, the Election Commission and Mr Sudershan Agarwal, Secretary-General of the Rajya Sabha, who was the returning officer for the presidential election.

The notice was issued by Mr Justice S. Murtaza Fazal Ali on the petition filed on August 13 by the 27 M.P.s representing four Opposition parties. The petitioners included Mr Charan Singh (Lok Dal), Mr Syed Shahabuddin (Janata), Mr Jagannath Rao Joshi (BJP), Mr Harikesh Banadur (DSP) and 23 other M.P.s from these parties.

The petition which lists nine grounds for challenging the election contends that Mr Zail Singh is "not a suitable candidate" for the office of the President and any limitation on Article 71 of the Constitution relating to the grounds on which election of a President may be questioned is "illegal and unconstitutional".

The petition further contends that the statement issued by Rao Birendra Singh, Union Minister for Agriculture with the "connivance of Mr Zail Singh" and distributed through the Press Information Bureau is an "interference in the free exercise of an electoral right of the members of the electoral college and misuse of Government machinery".

The petition contends that the acceptance of the nomination papers of Mr Zail Singh itself was "illegal" on the ground that he did not subscribe to an oath under Article 84(A) read with article 58(1)(C) of the Constitution.

Article 84(A) says that a person shall not be qualified to be chosen to fill a seat in Parliament unless he is a citizen of India, and makes and subscribes before some person authorized in that behalf by the Election Commission an oath or affirmation according to the form set out for the purpose in the Third Schedule. Article 58(1)(C) says that no person shall be eligible as President unless he is qualified for election as a member of the House of the People.

The petition had alleged that both Mrs Indira Gandhi and Mr Zail Singh misused Government machinery for furthering his election.

The petitioners contend that the participation of Mr Justice M. H. Beg, chairman of the Minorities Commission in the election campaign was "illegal" and had "materially affected the election result".

The petitioners further contend that criminal proceedings were pending against Mr Zail Singh in a Meerut court. But now with his election as the President of India, the petitioner's right to prosecute him would stand prejudiced because of the immunity enjoyed by the President.

JAPANESE, INDIAN LEADERS AGREE ON COOPERATION

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Excerpt] TOKYO, Aug. 5--The Prime Ministers of India and Japan today agreed on the need to enhance the scope of cooperation between the two countries, reports PTI. In an hour-long discussion, Mrs Gandhi and Mr Zenko Suzuki also covered, in general terms, the international situation.

The talks were held shortly after Mrs Gandhi flew in here for a day's stopover on her way home from a nine-day visit to the USA. Mr Suzuki paid tribute to Mrs Gandhi's leadership, particularly her stewardship of the economy. New trends and policies, he said, were conducive to investments from abroad. He expressed satisfaction at the new turn of Indo-U.S. relations following Mrs Gandhi's successful visit to America.

Mr Suzuki expressed support for India's economic development programmes and said Japan was willing to consider, sympathetically, India's case for increased contributions from developed countries to the International Development Agency.

He hoped that the visit of the Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr Yoshio Sakurauchi, towards the end of this month, woud lay a good basis for a new phase of cooperation between the two countries. Japan was willing to collaborate in the industrial and technological growth of India.

The two leaders met before attending a banquet hosted by Mr Suzuki in Mrs Gandhi's honour. The last time the two leaders met had been in Cancun during the North-South summit in October 1981. Present at the meeting were Mr Sakurauchi, the Japanese Minister for International Trade and Industry, Mr Shintaro Abe, India's Minister for commerce, Mr Shivraj Patil and the Indian Ambassador to Japan, Mr K.P.S. Menon.

At the banquet, Mr Suzuki hailed the results Mrs Gandhi's visit to the USA as a matter of significance not only to India and the USA but to the future of the whole world. The two leaders expressed their keenness to step up and widen economic relations between their two countries.

Mrs Gandhi called for the renewal of ancient ties between India and Japan, making them relevant to contemporary times. She recalled how her father had admired Japanese successes even in his school days. Today the wor d was full of admiration for the technological progress of Japan and some were even jealous, she said.

"We admire also the fact that along with the spectacular industrial progress, you have made great achievements in art and architecture and in films and designing". She welcomed the reference to friendship and cooperation made by Mr Suzuki and said she fully reciprocated the sentiments. India believed there was great scope for economic cooperation between the two countries.

Mr Suzuki accepted an invitation from Mrs Gandhi to visit India. The invitation was extended during their brief talks. Mr Suzuki said he hoped to undertake the visit at an early date. He will be the first Japanese Premier to visit India since Mr Hayato Ikeda's visit in 1961.

GENERAL MEETING OUSTS AKALI DAL-T CHIEF

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Aug 82 p 1

[Excerpt] New Delhi, August 29 (UNI).

The general body meeting of the Akali Dal (Tara Singh) today passed a no-confidence motion against its president, Jathedar Rachhpal Singh, and removed him from the presidentship.

The general body meeting, convened by the supporters of late Jathedar Santokh Singh, founder of Akali Dal (Tara Singh), appointed Jathedar Harbans Singh Frontier as its new president.

Talking to newsmen here, Jathedar Frontier said that out of 425 members of the general house, 352 attended the meeting and unanimously accepted him as its new president.

He said Jathedar Rachhpal Singh was expelled from the primary membership of the party for his alleged anti-party activities and for sabotaging the interests of the Dal by supporting a rebel leader in the Delhi gurdwara prabandhak committee elections on August 26.

The meeting also unanimously elected Mr. Autar Singh Autopins, as a leader of the Panthic party.

The new president was authorised by the general house to reconstitute the national executive and the district level committees soon.

The meeting which took place at Gurdwara Sisganj was of the view that Jathedar Rachhpal Singh had failed to implement the policies of its founder Jathedar Santokh Singh, who devoted his life for the cause of the Path.

The new president said the meeting expressed concern over the delay in finding out the facts about the assassination of Jathedar Santokh Singh. The police had failed to arrest the real culprits behind this alleged conspiracy to murder Santokh Singh.

In another resolution, the Akali Dal renewed its 21-point charter of demands. It authorised its new president to start negotiations with the Centre.

If the Centre failed to concede its demands the party authorised Jathedar Frontier to decide about the agitational methods the party should adopt.

The members who participated in the meeting resolved to follow the steps of the founder of the party and fulfil his dream for the welfare of the Sikh community.

INDUSTRY MINISTER ADDRESSES CENTRAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 24 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] NEW DELHI, Aug. 23.—A major policy announcement that the Government would consider foreign equity participation above the present permissible limit of 40% in priority industries involving import substitution, sophisticated technology or export, was made by the Union Minister for Industry, Mr N. D. Tiwari, while inaugurating the 29th meeting of the Central Advisory Council of Industry here today.

Mr Tiwari also announced that the Government was formulating a new policy for the electronics industry which offered greatest growth potential. The policy on the anvil, which would be contemporary and forward looking, would be announced soon, he declared.

With regard to the policy of preferential location of industries in backward areas the Minister disclosed that the Government was contemplating evolving special licensing procedure for providing initiatives in no-industry districts. A package of incentives was being worked out to define the initiatives and relaxation as a part for backward area development, he said.

The one-day meeting of the council was attended by the representatives of national organizations of industry and trade and central trade union bodies and secretaries of the key economic Ministries and chief executives of financial institutions.

Explaining the recent charges in the MRTP Act, Mr Tiwari told the meeting that the most important feaure of the amendment of the Act was that certain "nationally important and so identified", industries would be exempt rfom the provisions of the law. This was deliberately done to evolve a better pattern of utilization of resources and skill of the large industrial houses on nationally desirable lines.

On the recent changes leading to the enlargement of the Appendix—I, Mr Tiwari said the objective was not only investment stimulation per se but also direct investment in a manner to lead to widest social impact. He also made it clear that the idea had not been to expand per se investment opportunities for the large houses.

The idea basically had been to recognize the facts in terms of investment requirements for particular groups of industries. In the re-definition of Appendix-I adequate care had been taken to ensure that alternative investment initiatives were not in any way hampered.

On the contrary, he said, the precision in the definition of entries in Appendix-I would reduce the grey areas and would therefore, open up, with a degree of clarity, the preferred investment areas. In the same manner, for the first time, the Government made production the criterion for capacity fixation, ensuring that there was no backlash of this on sectors where alternative investment initiatives were taking shape. "We, necessarily, have to extend this to the large houses only in relation to Appendix-I industries because there are the demarcated areas of their growth", he said.

Mr Tiwari told the council that the country's industrial output had reached $100 billion, including the contribution from the small-scale sector. With all this investment, the total volume of imports for capital goods and components had not exceeded 5%. This had happened primarily because of the success of the fundamentals of the policy which had been framed on two principles, self-reliance and diffusion of industrial initiatives.

He said that it had now been recognized all over that India was today able to sustain about 90% of its gigantic development effort on its own. It had also been recognized that while there was either a zero growth or a marginal growth situation in most of the developed industrial world, India had not only recorded a progressive rise from 4.6% in 1980-81 to 8.3% in 1981-82, but continued to maintain a more than 7% rate of growth in the current financial year despite the prolonged textile strike in Bombay and some other inhibiting factors like lesser or late rainfall in some parts of the country.

The Minister said that the Government had also taken specific steps to fill up executive posts in public sector undertakings and redefine responsibilities and powers of the management of such undertakings. More powers had been delegated to them in terms of project management and necessary sanctions. At the same time they had been made accountable for achieving laid-down targets, he said.

PRESS NOTE ON FOREIGN EQUITY HOLDINGS ISSUES

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 24 Aug 82 p 13

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 25.--The Central Government announced yesterday that there would be no dilution in the level of foreign equity holdings even if the financial institutions exercised their option to convert their loans into equity under the convertibility clause.

A Union Finance Ministry Press Note said here that the Government had decided to maintain the level of foreign equity holdings in companies--allowed to be retained under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1973--at a level of 51% or below.

The official announcement said that in the event of the financial institutions exercising the option of the convertibility clause, resulting in the reduction in the level of foreign equity holdings, foreign shareholders would be allowed to bring in the required foreign exchange in cash to acquire the shares at about the market price to enable them to maintain the permitted level of foreign equity holding.

Of course, the Press Note said, the companies, if affected by the convertibility clause of the financial institutions, would be required to pass a special resolution under Section 81 of the Companies Act, to permit the affected foreign shareholders to maintain their original foreign equity holdings.

The Central Government's fresh decision has removed a major irritant against which foreign investors have often complained.

AKALI DAL (LONGOWAL) LEADER TELLS PARTY POSITION

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 24 Aug 82 p 7

[Article by K. S. Khosla]

[Text] AMRITSAR, August 23.

THE Akali Dal (Longowal) is not in favour of "Khalistan," nor does it support extremism in any form. The party believes in non-violent means to achieve its objective.

Clarifying the position, the party president, Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, told this correspondent that the Anandpur Sahib resolution, which had created so much "unnecessary" controversy, was "secular and democratic" and not secessionist in nature. All that the resolution demanded was political and financial autonomy for the states and there was nothing "anti-national" about this demand. Even the former president, Mr. Sanjiva Reddy, while speaking at a function some months ago, had advocated giving autonomy to states as he believed that ruling from distant Delhi was not always helpful in the speedy development of the far-flung areas of this big country, the Sant added.

Sant Longowal said his party wanted autonomy within the Indian Union and was in favour of national integration and Hindu-Sikh unity. Those who questioned "our patriotism" were either deliberately spreading the lie or showed utter ignorance of the history of the Akali Dal, which was replete with examples of supreme sacrifices for the country. The Dal had been in the forefront of the freedom struggle, the Sant added.

The Sant said the party had launched the present "morcha" out of sheer compulsion as it felt that there was no alternative left for getting its demands accepted. The Sant claimed that the Prime Minister had accepted the demands in the first meeting and even said that they were "sound in principle." But Mrs. Gandhi backed out of the assurance given by her at the last meeting, the Sant regretted.

The Sant said the "morcha" had not failed as was being suggested by the state government and other interested parties. He said that till August 19, as many as 4,331 Akali workers had courted arrest. (The "morcha" was launched on August 4).

The important Akali workers who had gone to jail so far were Mr. Prakash Singh Badal, former chief minister, Mr. Balwinder Singh Bhunder, Mr. Sukhdev Singh Dhindsa and Mr. Narinder Singh, former ministers, Mr. Lehna Singh Tur, MP, half a dozen MLAs and about 100 sarpanches from various districts. The "morcha" would continue till their demands were met. It was going to be a long drawn-out affair and "our past morchas have shown amply that we have a lot of patience," the Sant pointed out.

ACCEPTANCE FIRST

Asked if there was any room for negotiation or compromise on its demands, including that of the Anandpur Sahib resolution, Sant Longowal said, "Let the Prime Minister first accept in principle the demand for provincial autonomy. The modalities and the form of autonomy can be discussed later. We are not rigid and do not say that on provincial autonomy the Anadpur Sahib resolution is the last word."

Asked whether they would resume talks with Mrs. Gandhi, the Sant said, "We are not going to have any talks unless she announces the acceptance of the demands which she had accepted in principle."

An hour-long talk with the Sant however, showed weak chunks in his assertion that the party was not supporting extremism. The Sant said, "We are not supporting extremists, but we are certainly supporting those "Amritdhari" Sikhs who are being harassed and tortured by the police. "The police had no business to humiliate and torture the relative of those arrested by it," the Sant stated, adding, "Let the police prosecute those arrested by it in courts according to the laws of the land."

NOT ON FIRM GROUND

The Sant was again not on firm ground while denying the allegation that his party had adopted Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale's "morcha" for the release of Mr. Amrik Singh, his close associate and president of the all-India Sikh students' federation. The Sant said that his party had not adopted anyone's "morcha". It had only shifted its morcha from Kapoori to Amritsar as there were problems in courting arrest there. The fact, however, remains that Sant Bhindranwale has suspended his "morcha" since August 4 — the day the Akali Dal launched its "morcha."

Whether the "morcha" will fail or be successful will depend largely on the party's attitude towards extremism. Political observers feel that the Akali Dal must give up its ambivalence and come out openly against violence in any form including hijacking. They point out that while the Akali leaders condemned the hijacking on August 4, they remained silent on the earlier hijacking by the Dal Khalsa members who succeed in taking an Indian Airlines plane to Lahore.

Observers feel that the Dal should reach a consensus with the opposition parties on a basic minimum programme as far as the demands concerning the entire state are concerned. Otherwise the "morcha" will be a single party affair.

KHOBARAGANDE-LED RPI HOLDS EXECUTIVE MEETING

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] August 29.

Mr. B. D. Khobaragade, president of the RPI (K), today charged Mr. R. S. Gavai, former chairman of the legislative council, with splitting the Republican Party of India by joining hands with the ruling party.

He was referring to Mr. Gavai's reported statement that it was the Congress party which caused factions in the RPI. Mr. Khobaragade said that though Mr. Gavai was critising the Congress (I) now he would not be surprised if the latter joined hands with it if again offered the post of the council chairman.

Mr. Khobaragade said the party executive at its meeting in the last two days had decided to celebrate the party's golden jubilee at Pandhurna in Chhindwara district of Madhya Pradesh in October. All factions of the RPI would be invited for the meeting.

The executive also welcomed the suggestion of the chief election commissioner to hold simultaneous elections to Lok Sabha and state assemblies. It also favoured the introduction of the proportional system of voting and the proposal that the government bear the expenses of elections.

The body supported the textile workers' struggle, demanded renaming of Marathwada university after Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, and urged immediate drought relief steps in the state.

Meanwhile, Mr. R. S. Gavai in a statement today clarified reports of his speech at Manmad on August 18 which mentioned that he aspired to be the chief minister of the state.

Mr. Gavai said what he had stated was that in view of the large scale dissensions in the ruling party any one from the opposition could become the chief minister. Since he was in the opposition, he too could become the head of the government.

He also clarified that there was no question of his giving any offer to Mr. Antulay to join the opposition or advise the opposition to withdraw the cases in the court against Mr. Antulay. However, he was of the view that political disputes should be settled at the political level only.

COMMERCE SECRETARY MEETS WITH SOUTH ASIAN DIPLOMATS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Aug 82 p 7

[Text] Commerce Secretary Abid Hussain held a preliminary meeting with diplomats from South Asian countries in connection with the holding of a two-day seminar on economic cooperation among these countries from 6 October, reports UNI.

The diplomats from Pakistan, Bangladesh, Nepal, Bhutan and Sri Lanka who attended the meeting had agreed to participate in the seminar and also work out the modalities.

The seminar which will be organised by the Federation of Indian Export Organisations will be attended by representatives of leading chambers of commerce, trade associations and Government agencies from these countries besides India and Maldives.

The objectives of the seminar would be:

Increasing trade cooperation among South Asian countries.

Sharing of experience in areas such as renewable sources of energy, technical cooperation, transfer of technology, training.

Identifying the role of small and cottage industries in the industrial development and,

Increasing productivity and creating employment opportunities.

At Saturday's meeting, the Commerce Secretary said that it was essential for South Asian countries to cooperate among themselves in order to take advantage of the potentials available in the region.

During the last few years, they were having trade fairs in each other country. This had created a lot of awareness of their capabilities, he said.

SOVIET VISITOR SPEAKS ON TREATY ANNIVERSARY

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 26 Aug 82 p 10

[Text] Soviet Vice-President Sattar Imashaev on Wednesday reiterated his Government's commitment to promote world peace and said both India and Soviet Union had a common approach on various international issues, especially world peace efforts to stall arms race and making Indian Ocean a zone of peace.

Mr Imashaev said the Soviet leaders and people were looking forward to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's forthcoming visit to the USSR which he hoped would further cement the ties of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

He was speaking at a public meeting organised by the Indo-Soviet Cultural Society in the Capital to celebrate the 35 anniversary of Indian Independence and 11th anniversary of the signing of the Indo-Soviet Treaty for peace, friendship and cooperation.

The struggle for peace and security, Mr Imashaev noted was a struggle to reserve mankind from destruction by nuclear holocaust. He said India had always played an important role in defusing world tension and voicing concern against the escalating arms race.

Mr Imashaev pointed out that the Soviet people keenly watched the development of India and noted with appreciation its progress in many sophisticated disciplines. He said that during his visit to several parts of the country he found an abundant flow of love and affection from the Indian people.

Presiding over the function, former Foreign Secretary T N Kaul said Indo-Soviet cooperation in various fields and its friendly relation was a vivid example of the two countries' efforts to promote peace, stability and peaceful coexistence.

Referring to the Indo-Soviet treaty as a bullwark of peace, Mr Kaul said the voice of one billion people of India and the Soviet Union for peace could not be ignored. The treaty, he said, was also an effective deterrent for any other country against intervening in the affairs of the two countries.

Other speakers at the function included CPI leader Rajashekhar Reddy, Mr Dinesh Goswami MP and Mrs Ambika Soni.

Earlier, a large number of school children welcomed the Soviet Vice President with songs and flowers. Some of the students delivered a welcome address in the Russian language.

ERRORS DISCOVERED IN 1981 CENSUS STATISTICS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 27 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] A net undercount in the census has been formed in a Post Enumeration Check by the Registrar General of India. The check was conducted soon after the 1981 census to assess the extent of omissions and duplications in the census, according to an official release in the Capital on Thursday, reports PTI.

The PEC has revealed that the net omission rate is 17.95 persons per thousand with a PRSE (Percentage Relative Standard Error) of 4.69. The net omission rate for males and females are 17.10 and 18.85 per thousand respectively, and do not differ significantly.

The rural-urban differences are, however, significant. In the rural areas, the net omission rate is 15.00 per thousand, while in urban areas it is 27.6 per thousand.

The PEC reveals that the omission is highest in the Central Zone (25.50 per thousand) followed by the North Zone (21.81 per thousand). The West Zone rate is closer to the all India rates. In both the South and East Zones, the omission rates are lower than the all India rate.

The omission rates are almost the same as observed in the 1971 census.

The omission rates by age groups have also been derived through the survey. It is noticed that the omission rate in the other age groups 0-4 is higher than the corresponding rate in the other age groups, being 26.98 per thousand.

The omission rates do not differ significantly by literacy, being 17.75 in the case of literates and 18.06 in the case of illiterates per thousand.

Analysis of omission rates by marital status indicates that the widowed/divorced/separated tend to be omitted more. In the case of the widowed/divorced/separated, the omission rate is 23.64 per thousand as against 20.20 per thousand, in the case of the never married and 14.65 per thousand in the case of married.

The omission rates are higher in the case of females among the married and widowed/divorced/separated being 16.65 per thousand and 25.51 per thousand respectively as against 12.53 per thousand and 17.92 per thousand respectively in the case of males.

In the case of the never married, the omission rates among females and males are very close being 19.85 per thousand and 20.51 per thousand respectively.

The PEC covered 14 major states and the union territory of Delhi, which together accounted for 97 per cent of the censused population.

LOK DAL EXECUTIVE RESOLUTION ENDORSES EXPULSIONS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 26 Aug 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 25.--The National Executive of the Lok Dal, led by Mr Charan Singh, today endorsed the action taken by him in expelling from the party some of the "well-known splitters" who were "engineering a rift among the party leaders with a view to gaining virtual control" of the Lok Dal.

In a lengthy resolution adopted by the executive it named some of the "splitters", and by naming them, broadly hinted that they were none but erstwhile socialists, whom the resolution accused of indulging in "high intrigues inside the party".

It described the exit of such elements from the party as a "good riddance", adding that the departure of "some of our erstwhile colleagues will prove to be a blessing in disguise, as it will end cliquism inside the party and make for greater homegeneity and cohesion".

Mr S. N. Mishra, general secretary, who released the resolution to the Press, said that of the 45 executive members, 25 had turned up for the meeting and another three had sent telegrams to extend their support to Mr Charan Singh.

He also released the list of 15 national executive members, four State Presidents, and 10 MPs--totalling 29 top-ranking leaders, who had been expelled from the party by Mr Charan Singh and who had on August 9 set up a rival Lok Dal with Mr Karpoori Thakur as president.

The 15 executive members expelled are: Mr Madhu Limaye, Mr Rabi Ray, Mr Satyanarayan Reddy, Mr Hukumdeo Narain Yadav, Mr Karpoori Thakur, Mama Baleshwar Dayal, Mr Chandradeo Prasad Verma, Mr Biju Patnaik, Mr Devi Lal, Mr George Fernandes, Mr Sharad Yadav, Mr Laxmi Narain Yadav, Mr Puran Chand, Mr Purushottam Kaushik and Mr Jabir Husain.

The four State presidents expelled are Mr Balbir Singh (Punjab), Mr Dinesh Das Gupta (West Bengal), Mr G. Latchanna (Andhra Pradesh), and Mr Kapildeo Singh (Bihar).

FINANCE MINISTRY REPORTS ECONOMY 'IN GOOD SHAPE'

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 28 Aug 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, August 27 (PTI).

THE economy, on the whole, is in "good shape" though there are strains especially on the industrial side, which are being tackled, according to finance ministry sources.

The anxiety induced by weather uncertainty has been relieved to a considerable extent by revival of the monsoon and the large foodgrains stock, which would be supplemented by the import of 2.5 million tonnes of wheat from the U.S.

This is intended to meet the needs of the public distribution system, especially in the drought-hit parts of the country, and the accumulated stock should subdue inflationary expectations, the sources say.

The bumper sugar production (already around 8.4 million tonnes) and government's policy of releasing larger quantities would also help to keep the prices under control.

Reports have been received of improved prospects for oilseeds in the wake of recent rains. Inventory-wise, it is pointed out, the country is in a better position to influence the market prices of essential commodities, like foodgrains and sugar and, to a certain extent, edible oils.

Fertiliser imports have been reduced largely with increased domestic production and there has been a welcome increase in consumption of 11 per cent in 1981-82 in spite of the revision of fertiliser prices.

On the price front, satisfaction is derived from the still low annual rate of inflation (less than 2 per cent) though there has been some "seasonal increase" and official circles admit more vigilance is called for. The government is, however, in a position to intervene effectively and prevent speculation, it is felt.

On the industrial side, official data available up to May-end show a growth of 6.5 per cent in the first five months (January-May) of 1982 over January-May 1981. But there are problems in industries like commercial vehicles where demand is not catching up with availability.

The credit policy, officials maintain, has already been considerably relaxed by readjustment of the cash reserve ratio (CRR) as well as by selective support to sectors in need of it. Broad directions have been given to the banks and it is for them to react to demands as they arise.

The industrial scene is certainly not as gloomy as made out in some quarters, they say, because there has been increase in generation of power and infrastructure is operating well.

Essential inputs, like coal, steel, cement and fertilisers, are easily available and there is no scarcity in these items.

Official sources also discount fears that the blow-out in Bombay High would have major impact on the oil production programme. The target set for this year might still be realised, they say.

FRENCH-INDIAN RELATIONS ENDANGERED BY TARAPUR STAND

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 23.

The Foreign Secretary, Mr. M. K. Rasgotra, will probably go to Paris for discussions at the political level with the Secretary-General of the French Foreign Ministry, Mr. Francis Guttman, if the French technical team headed by the Director-General of Cogema, Dr. De Wissocq, insists on additional safeguards at the talks in Delhi next week on the nuclear fuel to be provided for the Tarapur plant.

Meanwhile, the External Affairs Ministry will be replying through diplomatic channels to the French note spelling out the new elements that are sought to be included in the proposed fuel supply contract through a parallel agreement bringing the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) into the picture.

There is no reaction yet from Washington to the message verbally communicated through the U.S. Charge d'Affaires in Delhi that India cannot accept the French bid to apply the pursuit and perpetuity clauses to the fuel to be supplied by it.

The original understanding, on the basis of which India approached and obtained the initial assurances from France, was that the new arrangement would simply substitute France for United States in the 1963 agreement with no additional obligations.

Discordant note: The controversy over the nature and extent of Tarapur safeguards has unfortunately introduced a sour note in Indo-French relations which have been particularly close since Mrs. Gandhi's return to power in 1980.

As a prelude to the French President, Mr. Mitterrand's visit to India in November, the French Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. Michel Jobert, the Defence Minister, Mr. Charles Hernu, and the Secretary-General of the Foreign Ministry, Mr. Francis Guttman, are due to come to Delhi in the course of the next two months for wide-ranging discussions on almost every aspect of Indo-French relations.

The Indo-French cooperation in the economic and defence spheres, including the still inconclusive Mirage-2000 deal, involves contracts totalling over $3,000 millions. The two Governments continue to attach considerable importance to the steady growth of this cooperation envisaging increased French participation in many new Indian industrial ventures.

The Government of India does not want this relationship to be diluted in any way on the eve of Mr. Mitterrand's visit. But at the same time it cannot afford to yield on the nuclear safeguards question. If India has refused all these years to sign the non-proliferation treaty as a matter of principle because of its highly discriminatory provisions, it cannot submit now to the French conditions which are no less invidious in their concept as well as application.

French responsibility: So the main responsibility for preserving the spirit of mutuality and sustaining this growing relationship rests on France.

The diplomatic community in Delhi has been following this development with considerable interest because of its wider implications. The foreign envoys here are waiting to see how India is going to handle the Tarapur issue, whether it will eventually yield in one way or the other to this new insistence on extra safeguards, or maintain its stand resolutely even at the risk of a setback to Indo-French relations.

The general feeling of these hard-headed practitioners of the art of the possible is that the French Government would give in when it realises that India will not agree to the new conditions. And in any case there has to be some clarity about the French and U.S. intentions before Mrs. Gandhi goes to the Soviet Union.

SIKH NATIONAL PARTY SCORES PUNJAB EXTREMISTS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 25 Aug 82 p 7

[Text] NEW DELHI, Aug. 24.—The All-India Sikh Nationalist Party yesterday condemned extremists' activities in Punjab. In a letter to the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr Darbara Singh, the party general secretary, Mr Mohinder Singh Sawhney, urged him to tackle extremists firmly.

While congratulating Mr Darbara Singh on his hair-breadth escape in the bomb attack, Mr Sawhney appreciated his "undaunted courage" demonstrated by his addressing a mammoth gathering within minutes of the attack.

The Sikh Nationalist Party also asked the Akali leaders to be reasonable. It took exception to the reported statement by the acting president of the Talwandi group of Akalis, Mr Randhir Singh Cheema, justifying the violent action by the extremists.

"It is a pity that a political party wedded to the cause of democracy and secularism, justified violence in redressing grievances", Mr Sawhney said.

The Sikh Nationalist Party also strongly condemned "the violent methods and the pressure tactic adopted by extremists for creating terror among the innocent citizens".

Prominent Punjab leaders yesterday issued statements condemning the attack on the Punjab Chief Minister and calling upon him to firmly deal with the situation in the State.

Mr Harcharan Singh Brar, former Governor of Orissa, expressed sympathies with the Education Minister Mr Harcharan Singh Ajnala, and all those who had sustained injuries in Friday's Rahon bomb attack.

Mr Brar condemned the activities of the "misguided and anti-national elements" involved in the attack on the Chief Minister.

The recent hijacking of a plane too was widely criticized. The immaturity" of the people who indulge in these activities was stressed.

But, the prompt manner in which the civil authorities at Amritsar dealt with the hijacker was commended.

Reacting strongly to the reported statement by the acting president of the Talwandi group of Akalis justifying the attack on the Chief Minister Punjab, and the hijacking of the plane, Mr Ragunandan Lal Bhatia, M.P., urged the Akalis to be reasonable.

It was very strange, he said, that while the Talwandi groups acting president, Mr Randhir Singh Cheema, professed faith in peaceful methods for solving all political problems, he justified violent actions and refused to condemn these incidents.

PAKISTAN GIVEN WRITTEN PROTEST ON BORDER PASS

[Text] Islamabad, Aug. 26.

India today lodged a strong written protest with Pakistan over the signing of a protocol with China on the opening of the Khunjerab Pass as the terminus of the Karakoram highway in Pak-occupied Kashmir.

The Indian Ambassador, Mr. K. D. Sharma, handed over a protest note to the Additional Foreign Secretary, Mr. Abdul Sattar, who promised to give a reply after studying it.

Pakistan had yesterday rejected India's oral protest made in New Delhi saying that India had no basis for it in international law.

The Indian note has pointed out that Pakistan and China have no right to sign an international agreement concerning an area which is under Pakistan's illegal occupation.

Will affect security: The proposed opening of the Khunjerab Pass, scheduled for tomorrow, will not only affect India's sovereignty but its security as well, as it will involve the setting up of additional border posts in the area.

The note also points out that India had protested thrice earlier in the past about the Karakoram highway--first when construction began in June 1969, again when it was inaugurated in June 1978 and as recently as February 1982 after the highway was thrown open to foreign visitors and tourists up to Batura Bridge, about 50 km short of the Pass.

Diplomatic observers here have expressed surprise that such irritants, which tend to vitiate the atmosphere, always occur not long after a good and friendly dialogue between the two countries.

Unilateral change: Regarding the Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman's reference to the Simla agreement, they said signing an international agreement with a third country amounted to unilaterally changing India's recognised position on Jammu and Kashmir.

The Pakistani spokesman had himself admitted that "in the Simla agreement, pending a final settlement of this question, both sides maintained their respective recognised positions", they pointed out.

Referring to Islamabad's suggestion that the question of Jammu and Kashmir remained to be resolved in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, these observers said the resolutions had become irrelevant after the Simla agreement.

Surprise over choice: They also expressed surprise that Islamabad picked its Minister of Kashmir Affairs and Northern Areas, Maj. Gen. (Retd.) Jamaldar, to sign an international protocol with China.

However, in another development today, it was learnt that Maj. Gen. Jamaldar would not attend tomorrow's opening ceremony as announced earlier. He is said to be "slightly indisposed."

Instead a team of Pakistani officials led by the Communications Minister, Mr. Mohyuddin Baluch and a visiting nine-member Chinese delegation led by the Governor of Sinkiang Uighur region, Mr. Ismail Ehmed, will cross over by road to Kashgar to mark the opening of the Pass.--PTI.

BJP RESOLUTION ON PRESS FREEDOM DEMANDS AMENDMENT

Madras THE HINDU in English 29 Aug 82 p 12

[Text] Bangalore, Aug. 28.

The Bharatiya Janata Party today demanded amendment of the Constitution to guarantee explicitly freedom of the press.

A resolution passed by the national executive, which began its three-day deliberations here, said the Bihar Press Bill had only underscored the urgency to provide constitutional protection to press freedom. Today, freedom of the press derived its legal sanction from Article 19 which generally assured freedom of expression to all citizens. Regarding the Bill as a 'vicious assault on democracy", the resolution called upon the President not to give assent to it.

The ruling party was "innately allergic" to the press and the Prime Minister herself had publicly "poured venom on the Indian press". Viewed against this background, the Bihar Bill would be recognised as a calculated move by the ruling party and not just a rash act by a Chief Minister. "The ruling party has not forgotten, nor forgiven, the significant contribution made by the Indian press to the ouster of the emergency forces in the Lok Sabha elections of 1977".

The executive directed the party's Orissa and Tamil Nadu units to mobilise public opinion against the "anti-press laws" in force in those States and agitate for their repeal.

It called upon its units to organise a country-wide press freedom commitment campaign. They would observe Sept. 10 as 'press freedom day' throughout the country.

Mr. L. K. Advani, BJP General Secretary, who released the resolution to the press, said the Centre had denied it was consulted on the Bihar Bill. He had information that Mr. Jagannath Mishra, Bihar Chief Minister, had spoken over telephone to Mr. Vasant Sathe, Union Information and Broadcasting Minister, about the Bill and it was only after this the Bill was introduced.

The duty on newsprint was another instance of ruling party's desire to "curb" press freedom.

There had been evidence of late of the Government's desire to recreate "Samachar" in some form and to eliminate news agencies which the Government thought it could not manage.

POOR STATE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS IN SOUTH TOLD

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 29 Aug 82 p 13

[Text] Bangalore, Aug. 28.--With mandays increasingly being lost because of mounting labour disputes, the industrial relations scene in the four southern States presents a disturbing trend.

A study made by the All India Organization of Employers for its southern regional conference held here recently says that the state of labour-management relations in the four States was relatively comfortable in the first half of the seventies but there was a sudden spurt in the second half.

Compared to the other States in the last four years, Tamil Nadu lost the highest number of mandays (3.8 million) in 1981 with 258 disputes involving 170,000 workers. Karnataka came second with 2.4 million mandays lost as a result of 102 disputes affecting 102,000 workers. Kerala, where trade union militancy is most noticeable among the four States, reported 450,000 mandays lost as a result of 12,324 workers being on strike. Though the number of workers (14,042) involved in strikes in Andhra Pradesh was more than in Kerala, the mandays lost was very much less--190,000.

As much as 64% of the 25 million mandays lost in the country last year was contributed by the four southern States. Though the production losses for 1981 are not available, the study points out that judging from the number of disputes and workers involved it should be quite substantial. The figures available for 1980 are, however, staggering. Tamil Nadu had the dubious distinction of coming first with a production loss of Rs 37 crores, followed by Rs 20.9 crores in Kerala, Rs 13.8 crores in Karnataka and Rs 6.8 crores in Andhra.

Splintered

The trade union movement is as splintered in the southern States as elsewhere in the country. All the central confederation of unions, according to the study, have vied with each other to have a hold on the workers in the organized sector. "Therefore, all the ills resulting from competitive trade unionism are present everywhere in all the States. The intensity, however, varies from centre to centre."

Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Tamil Nadu were, by and large, free from violence and militancy that had become the "common feature of industrial relations in West Bengal and lately in Maharashtra." The study blames the Left Front Ministry in Kerala for encouraging trade union militancy in the State for political reasons.

The situation in Karnataka in the beginning of 1960 when nearly 100,000 workers in all the public sector units in Bangalore went on a 77-day strike demanding wage parity with State-owned BHEL workers was an exception but that created situations of violence, intimidation and coercion. Although gheraos were not much evident in the four States, industrialists in Tamil Nadu reported that they had been subjected to them occasionally.

In Karnataka and Andhra, INTUC is a dominant force among the working class but lately there have been indications of its waning influence and CITU fast catching up. In Kerala, AITUC is trying very hard to capture the hold UTUC has on the working class. In the process, unions have proliferated with the result it is not easy to establish which central union has the largest following.

The situation in Tamil Nadu is no different. But the union patronized by the ruling AIADMK has an edge over INTUC and CITU. However, if the present trend is any indication, CITU will gain strength very soon, according to the study.

Concurrent List

The study expressed employers' concern over the increasing tendency on the part of State Governments to legislate on certain aspects of labour. Kerala, it points out, has made the fullest use of "labour" being in the concurrent list of the Constitution and passed major legislation. Some of its legislation, such as the Gratuity Act and the Head Load Workers Act, has been copied by West Bengal and Tamil Nadu. "In fact, Kerala tinkered with almost all the Central laws and enacted on its own legislation to cover every conceivable sector of employment."

Tamil Nadu has enacted a number of new labour laws. The Industrial Establishments (Conferment of Permanent Status on Workmen) Act, 1981, bestowed permanent status on all workmen who had put in continuous service for 480 days in 24 calendar months. The Payment of Subsistence Act, 1981, permitted payment of allowance varying from 50% to 100% to employees who are suspended pending inquiry.

An amendment to the Industrial Disputes Act is awaiting the President's assent. This has enabled the Tamil Nadu Government to impose certain terms and conditions of service on employers and workmen pending adjudication of their dispute by a tribunal. A similar Act is already in operation in Kerala. Following the footsteps of Kerala, the Tamil Nadu legislature has passed legislation regulating the conditions of work of those engaged in loading and unloading operations.

In contrast, both in Karnataka and Andhra there was hardly any labour legislation which could be considered a deviation from the Central statute. However, there was a proposal before the Karnataka Government to enact legislation on the lines of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, to provide for the recognition of unions.

ESI Facilities

The study is critical of the Andhra Pradesh Government for using the provisions of the National and Festival Holidays Act to declare holidays indiscriminately on grounds of curfew in any area or elections, either general or local. Prior to the enactment of this Act, there were no paid holidays on such occasions. A matter agitating employers in that State is the requirement under the Factories Rules to employ full-time medical officers for safety purposes. Considering the availability of ESI facilities, employers feel this is an avoidable burden.

Besides the regional ESI and EPF boards, all the four States have labour advisory boards with employers represented on them. The study complains that employers' views on these bodies are heard but seldom taken into account, partly due to the Governments' invariably siding with labour. "Another factor why employers' voice is in the wilderness is due to the fact that there is lack of unanimity among them on various matters".

The study gives instances where on important issues the State Governments have not cared to consult the labour advisory boards and have taken decisions without inviting the views of employers. For instance, the recent steep hike in the minimum wages in Karnataka for different categories of employment was announced without prior consultation with the employing interests. Even if it was there, the consultation was perfunctory.

The employers in all the four States are represented on the regional advisory boards constituted under the Employees' State Insurance and Provident Fund Schemes. But, according to reports, they meet very rarely.

ENGINEERING EXPORTS TO SOVIET UNION EXPECTED TO RISE

Calcutta THE SUNDAY STATESMAN in English 29 Aug 82 p 15

[Text] Export of Indian engineering goods to the USSR during the current financial year is likely to increase substantially. It is expected to cross the Rs 150-crores mark against Rs 115 crores last year.

Announcing this in Calcutta on Saturday, Mr C. D. Shah, chairman, Engineering Export Promotion Council, said that total exports of Indian engineering goods during 1981-82 were Rs 1,100 crores. The target for the current year had been fixed at Rs 1,400 crores and indications were there that it would be reached.

He said that representatives of eight large firms had a meeting with the secretary, Union Commerce Ministry, in Delhi early this week at the initiative of the EEPC where problems and prospects of engineering exports were discussed. There was a general feeling among the participating firms that if the infra-structure was improved and that the procedure for duty-free import of raw material simplified, a lot of export potential could be generated. However, many of them had raised their export targets this year, he said.

Referring to the bicycle export, Mr Shah said that the bicycles manufactured in India were now being mainly sent to African countries. But the market would shrink there once their own plants started production. If Indian manufacturers did not go in for newer designs of bicycles, they would suffer a setback.

Regarding the electronics sector, he stressed the need for import of the latest technology and increased production with an eye on the potential of the export market.

INDIAN-KUWAITI INVESTMENT COMPANY PLANNED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 26 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] An Indo-Kuwaiti Joint Investment Company with an authorised initial capital of Rs 80 crore is being set up shortly to facilitate Kuwaiti investments in this country, reports UNI.

External Affairs Ministry sources said on Wednesday discussions between India and Kuwaiti governments in this regard have reached an advanced stage and a formal agreement would be concluded soon to establish the company.

Besides promoting Kuwaiti investments in India, the investment company would also be entrusted with the job of preparing feasibility reports for various projects and evaluate what types of industries could be set up for mutual benefit.

The joint investment company, negotiations for which had started in August last year during the visit of a delegation of Kuwaiti Foreign Trading Contracting and Investment Corporation, will have its headquarters in Bombay.

Besides this Kuwait is now participating in the Indian effort to build some modern hotel complexes for the forthcoming Asian Games beginning mid-November.

The Ministry sources said Kuwait is providing about Rs four crore for the India Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC) hotel Centaur now coming up near the Delhi airport. Kuwait is also holding 40 per cent shares in the new five-star hotel Surya nearing completion in the Capital.

The Amir of Kuwait Sheikh Jabar-al-Sabah had visited India in May 1981 when he had detailed discussions with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and other leaders for intensification of Indo-Kuwaiti economic and technical cooperation.

He had also discussed the possibilities of Kuwait investments in India and Kuwait experts being trained at the Indian technical institutions.

The Kuwait fund for Arab Economic Development has already granted soft loan of about Rs 40 crore for the multi-crore Thal-Vaishet fertiliser project in Maharashtra last month.

In April this year Kuwait had entered into an agreement with India for avoidance of double taxation in the earnings of their national airlines.

INDIAN STAND ON KHUNJERAB PASS ROAD EXPLAINED

Madras THE HINDU in English 26 Aug 82 p 9

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] NEW DELHI, Aug. 25.

The External Affairs Ministry has followed up the protest made to the Pakistan Ambassador yesterday with a similar complaint to the Chinese envoy today against the Sino-Pak. protocol signed on August 22 on the opening of the Khunjerab pass connecting the Karakoram highway built across occupied Kashmir, with the Chinese road network linking Tibet with Xinjiang through Aksai Chin.

These verbal protests are to be followed up with written communications to Islamabad and Beijing on the subject, reiterating the Indian stand that Pakistan and China had no right to build the Karakoram highway and open up the Mintaka and Khunjerab passes in an area that was legally a part of the Indian Union.

An important feature of this dispute is that Pakistan continues to justify the construction of this road in occupied Kashmir and the border agreement it signed with China in 1964, on the basis of its claim to the entire state, while China has been maintaining that the border accord was provisional, subject to a final settlement of the Kashmir issue between India and Pakistan.

Hardly any difference: But from India's point of view, this differing approach hardly makes any difference, since Pakistan and China have built this road system in one of the most strategic areas of the world, ignoring Indian protests and interests.

What is really important in this context is that in lodging these protests, India is not allowing this controversy to escalate into a contentious issue that could cause a serious setback to the current Indo-Pak. dialogue or the Sino-Indian efforts for better relations. The protests are more in the nature of a follow-up action for purposes of record to ensure that the Indian stand would not be compromised through silence.

The agreement to build the Karakoram highway as an adjunct to the Aksai Chin road was concluded as far back as 1964 in the wake of the Sino-Indian conflict. It took China and Pakistan 16 hard years to complete the 650 km road along the Indus valley linking Havalian in the Hazara district of the North-West Frontier Province through Gilgit and Hunza across the Mintaka Pass, with the Xinjiang-Tibet road system.

Now the highway has been extended through a 120-km long feeder road in the north-easterly direction to provide a much shorter access from the Tibetan side instead of relying solely on the north-westerly Mintaka Pass which, being closer to the Soviet border, is relatively more vulnerable.

Forbidding terrain: The upper reaches of this road across the Karakoram range have been built on forbidding terrain with some of the highest mountains in the world and the largest glaciers outside the polar region.

At the peak of the construction during the late Sixties and early Seventies, before the highway was completed in 1978 up to the Mintaka pass, a combined labour force of an estimated 10,000 Chinese and 15,000 Pakistanis worked in various segments moving 30 million metres of earth and rock blasted by 8,000 tons of dynamite.

They built more than a hundred bridges and several hundred culverts over gushing rivulets fed by melting snows that flow down the mountain sides.

Little civilian traffic: The Khunjerab, like the Mintaka, is located on a bare plateau of over 5,000 metres. The Chinese and Pakistanis have military posts on either side of the two passes and, apart from a limited number of army vehicles going through the two passes in either direction, there is very little civil movement of either goods or persons along this route.

Indian and Soviet strategists keep a close eye on the military potentialities of this highway which, according to experts, might take many years to stabilise after the damage done by heavy blasting to the mountain sides.

The road poses no immediate threat to India or the Soviet Union. But it can be a source of potential danger in times of war, despite its high vulnerability to aerial interdiction.

SECOND INDIAN EXPEDITION TO ANTARCTICA IN NOVEMBER

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 25 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] Arrangements for the second Indian expedition to Antarctica are almost complete, reports UNI.

The team will leave for Antarctica some time in late November and early December, according to official sources. However the exact date of departure is yet to be finalised.

The sources told UNI in Delhi on Tuesday the Norwegian research vessel "Polar Circle", used in the first successful Indian expedition has been chartered again for nearly two months. The vessel is expected to reach India by November.

The team for the second expedition would include about a dozen scientists, doctors, technicians and other staff. The names of the leader and other members of the team are understood to have been finalised by the Department of Ocean Development and sent to the Prime Minister for approval.

This time the expedition will be for about two months with the scientists likely to spend about three weeks on the continent of ice to follow up the experiments conducted earlier.

The aims of the scientific expedition are deep sea exploration and study of living and non-living resources in the Indian Ocean and the Antarctica region.

The Government ultimately wants to establish a permanent laboratory in the region to gain scientific knowledge on various disciplines.

The first expedition was led by Dr S Z Qasim, secretary for Ocean Development. He is not likely to join the second expedition.

The Government has set up a task force to prepare a project for acquiring a research vessel for use in future expeditions. An expert of Mazagon Dock is one of its members.

It is possible that the Government may build the vessel indigenously and if necessary import sophisticated equipment to be fitted in it.

The task force is expected to submit its report soon, official sources said.

INITIATIVE, DRIVE NEEDED TO FULFILL PLAN

Madras THE HINDU in English 25 Aug 82 p 8

[Editorial]

[Text] The Planning Commission has struck a sombre note in its latest review of the implementation of the Plan, pointing out that some scaling down of the targets is inevitable as it will not be possible to finance an outlay of Rs. 97,500 crores in real terms at 1979-80 prices. If along with escalation in costs, the State Governments that have failed to mobilise resources to the required extent emerge as the villains, it is certainly true that the overall performance of the Centre both in terms of resource mobilisation and implementation of the projects has been much better. An additional Rs. 10,000 crores is necessary to keep the core sector targets intact and the Commission calls for hard decisions to secure the funds during the next three years. These include raising the prices of petroleum products and railway fares, reducing food subsidies and increasing the excise duty on electricity generation. In addition, the financial affairs of the States resulting from inadequate resource mobilisation, increased expenditure on pay and dearness allowance, mounting losses of electricity boards and transport corporations will have to be set right on an urgent basis.

With export performance so far none too satisfactory, and with bulk imports of edible oil, fertilizer and other commodities continuing, foreign exchange availability seems likely to emerge as a serious constraint on development after the loan from the International Monetary Fund runs out at the end of 1983-84. Without a much more purposeful effort and steps to eliminate avoidable imports through increased domestic production it will clearly not be possible to bring down the trade deficit to a manageable level. Food-grain production in 1981-82 was not very much higher than the 131 million tonnes mark reached in 1978-79 and with the growth in fertilizer consumption slowing down there is some uncertainty over reaching the Plan target of 153.6 million tonnes in 1984-85. The problem here is compounded by the poor pace of implementation of irrigation projects--particularly command area development--in the States. Both the Union and the State Governments will have to take a closer look at agricultural performance and push ahead with the development of groundwater resources in States like Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal where the pace of utilisation has been slow.

Among the core sectors, oil seems very comfortably placed with internal generation of the Oil and Natural Gas Commission providing a large part of the resources. In coal, the 133 million tonnes target set for this year may be reached but going beyond that would need a more strenuous effort. Performance in power in the first two years of the Plan has been particularly disquieting and in 1981-82, additional generating capacity of only 2175 megawatts was created as against the target of 3212 MW. Here too the performance of the centrally run National Thermal Power Corporation has been much better than that of the State electricity boards which have run up against managerial, technical and financial problems. A rise in power tariffs may be inevitable if the finances of the electricity boards are to be stabilised, but a great deal could be achieved through improved efficiency and achieving a higher capacity utilisation of 50 per cent and more in the thermal units. The plan of the Railways has run into serious trouble and a much higher outlay than anticipated now seems necessary to reach the physical targets. This is due as much to a substantial underestimation of the costs as to the effort needed to make up for past lapses in replacement of track and rolling stock and in electrification. That the Plan should fall way behind targets in such crucial areas as the railways and power reflects poorly on the Planning Commission's monitoring apparatus and initiative. The Commission should examine closely why the physical achievements on the ground are slipping continually even while the Central and State Governments claim to have spent the substantial and increasing financial outlays. Clearly, a much greater measure of political initiative and drive is necessary both at the Central level and in the States if the Sixth Plan is to retain a recognisable shape.

ANALYST ON PLANS FOR NONALIGNED SUMMIT

Madras THE HINDU in English 25 Aug 82 p 9

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 24.

The Government of India has set up a high-power committee of senior officials to organise the non-aligned summit in Delhi in early March next year in anticipation of a formal request by the community to host this conference.

The committee is headed by the Secretary in the External Affairs Ministry, Mr. Natwar Singh, a dynamic figure in the Indian Foreign Service, who has been specially posted back to Delhi after a two-year stint as Ambassador to Pakistan, to organise the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in September next, when Queen Elizabeth will be paying a visit to India to open this conference.

Biggest Conference

The next non-aligned summit will be the biggest conference of this kind that India will be hosting in Delhi, with the Heads of State or Government of at least 75 of the 93 member countries of the community participating in it along with their Foreign Ministers, senior officials and personal staff totalling an estimated 3000 persons. It will pose tremendous problems of organisation including accommodation, security, transportation, communications, entertainment, interpretation and documentation.

According to present indications, the senior officials of the member countries will assemble in Delhi on February 25 and 26 at an open-ended meeting of the coordination bureau, followed by a three-day meeting of the Foreign Ministers, before the Heads of State and Government start arriving by special planes and scheduled flights from March 1 to begin the four-day summit the following day with an inaugural plenary session. The conference will conclude on March 5 after adopting the proposed Delhi declaration spelling out the role and responsibilities of the non-aligned community in the changing global situation.

As Prime Minister of the host country, it will be the privilege of Mrs. Indira Gandhi to preside over the summit after her formal election She will be assisted by four vice-chairmen in conducting the proceedings which will go on until late at night on each of the four days of the summit conference. The summit will be taking place in Delhi at a particularly busy time for Mrs. Gandhi, since she will be extremely preoccupied in February with the election campaign in Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka, besides budget preparation in Delhi. The Heads of various member countries will start arriving for the summit the very next day after the presentation of budget to Parliament on February 28, while the Foreign Ministers are still deliberating over the draft resolutions.

The prices of essential commodities have already started going up in expectation of greater consumption during the Asian Games. During the non-aligned summit and the Commonwealth conference, the citizens of Delhi will have to bear the brunt of still higher prices which seldom come down after they have shot up for whatever reason.

Unsettled Controversy

Meanwhile, the member countries of the non-aligned community remain sharply divided over the still unsettled controversy, whether the Foreign Ministers should meet in Havana or Baghdad to formally decide on Delhi as the venue for the next summit conference. As no consensus is possible in the wake of this sharp division, it has been suggested that Cuban and Iraqi representatives should meet privately and settle this matter to their mutual satisfaction.

The two sides have been meeting in Havana and Baghdad in pursuance of this advice. They have been considering the suggestion that the necessary decision about the venue could be taken by the permanent representatives of the member countries at the United Nations without going through the motions of a Foreign Ministers meeting for this purpose.

And the question of the venue of the 1985-86 summit could be left to be decided at the Delhi summit which in all probability would accept the Iraqi offer to host it. After spending nearly $500 millions on the preparations for the 1982 summit, Iraq would have a legitimate claim to host the next one in happier circumstances.

CURRENT NEED FOR IMF TO CREATE NEW FACILITIES SEEN

Madras THE HINDU in English 24 Aug 82 p 8

[Editorial]

[Text] As might be expected, the annual report of the International Monetary Fund comes out strongly in favour of conservative monetarism as the cure for the economic ills of not only the industrial nations but of the developing countries as well. The arguments used in support of the mix of stringent demand management, holding down government deficits, currency devaluation and export orientation with which the IMF is closely associated are by now familiar. But the Fund has increasingly begun to rely of empirical support for its line. Thus the latest report argues that countries that have adopted "outwardly oriented policies" have been able to adjust to the worsened international situation without "prolonged impairment of their growth performance". The outward orientation it has in mind calls for maintaining a realistic exchange rate that keeps a country's exports competitive but the concept also takes in its sweep a whole range of policy measures including higher real interest rates, raising the prices of public goods and services, elimination of subsidies and general fiscal tightening. These measures are seen inevitable and the Fund warns, "postponement of appropriate measures, however, can result in an even more difficult adjustment at a later stage".

The industrial countries have achieved a noticeable slowing down of their inflation rate--to an average annual rate of five per cent in the first quarter of 1982--which is a welcome sign. The high rate of unemployment averaging eight per cent, the highest since 1973, and the social and political costs of the current recession are all noted, but the Fund concludes that perseverance in monetary restraint is a prerequisite for success. The weakening of demand in the industrial countries has depressed the prices of primary commodities while the high interest rates in the capital markets have imposed a heavy burden on the developing countries borrowing in them. The question is left largely unanswered as to how without diversifying into manufacture the primary producers could cope with the worsened international environment, for in the situation where the world demand is weak the outward looking policies that the Fund preaches would be of little help.

If even to the people of the industrial world it would seem the Fund is trying to out-Reagan Mr. Reagan, they have been spared the necessity of having to follow its advice. For the industrial countries do not borrow from it on highly conditional terms as the developing countries have increasingly begun to. For India which has gone in for a five billion SDR loan with conditions and under circumstances the validity of which are certainly not clear at all, the Fund's report carries both notes of hope and warning. The Fund's own review of the performance of the developing countries that had gone in for the conditional upper tranche borrowing between 1971 and 1980 concludes that they performed better in terms of reducing their deficits and inflation rates than the other non-oil LDCs. However, the Fund conditionality does pose serious problems with many of the borrowers under the stand-by and extended arrangements unable to meet the "performance criteria" laid down. At the end of April 1982, arrangements with undrawn balances amounting to a total of four billion SDR were "inoperative" due largely to the non-observance of the conditions. After the oil price shock of 1973, the IMF adopted a fairly liberal stance and 66 per cent of its financing was on non-conditional or low conditionality terms that did not require special adjustment efforts. But after 1979, 80 per cent of its loans have been accompanied by conditionality that requires very difficult adjustment policies. At a time when the developing countries are being squeezed from so many directions, the Fund ought to be adopting a more helpful stance. It should, for instance, refrain from almost sadistically thrusting social and political burdens that are unbearable and from asking for a policy mix whose efficacy is by no means proven. The quotas which determine the borrowing limits of the members were raised by 50 per cent from November 1980, but in the context of the magnitude of the current balance of payments deficits, they have proved inadequate. The next review of the quotas is to be completed in December 1983 and any increase is not likely to be operative before 1984/85. Meanwhile, the Fund must enlarge the unconditional liquidity assistance it provides both by increased SDR allocations and by creating new facilities as it did at the time of the previous round of oil price rise. The developing countries must continue with their struggle--which has by now become somewhat philosophical--to bring about a relaxation of the conditionality attached to the upper credit tranches and extended arrangements.

COOPERATION WITH GHANA--New Delhi, Aug. 28. India will undertake marketing of diamonds for Ghana and the arrangements for the sale of diamonds will be made in Bombay by the Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation. This decision was taken following a series of discussions between the Union Ministry of Commerce and the Government of Ghana. An Indian delegation headed by Mr. K. Prakash Anand, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Commerce recently visited Accra and discussed collaboration in diamond mining. It was agreed that Ghana mines would purchase inputs from India, which would not only save Ghana foreign exchange but also promote trade between Ghana and India. The Indian Government would provide suitable Indian personnel for Ghanian mines. The Government of Ghana had also requested the Indian Government for setting up a joint venture for the mining of diamonds. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 29 Aug 82 p 6]

CHINESE INFILTRATION REPORTS--Calcutta, Aug 31--Reports of Chinese infiltration have been received from Arunachal Pradesh and Sikkim, according to sources. Sources said as many as 12 Chinese infiltrated into Arunachal Pradesh in the last six months, all of whom were arrested by the Indian security forces. The motive of these infiltrators has not been clear even after close interrogation by the Indian authorities. Among the infiltrators are two women. Similar infiltration has been reported from Sikkim, four Chinese having been held in July and two more in August. When questioned at Gangtok, the Chinese reportedly said they were 'graziers' and had entered Indian territory chasing their flocks of sheep. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 1 Sep 82 p 4]

EDITORIAL VIEWS 'EMPTY SEAT' AT UN, SIHANOUK CHIEF OF CGDK

Paris MOUL KHMER in French Jul 82 p 2, 3, 4

[Editorial: "Who Should Get Cambodia's Seat at the UN?"]

[Text] We know that this year at the next General Assembly Cambodia's seat at the UN will be disputed more bitterly than in previous years between the Democratic Kampuchea of the Khmer Rouge, which holds it, and the People's Socialist Kampuchea of the pro-Vietnamese, supported by Peking and some heads of free nations in Asia and the West on the one side, and by Moscow and Hanoi at the head of the Soviet bloc on the other. If the Khmer Rouge have succeeded in holding it so far, despite their hateful reputation, they owe this to the support of free nations; for despite their disgust for these perpetrators of genocide, these nations were not able to resolve themselves to accept North Vietnam's "fait accompli" in Cambodia, and this is what explains the success of the supporters of the status quo.

But, this time the Khmer Rouge are no longer so sure of retaining this advantage; for if on the one hand they have not succeeded in "erasing" their hateful image, on the other hand neither have they been able to at all "disrupt" the North Vietnamese hold on the Khmer territory that they had the responsibility to defend to the utmost. Still, it is necessary to know whether, as masters of the regime, if they wanted to wipe out their country by their insane policy of restoring the Khmer race to the advantage of their more numerous neighbors whom they are claiming to fight today, or on the other hand actually to defend it against them. More than ever, this question is worth asking, for since these Khmer "Nazis" have assumed power in Cambodia it seems that all the curses of the heavens have fallen upon our people. In fact, it is their fault that the major communist powers are using our country exclusively as an arena in which to settle their quarrels of hegemony before the amused but concerned indifference of the free nations.

Although a concrete solution to our problem has not yet been found, despite the extremely laudable but futile efforts of the UN, supporters of the "empty" seat who are for neither the Khmer Rouge nor the pro-Vietnamese Khmer, among whom Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who has now become the president of the anti-Vietnamese coalition government, can be mentioned, are ever increasing in number. The leaders of Hanoi themselves, who with the Soviet bloc have always claimed this seat for the Heng Samrin regime which their troops brought to power in Phnom Penh, have also come foward to argue for this seat's vacancy until they later obtain it entirely for their proteges alone.

It was no doubt in awareness of this danger that, in order to retain this seat at the UN, the Khmer Rouge had insisted so much upon the formation of an anti-Vietnamese coalition government with Prince Norodom Sihanouk and Mr Son Sann whom they could no longer consider as a negligible influence.

Of course, such a government is far from being a threat to Hanoi capable of magically obtaining the withdrawal of its troops from our country. This is so obvious that when news of the formation of this government was announced, Hanoi rushed to publish "its decision" to withdraw some of its troops from our country--as if to make fun of our "farce."

However, whether this withdrawal be real or imaginary, one thing is certain; the leaders in Hanoi are no longer saying that the situation in Cambodia is "irreversible," since they themselves suggested the principle of withdrawing their troops from our country. They are certainly not afraid of this "farce," but they are definitely quite bothered by it.

Having said this, what will the coalition government's position be with regard to this problem of the seat at the UN? The least that can be expected is that this government should agree to claim this seat for itself unanimously again this year. All the more so since legally speaking the Democratic Kampuchea of the Khmer Rouge has already held it since 1975.

And as Democratic Kampuchea no longer belongs to the Khmer Rouge alone, it would be fair to grant it the UN seat for another year, particularly since on the one hand it is led today by moderate nationalist elements, and on the other hand it is not customary to leave the seat of a member nation vacant. In any case, not unless you are intending to play the game of certain predatory nations.

Of course, the personal position of Prince Sihanouk, who has always argued for the vacancy of this Cambodian seat at the UN, has long been known.

But, since he has become president of the anti-Vietnamese coalition government and recently "embraced" perpetrators of genocide "worse than the Nazis" in the Khmer Rouge zone, it is quite possible that he may also agree to embrace the position of the coalition government that he represents at the UN, of course on the condition that he abandons his own.

In any case, the moment of truth will come very soon, allowing each Cambodian to make a final decision between his country's independence and its enslavement.

PARTY CADRE FAVORITISM, YES-MAN ATTITUDES CRITICIZED

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 5, 6, 7 Aug 82

/"Conversation with the Editor" Column/

/Text/ /Question/ To the editor. Today I have a question for you which I think it might be useful for other people and especially myself who do not yet understand party work. For example, in my office (I will not mention its name here) a comrade on our committee likes to do all the work himself. This means he does not want to leave any work for others to do. The work that other people do does not satisfy him. He does not trust others. Is it right that he does this? From my observation those who work like this often cause work delays. Urgent work is not done in time, and non-urgent work is /done/ even later.

I want to ask you whether working this way is useful and proper. I have asked you this because I want to know, and I do not know who else to ask. I do not feel comfortable asking our committee because they are my seniors. Besides, our committee is the one doing this. I hope you can clear this up for me. Thank you. Bounthai, Vientiane Worker, 30 July 1982.

/Answer/ Dear Comrade Bounthai. Thank you for your letter. What you discussed in your letter is actually faced by a minority, or it could be that a majority of the people mentioned are guidance cadres. Why did it happen like this? It was because of their ideology. This ideology is considered a personal weakness but it can have a harmful effect on the government organization as a whole. Thus in the party's documents all was explained, and also lessons were given to cadres and party cadres widely. However, some people often forget and do not stick to it. Behaving like this, even though it will not cause any serious danger, does cause some damage. For example, a leading cadre is narrow-minded; he does not have confidence in anyone. He does not think that what other people do is as good as what he does, and he has to check closely on other people's work. He is afraid to ask people to do some work for him. He is afraid of giving work to other people to do because he does not have confidence in them, etc. If it is like that it will certainly cause some harm, such as work that is not carried out, and delays. Suppose such a person worked with us. We think it would be very good because we would not have to have a lot of responsibility. Whenever there is an order we would do it. If there is no order, then it would be all right to just sit and wait for one, and then we will never make mistakes. Speaking this way makes us happy, but when we look at it as a whole it is not right. It is wrong and also not consistent with the policy line of the party and government. Thus, as a leader, no matter what kind of work it is, he must be brave to have cadres do some work for him and to give them some work to do. He should not carry the work load alone, otherwise it will damage the work of society.

A leader must try to understand cadres. To understand people is a hard thing to do because to know one's own self is already hard enough. The hardest thing is when we do not know ourselves and we want to know others. Therefore, before we attempt to know others and whether they are right or wrong, we must know ourselves first.

Comrade Bounthai pointed out some problems concerning how to ask cadres to work. The party's document written for cadres to carry out, especially those who have such a disease and must correct and change themselves, is as follows:

/Text/ B. Asking comrades to do thing. When asking comrades to do something many people often catch the following diseases.

1. They often ask their brothers, sisters, and close friends whom they know well and consider as better worthy of trust than outsiders.

2. They often use yes-men and hate to ask those who are honest and sincere but do not like to flatter people.

3. They often make use of a person who has the same ideology they like, and avoid those whose ideology is different from theirs, and it does not matter how good they are.

Because of these diseases the ones they like are often protected when they do something wrong. This steadily worsens morale. Those who are honest and sincere, however, they try to make look bad and get revenge on them.

What is the right way to use cadres? We must be open-minded as to ways to make sacrifices of one's own interests for soceity, and with no conflicts with anyone. No cadres must be forgotten, and you must be generous so that you can be close to those whom you do not like. We must be patient in supervising in order to raise up those who are not capable and to have them progress.

We must be intelligent to be able to avoid the undesirable people around us, and separate them from the good cadres.

We should be cheerful and friendly so that other members will be able to be close to us.

The purpose of using cadres is to completely follow the party's and government's policies. If a cadre is anxious, fearful, depressed, and frustrated or the work is not suitable for his capability he might not be successful. Therefore if we want him to be able to work we must make him work securely and happily. If we want it that way we must /act/ as follows.

1. Encourage cadres to speak up and express their point of view. If a leader wants to know exactly what are his strengths and weaknesses, and whether his work is good or bad, there is no better way than to let his cadres give their opinions and criticize him. By doing this not only is the leader's power unaffected but it also shows the democracy and sincerity which are used towards each other in the party. If cadres do not speak up and express their opinions, or criticize, and only praise us and flatter us, this is the worst thing to do because it does not mean they do not have anything to say but that they are afraid to talk; they are fearful. It ruins democracy within the party. The atmosphere within the party is gloomy. Cadres become machine-like, are frustrated, and are afraid to speak up. This will lead to hatred and boredom.

If it turns out that way, how can cadres do their work well?

/7 Aug 82 p 2, 4/

/Text/ 2. Encourage cadres to be responsible and to be brave in their work. Whether the work will turn out to be good or bad will depend partly on whether cadres are capable or not and also partly on whether the leadership is correct or not. A person's capability does not come by itself; it mostly comes from working at it with practice and training. If the leadership is not good a great ability will become a small one.

When we assign some work for them we must guide them very well, set everything out completely, clearly explain its importance, the possible difficulties that might occur, and how to seek ways to work through the problems. When all these matters are decided we then let them work, and guide them so that they will be brave enough to do it. This is true with military units. When strategy and tactics and responsibilities are all decided there is no need for the supreme commander to interfere with the details. He must let different military units exercise their own right to do the work consistent with each situation, so that the abilities of the cadres will be strengthened. However, if the higher echelons interfere in whatever the work is, the cadres will become machine-like and will never know how to be creative; they will not use their brains or their abilities. They will not have self-confidence. Before they do anything they would have to wait for some higher-level person to order them to do it. If the higher-level person does not order them, they will not do it. They will only depend on other people. They themselves do not have creative ideas. They are not responsible people.

Before assigning work for cadres we have to discuss it with them first. If they would not be able to shoulder it, do not be stubborn in assigning that work for them to do. When we assign them the work we must have full trust in them. It should not be that we give out an order in the morning and reverse the same order in the afternoon. If you do not trust them and fear that they would not be able to do the work, and do all the work with your own hands, the result would be that one person does the work and it will not get finished. The cadres will be frustrated, depressed, and unhappy because there is no work to do and they will believe that the higher-ups [have no] trust in them.

We must train a lot of responsible cadres to be brave in doing their work and to want to do the work. If you can do it that way the party will achieve its work. But if you train fearful cadres who are afraid to do their work and who are not responsible in their work, no matter how many cadres you train it always means being defeated because it is a waste of time and materials. Then there is nothing for the party except [the worry] that the party has to [supervise] and solve the problems that the bad cadres will be creating all the time.

3. You should not think you are high and mighty; you should listen and ask for opinions from the lower levels. If the opinions of the lower comrades are right you should follow up and ask them to give their views often in order to raise their spirits and their creative ideas. If their opinions are not correct we have to clear it up for them in a friendly way. We must not browbeat or curse them. If they criticize us we must accept it. We should not show we are not happy with it. If we do that they will not dare to criticize us the next time.

If some cadres do not feel comfortable with their work we must check the cause of the problem, and explain things to them to make them understand us well. If we see that it is because the work does not suit their abilities we have to look for something that is more suitable for them to work on.

VIENTIANE AGRICULTURAL, INDUSTRIAL, TRADE STATISTICS REPORTED

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 7 Aug 82 p 2

/"Talking Together" Column by S. Thibthiangchan: "Our Capital, the First Six Months of the Year Summarized"/

/Text/ This year is going to be the second year of the first Five Year Plan. In Vientiane Capital as well as in many other areas nationwide all ideas and energy have been put into the struggle to victoriously achieve the set plan, especially in Vientiane Capital which now has basically completed its plan for the first six months of (1982) and is hurriedly continuing its second six-month plan (1982).

Generally speaking, we all know that Vientiane is the center of political, economic, social and cultural matters for the nation. Vientiane is the proud capital of the Lao people whose fame is known in every corner of the world. The people of Vientiane have a heritage of fighting, bravery, diligence, and of never submitting. They maintained this heritage in the first six months as well as in the period when they were determinedly supporting the content of the Third Party Congress to bring it to reality as well as continuing to carry out the Five Year Plan. In carrying out the second period of the Five Year Plan for Vientiane Capital, Vientiane Capital has proudly scored outstanding achievements. For example, it has well carried out its national defense and public security work at the expected level, it 100 percent ensured and secured the Third Congress of the party, and it eliminated and solved many different social dangers within Vientiane Capital by converting the national defense and public security work to become the duty of the masses.

Agricultural cooperatives and irrigation. The land in Vientiane Capital is suitable for cultivation, vegetable planting, animal husbandry, and irrigation. By following the slogan: "self-reliance and self-sufficiency in the food supply," under the guidance of the party committee and the provincial administrative committee of Vientiane Capital, in the beginning of 1982's wet rice paddy season farmers all over Vientiane Capital engaged in dry season rice farming over 2,013 hectares. Of these, the most outstanding were Hatsaifong and Nasaithong Districts. The produce was over five thousand tons or 2-3 tons of rice per hectare on the average. If this is compared with the plan the figures for dry season rice area exceeded expectations by 600 hectares. The tobacco-growing area of over 500 hectares produced over 2,000 tons per hectare on the average. The produce was as much as 5 tons.

Though this year wet rice growing is faced with severe drought, up to now (the end of the seventh month) farmers all over Vientiane Capital have completed their planting by 80 percent. At the same time as the attentive push in the production season, they also opened up over 800 hectares of new paddies, and revived over 370 hectares of abandoned ricefields.

Irrigation is the core of agriculture. Therefore, in only the first six months of this year the irrigation service completed 95 percent of the installation and construction of a machine pumping station in Dong Bang in the Nasaithong area. This system can serve 200 hectares of cultivated area. Canals and irrigation ditches were improved in the Ban Simano area, Hatsaifong District, irrigation ditches were repaired in the Kaoleui area, Sikhottabang District, and in the Nam Houm area of Nasaithong District. The cultivated areas that can be irrigated are as much as 3,000 hectares.

Along with the work mentioned above, animal husbandry of the people, the government, and in the families of cadres was widely expanded, especially poultry. Pigs, oxen, and buffalo raising is progressing for raising them for sale in cadres' families as well as the people's families. This will become goods to fill the market and keep the food supply normal.

Industry and trade. In the first six months of this year, though this work could not be carried out as well as it should have been, the industrial production was able to be completed to 42 percent of the year's plan, and the standard of living in terms of food was improved. When compared with the plan 65 percent of the rice was able to be purchased. The purchase of forest products, food supplies, and fish responded fairly well expecially in providing the food supply for the Third Party Congress as expected.

Finance and banking plays an important role in keeping the balance of the revenues and expenses. Income in the first six months of 1982 was almost half again that of 1981. Moreover, the granting of credit for production, especially to agricultural co-ops, factories, and state enterprises almost doubled when compared with that of 1981.

Communications and transportation struggled to carry out the plan fairly well; for example, broken roads were repaired, roads in the cities were paved with asphalt, drainage was cleaned out, new roads were cut, and bridges were repaired. Considering the year's plan it was carried out 84 percent on the average. Transportation work was also well ensured; it was 87 percent carried out when compared with the year's plan.

Education has also been expanded. For example, 7 additional kindergartens were built and as many as 380 additional students were accepted when compared with 1981. The number of cadres and the people in each supplementary education class was increased. Moreover, general education has made progress resulting in students in each class passing examinations and graduating at the expected level and more than the expected level.

Public health led the people and facilitated the people to practice the "three clean" sanitary principles, prevented diseases, gave shots to as many as 5,900 people, completed training a group of basic level medical cadres, and is also training two groups of basic-level pharmaceutical cadres.

Social welfare welcomed back 327 misled people to the country, trained and assisted them with consumer products, and then sent them to their hometowns. Moreover, they also helped a number of people who were faced with tragedy and fire.

The discussion above was the outline of the summary of the achievements of the first six months of the year for Vientiane Capital. These beautiful achievements proved the endlessly expanding energy of the people of the capital who always decide to work through all difficult obstacles in order to, as the slogan says, "struggle to build Vientiane to be the center of politics, the economy, and culture, and to be a progressive and strong socialist capital in all aspects.

NUMBERS OF STUDENTS OVERSEAS, FIELDS OF STUDY, PROBLEMS ON RETURN REPORTED

Vientiena SUKSA MAI in Lao Jul 82 p 7

[Interview with Mr Bountem Santisouk, acting chief of student affairs, Ministry of Education, Sports and Religion, by SUKSA MAI reporter Bounthon Sinnachak; date and place not given]

[Text] Mr Bountem Santisouk, acting chief of student affairs, Ministry of Education, Sports and Religion, gave an interview to our SUKSA MAI reporter concerning sending students to study abroad and assigning work to students who have already finished their study.

[Question] 1. Since the LPDR was established, how many students have the party and govenment sent to study abroad?

[Answer] After the success of the revolution the LPRP set a path for Laos to advance itself into socialism bypassing capitalist expansion. Therefore, to respond to the demand of the new phase of the revolution in the past 5-6 years the party and government has invested in training great numbers of cadres for high- and mid-level specialized technical tasks, more than ever before in the history of Laos. In only 5-6 years 2,884 high-level and 4,003 mid-level students were sent to study and be trained in fraternal socialist countries.

[Question] 2. How many students have already graduated?

[Answer] Not many years ago there were 307 students who had finished their study abroad, especially in fraternal socialist countries.

[Question] 3. For this year only, how many students will be graduated and from what countries? How many are mid-level and how many are high-level students, and in what fields of study?

[Answer] For 1982 only there will be almost 575 students graduating for high-level and mid-level specialized tasks in industrial construction, housing construction, agricultural construction, international affairs, economic planning, teaching of foreign languages and other subjects, and many other mechanics for machinery repairs.

[Question] 4. What is your opinion about assigning students to study abroad and those who finished their study to enter the work of their field of study?

[Answer] The problems in assigning students and cadres to study abroad in the past have been as follows.

--The start of the academic year for higher education secondary schools in different provinces is different. Some start late, and some start early. Mostly they start later than September each year. Thus, final examinations are late, and this leads to a delay in selecting and sending students to the Ministry of Education.

--Students are sent from different provinces mainly by plane. However, there are few airlines in some provinces. This means the provinces cannot send their students to the center [Vientiane] in time, such as Houa Phan, Oudomsai, Louang Namtha, Phong Saly, Saravane, and Attopeu.

--There are few high-level vocational schools in our country. However, each year the number of upper secondary level students is increasing. This leads them to compete with each other to study abroad. However, scholarships from fraternal socialist countries given to our students are limited, and there are many who want to go, so this results in complaint and argument. When they couldn't go as they intended to, they propagandized many bad things and created a lot of trouble.

--For those who graduated from abroad we used to have some problems in assigning work for them. For example, they dod not want to be away from the city, but instead in the city. They objected to being sent to localities. A few of them chose places to work for which they had one field of study, but then wanted to work in another field that did not utilize the specialized task they had studied.

VACCINE FACTORY, CADRE LIVING STANDARDS DESCRIBED

Vientiane HENG NGAN in Lao 16-30 Jun 82 p 8

[Article by Philavong: "Vaccine Factory"]

[Text] Over about 10 km northwest of Vientiane Capital, on a beautiful high high, a vaccine factory was built in the midst of the brilliant Lao revolution. This has made the scenery of that area especially impressive, with the sight of many buildings and houses springing up from land that already stands up high to the sky.

On that morning all workers in all the units in the vaccine factory poured out their sweat to enthusiastically do their own work as on each day before. The weather was so beautiful, and my heart was filled with joy. I wanted to meet all the workers in order to learn the excellent lesson of their socialist competition. Comrade Hom Bouthong of the board of directors of the factory reported that "from the time the factory was set up till now it has been primarily responsible for producing medicines for treatment of all kinds of animal diseases. For example, we produce vaccines for anthrax, microorganisms, and also distilled water to steadily support and improve animal husbandry and the taking care of animals that are used in our country for labor and for meat.

In order to expand the work of the sections in the factory our cadres and workers decided to struggle through all difficulties, and are ready to sacrifice their blood and sweat for this factory. It is no exaggeration to say that our cadres and workers are as brilliant and strong as a cut diamond. After the discussion he invited me to look at the place itself. There are many different rooms with different responsibilities. Each room has its own cadres and workers of specialized tasks who are attentively and busily working. Such as rooms for growing vaccines, filling glass tubes, examining, and labeling. As he was walking he said, "actually our factory has been newly set up, and the cadres and workers still have little experience; however, because of their absolute determination and perseverance the more they work the more they learn; the more they produce the better the quality they ensure, and the amount is always expanding, and finally we are able to produce vaccines to serve the public whose quality is no different from those that are imported. In order to prepare to greet the Third Congress of the party we competed with others to score a short-term

"achievement. In 36 days we were able to achieve 100 percent of the emulation point, and produced 308,600 doses of plague vaccine and 700,000 doses of antibiotics. We sterilized 20,000 glass tubes for vaccines, built one shed for chickens and rabbits, and finished 50 percent of the pig shed. The results of the work all came from the brains and strong hands of our cadres and workers."

"To raise the standard of living and the health of our cadres and workers we set up a collective kitchen to serve the cadres and workers with inexpensive prices, quality, and delicious food." That issue increased my interest. I asked him one more question: "What are your policies towards cadres and workers in this factory?"

He answered, "To decrease the food expense for each meal, instead of a cadre spending 20-30 kip per day in the market we asked them to pay only 5 kip and guaranteed enough food to eat and three meals. Meat and vegetables, in particular, are from the factory. We have a collective vegetable garden that provides vegetables for all seasons. We get meat from chickens and pigs that were successfully tested but which have no germs or harmful effects on health. The money paid by the cadres and workers was used to buy other ingredients such as fermented fish, fish sauce, monosodium glutamate, etc.

Because our policy is to take care of all our cadres and workers we all have confidence in the leadership, we know our responsibilities, we are awakening and active for all kinds of work, and together we march forward to build up our nation.

NAM NGUM GENERATORS BREAK DOWN, DOMESTIC REPAIRS SAVE MILLIONS

Vientiane HENG NGAN in Lao 16-30 Jun 82 p 14

/"Brave Thought and Action" Column: "Three Million Five Hundred Thousand Dollars Saved for Our Government"/

/Text/ What interested me most was the statement that "we saved 3.5 million dollars."

What is the story behind this?

Comrade Viraphon Viravong is on the committee responsible for electricity production at the Nam Ngum hydroelectric dam. He told me that since the day this dam was finished there were two generators, 15,000 kW each, which produced electricity for use within the country, and some electricity was also sent across the river to Thailand. In 1982 these two generators were out of order and could not be used. If we were to buy replacements from Japan we would have needed as much as six million dollars in foreign exchange, and it would have taken a long time for the generators to arrive.

Therefore, the committee responsible for the Lao State Electrification Enterprise unanimously decided to repair them and assigned the heavy and important responsibility to Comrade Viraphon Viravong, the committee, and a number of cadres to be directly responsible for repairing the generators.

This was a brand new development for us. People became resentful, worried, and afraid that we could not achieve what the higher echelons had assigned to us. Another problem was that we did not have a lot of experience for this work. However, this did not lessen our strong determination and ideology that we were ready to make sacrifices in everything and to put all our knowledge into this difficult work. We kept in our minds what Lenin said, "There is no secret in anything, but the secret is what we have not yet discovered," as a morale booster in order to conquer all the difficulties in this work.

We had to order a number of spare parts from abroad, and we also had to repair some ourselves. We actually did our work by recently coordinating with Japanese experts to complete the project which began on 24 September 1981 to 15 March 1982. However, because of the determination of our cadres and workers we were able to carry out the work and complete it on 8 March 1982 before the expected date. The total expenses were calculated to be only 2.5 million dollars. This means we saved 3.5 million dollars for the government, and we have generators that are as good as before. They were able to produce 12,240,000 kWh in 17 days and have added as much as $379,000 to our country.

OUDOMSAI RECRUITMENT--K.P.L.--In the first 6 months of this year over 400 youth of all nationalities in Oudomsai Province have voluntarily and actively served the work of the nation. These included 150 persons from Na Mo District, 100 from Pak Tha District, and over 50 from Beng District. A majority of these youth volunteered to serve in the ranks of national defense and public security forces, and as workers in various factories in which they are now seriously and continuously carrying out their duties in order to take part in building the country to be steadily and endlessly strong and prosperous for the wealth and happiness of the people of all races. LOUANG NAM THA YAO RECRUITMENT--K.P.L.--At the end of last July, 9 Yao youth in Meuang Mom Canton, subordinate to Ton Pheung District, Louang Namtha Province, were awakening voluntarily and boldly to serve the country by taking part in the ranks of the LPLA and other words in order to strongly protect their land to let the people feel free to develop the country. From June till now there has been a total of almost 40 young Yao men in the area mentioned who are serving the nation. [Text] [Vientiane KHAOSAN PATHET LAO in Lao 17 Aug 82 p A4] 9884

CHAMPASSAK ELECTRICITY PRODUCTION--In the first six months of 1982 the Electrification Service and the base unit labor union of Champassak Province have determinedly mobilized to encourage labor union members and workers to actively carry out their duty assigned by the Service. This resulted in completing the first six months of the plan as expected. The actual achievements were the completion of 10 km of cutting brushwood from high-voltage power lines from the Se Labam hydroelectric dam to Pakse District, the production of 2,122,760 kWh, installation of electricity in 55 people's homes, putting in 45 power line poles, checking transformers, repairing broken-down machinery, and the successful carrying out of other work. FACTORIES REVIVE PRODUCTION--K.P.L.--The mosquito repellant section including the zinc, mosquito repellant, and sponge factories under the Ministry of Industry and Trade that stopped its operations for 3 full years was revived. As of 23 July 1982 the workers in that factory were able to operate normally and effectively. At the beginning they were able to produce 720 boxes of mosquito repellant to serve the public. Its quality is as good as that of the imported ones. According to Comrade Khampheng Thebsimeung, director of the zinc, mosquito repellant, and sponge factory, in order to steadily increase production efficiency and carry out the 1982 plan set by the ministry figure of 120,000 boxes in the second 6 months of the year, the factory will struggle to increase its working hours to two shifts, particularly when there are enough raw materials to meet production needs. Comrade Khampheng Thebsimeung added that in order to expand mosquito repellant production the factory has also begun to install an additional grinding machine to mix the mosquita repellant, which will be able to grind 400 kg of bark per day. It is expected to be completed in mid-August 1982. At the present time workers in the entire factory are cheerfully and actively struggling to do their work. LOUANG NAMTHA CULTIVATION--K.P.L.--Up to the beginning of August farmers in Louang Namtha, Sing, Long, Meung Ton Pheung, Houei Sai, Viang Phou Kha, and Na Le Districts, Louang Namtha Province, are putting all their efforts into finishing the wet rice paddy planting. Up to now about (95) percent of the total of 5,945 hectares of ricefields has been completed. This early achievement came from the solid force of solidarity among the people of all nationalities who put all their minds to work in spite of the weather and used a system of dams for production. At present they are continuing their solidarity in planting to complete the rest of the ricefields. [Excerpt] [Vientiane KHAOSAN PATHET LAO in Lao 13 Aug 82 p 3] 9884

TENDERS SOUGHT FOR AID PROJECT--The Lao Import-Export Company of the Ministry of Industry and Trade in Vientiane in the Lao People's Democratic Republic has the honor of announcing that bids are being requested for the provision of animal feed as part of the assistance from the organization SIDA/FUND. For complete details, interested bidders are requested to obtain the necessary documents, No 04-82/SLIE, from the Lao Import-Export Company, 43-47, AV. Lane Xang, in Vientiane, or from the Embassy of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, 193, Sathorn Tai Road, 193, in Bangkok, during office hours from 23 July 1982 to 10 August 1982 for a non-refundable fee of $50 or 1.150 Thai bahts. FAO-AIDED FACTORY--Construction of a pipeline plant and a shop for repairing motor-driven pumps, projects under the direction of the Irrigation Department in the Ministry of Agriculture, Foresty and Irrigation, located at kilometer 14 of National Highway 13, and begun toward the end of 1979, is already basically completed at present. According to the head of the Irrigation Department, Mr Thongvan, these projects are being handled by Irrigation Construction Enterprise No 1, are financed under material and technical assistance granted to Laos by the UNDP and the FAO, and will be finished shortly. Following their first test, the plant and the shop demonstrated a high capacity. The plant will manufacture pipelines 30 cm in diameter and over, and the shop is equipped to repair all types of motor-driven pumps, he noted. SOUVANNA PHOUMA IN FRANCE--Prince Souvanna Phouma, former prime minister of Laos and currently an adviser to the Vientiane government, will arrive in France within the next few days for a private visit of several weeks. His last trip to our country dates back to 1977. Mr Claude Cheysson, minister of external relations, has expressed a desire to receive Prince Souvanna during his stay in Paris. (Paris and Ventiane reestablished diplomatic relations on 8 December 1981 which were broken in 1978 after two French diplomats were expelled from Laos. The new French ambassador to Vientiane, Mr J.N. de Bouillane de Lacoste, presented his credentials on 13 July.) [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Aug 82 p 8] 9693

GENERAL CHISHTI INTERVIEWED ON MARTIAL LAW

Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 23 Jul 82 pp 21-23

[Interview with Lt Gen Faiz Ali Chishti (Ret) by Javed Sadiq; date and place not specified]

[Text] Maulana Kausar Niyazi, federal minister in the previous government and secretary of information for the defunct People's Party, discussed several aspects of the proceedings of the night of 4-5 July 1977 in his column "Observations and Impressions" in the daily newspaper JANG of 4 July. There are conflicting versions of several of the events during Operation Fair Play about which Kausar Niyazi, on the basis of his recollections, wrote in his column. For the sake of accuracy of the record of this event, so important in our national history, HURMAT had a lengthy discussion with retired Lt Gen Faiz Ali Chishti, who was in charge of Operation Fair Play. Although the General wanted portions of the talk to be off the record, some relevant quotes are provided to the reader in the form of an interview. This interview was conducted by Javed Sadiq, editor of the weekly magazine and senior member of the editorial board.

HURMAT: General, you will have seen Maulana Kausar Niyazi's column in JANG in which he discusses several aspects of the operation that took place during the night of 4-5 July.

General Chishti: Ye, I saw this column by Mr Niyazi.

HURMAT: Since you were in charge of Operation Fair Play, would you like to say something in this regard?

Chishti: I won't say anything about those matters that come under the heading of state secrets, but I will answer questions about those things that are in the public interest.

HURMAT: Do you feel that it was inevitable that martial law would be imposed in the country, and were you really convinced that the discussions between the defunct People's Party and the National Alliance had been unsuccessful and that there was no recourse but to have martial law?

Chishti: Sir, elections were held on 7 March. Conditions in the country steadily worsened between 7 March and 4 July. Lawlessness, violence and hooliganism had reached an extreme. We had repeatedly told the former prime minister that conditions in the country were getting bad and that it was necessary to take appropriate steps to correct this state of affairs. We had spoken openly in cabinet meetings and had several times told Bhutto that he should take steps to correct the worsening situation. We were very patient. You remember what happened on 9 April. In a cabinet meeting, I had plainly told the former prime minister that, "The sole solution for the present disorder is that you hold elections again. You can win the elections and again take power." But I was not listened to. Another general also told Bhutto repeatedly that he should hold elections again.

HURMAT: Why did Mr Bhutto ignore this?

Chishti: I think he had some sycophantic ministers who would not let him hold elections again because those ministers knew they could not be successful in the elections. So his ministers and advisors led him astray. Whenever any ruler surrounds himself with sycophants and flattering advisors and ministers, the result is not good. So I think that when a leader chooses his advisors and ministers he should think twice.

HURMAT: Was the entire army high command in agreement on imposing martial law?

Chishti: Look, when there is a coup, the army takes control as an institution. It never happens because of the wish or intention of one individual. When the army takes power as an institution, the orders of the chief of staff or the commander-in-chief are obeyed, and the chief of staff is the leader of the coup. But if some officer or lesser rank than the chief of staff takes such action, then it can be called a rebellion or mutiny because the leader of the army as well as the leader of the government is removed as the result of such an act by a junior officer. But by God's grace, there is no such situation here. Our army, fortunately, is extremely well-ordered and united. The army, as an institution, decided to take over the government on 4 July 1977. The army high command decided that when the situation worsened the army would be forced to take over for the sake of the security of the country, and we had told this to the prime minister and his cabinet. We had made it clear to him that if he could not correct the situation in the country, the army would have to take over the administration, and this would happen whenever the chief of staff considered it appropriate.

This was no surprise to the former prime minister.

HURMAT: So the former prime minister knew that the army would depose him.

Chishti: He knew it. He was an extremely shrewd person. He did not want to give the power to the army himself. Rather, he was waiting for the moment when the army would come and take power from him. He did not want to be accused of giving power to the army.

HURMAT: What do you think the collective attitude of the army was in this regard? That is, were the junior officers also in favor of promulgating martial law?

Chishti: Look, the elected government is the legal government. Law and order is the responsibility of the civilian government and administration. When the civil administration is unsuccessful in maintaining law and order, the army is called in. When the army helps the civilian administration, it has some rules. The first rule is that as little force as possible should be used, but when there is shooting then it should be effective. When someone shoots he does not shoot in the air. Rather, to make it effective, he fires at the leaders so that the use of force will be effective. But you saw that in the 1977 movement our army was not prepared to fire on our people. There were 50 or 60 shots fired in Anarkali, Lahore, but only 4 or 5 people died. Similarly, in Multan, too, there was shooting, in fact more shooting, but few individuals died. This means that they were shooting in the air, which was against the law. Military officers also handed in their resignations.

The question is, why did all this happen? What it meant was that the entire army was not ready to cooperate with this government. In addition, the justification for the promulgation of martial law is proved by the fact that as soon as the army took over and promulgated martial law the entire nation rejoiced and welcomed it. The entire nation wanted a change. This was the necessity of the time. Therefore, the army's action was justified.

HURMAT: Maulana Kausar Niyazi wrote in his column that the army chief of staff, Gen Zia-ul-Haq, took part in the cabinet meeting on 4 July, whereas according to some accounts he was not present at this meeting. Can you offer any clarification in this regard?

Chishti: When I was called to put Operation Fair Play into action on the night of 4 July, Gen Zia-ul-Haq was at home. I don't know whether or not he took part in the cabinet meeting. I was told to launch Operation Fair Play about 10 or 10:30. When I went to the home of General Zia he was there at that time. At any rate, Maulana Kausar Niyazi's information must be correct.

HURMAT: Were you in danger of being opposed in any way in your capacity as head of Operation Fair Play?

Chishti: We expected opposition. The people we had to arrest in this operation included some government officials as well as the leaders of the defunct People's Party and the National Alliance. There was danger of opposition from the FSF [Federal Security Force]. There was also danger of opposition from the prime minister's house because the army high command had warned the prime minister that conditions in the country were so bad that the army could take over at any time. So I thought he might have made some plan in view of the danger of a takeover. But at the time of the operation, there was no opposition at all.

HURMAT: If there had been opposition, what instructions did you have to overcome it?

Chishti: The thing is that anyone can fire in self-defense. At such a time it is impossible to prove whether the firing was in self-defense or not.

when there is a coup, the army has complete freedom to kill anyone they want. This means that the person in charge of Operation Fair Play on 4 July had the authority to shoot anyone he wanted. It is easy to have a coup by shooting people, but the results would be ruinous for the country and people. We have before us the examples of several such countries. I was in charge of the operation. I did not want to spill blood illegitimately because we must also answer to God. So my order was that this operation should be completed without bloodshed. If the planning is good then there is no need for shooting. I told my officers that even if they had to fire in self-defense they were not to fire without my orders. By the grace of God, no one received even a scratch. People say all sorts of things. If we could have shot anyone we wished on 4 July, why would we kill anyone later? In addition to this order, I also gave the order that if anyone disobeyed the orders of the person in charge of the operation, he too would be shot. I am proud that the Pakistani Army carried out this operation with complete discipline, and there was no unfavorable incident.

HURMAT: Do you feel that the planning for Operation Fair Play was easy or difficult?

Chishti: Sir, this is very difficult work, extremely difficult. The army operates on orders. There are two kinds of orders, written and spoken. When one receives the order for a coup and it succeeds, then no one thinks what a difficult job it was. But if it is unsuccessful, the whole world knows who loses his neck. If the person giving the order denies that he gave it, the person who obeyed the order has no proof that he was really given an order. Similarly if the person given the order should meet with the government leader who is to be deprived of power there may be treachery. This is a job for a person of great character. In such a delicate matter, the planning should be 100 percent successful. It can be so only when as few people as possible know about it. Our greatest problem was how to arrest the prime minister. Bhutto was an extremely clever individual. He could have disguised himself and fled from the prime minister's house, and if those who had gone to arrest him had not recognized him, the entire operation would have failed. In addition, he had forcibly purchased the loyalty of the guards who were at the prime minister's house at that time. They had been given land and other rewards. In addition, there was a combined guard of police and army there. Under these conditions, it is proof of the best planning that we were able to enter the prime minister's house, reach the prime minister and arrest him without firing a shot.

HURMAT: When did this planning take place?

Chishti: I think I cannot say this at this time. Perhaps some time later I can tell you.

HURMAT: When did the operation begin?

Chishti: A coup usually begins when the means by which the government can reach the people collapse, so that they cannot give an order that would reach the people. Since the radio and television are means by which links with the people are established, the operation is done after the radio and TV programs end. Our operation began after the radio and TV closed down and was completed before 6:00 am.

HURMAT: Some people think the conditions in the country did not warrant the promulgation of martial law. What do you think?

Chishti: Yes, some people say conditions were not favorable for martial law. This was just General Chishti's plan. First of all, since you have mentioned Maulana Kausar Niyazi, who was an important minister in the previous government, you know that he himself says that conditions were ruinous and it seemed as though we were warring with nature. Since the previous government was not prepared to correct the situation, the army had to correct it. I have already said that when martial law was promulgated there was rejoicing in the country and people distributed sweets. This shows that conditions were completely favorable. Second, I carried out this operation under the orders of the chief of staff. He can better clarify what conditions forced him to give the order in this regard.

HURMAT: Did you meet with the leaders after the operation was complete?

Chishti: I did not meet with any leader. After arresting the leaders of the defunct People's Party and the National Alliance, we put them in the Chaklala Officers Mess. Here I want to correct Maulana Niyazi. He has written that they were taken to General Chishti's corps headquarters. It was not the corps headquarters but the mess. My order was that both parties should be treated with great respect and honor. If there was any complaint that any leader had been treated badly, the officer concerned was to be court-martialed. I feel that national leaders are worthy of respect. I respected them then and do so now. It was my plan that all the leaders should be taken to Murree on the night of 4 July, but Mr Bhutto expressed a wish to spend that night in Rawalpindi, so according to the wish of Mr Bhutto, he was put in the prime minister's house; similarly, the other leaders were also in Pindi that night and taken to Murree the next day.

HURMAT: There is a great deal of discussion these days about the role of the army in the future affairs of the country. Would you care to express your thoughts in this regard?

Chishti: I would like to answer this question in detail. It cannot be done today. Sometime later I will discuss this subject in detail with you.

HURMAT: Thank you, General.

Chishti: Thank you.

ELECTORAL ROLLS UPGRADING BEGINS

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] Islamabad, Sep 9--The Election Commission of Pakistan today launched a comprehensive programme for updating the existing electoral rolls in the country.

The operation will be completed by the middle of December. The existing electoral rolls were put on display at more than 40,000 centres throughout the country. The rolls would remain on display for a month and a half for inspection by people to enable them to apply for the inclusion of their names or deletion or correction of wrong entries therein.

Special teams have been formed to visit these display centres to check that the rolls have actually been displayed at these places.

All the Registration Officers and the Assistant Registration Officers have been given copies of the manual of instructions for updating the electoral rolls.

The process of updating the electoral rolls is being carried out by three devices: by including the fresh names of those who are eligible to become voters, by deleting the names of those who have expired or are held ineligible when objected to and making corrections of particulars relating to a certain name, error about which is pointed out and accepted by the Registration Officer.

For every device, there is a separate application form, separate for the Muslims as well as for the non-Muslims. Through these three methods, the Election Commission aims at increasing the accuracy of the rolls and making them as authentic as possible.

Today Mr Justice S.A. Nusrat, Chief Election Commissioner, visited the display centre set up in the office of Registration and Assistant Registration Officer at Thatta.

Mr Justice Nusrat asked the official concerned to extend full help to the general public.

He expressed full satisfaction on the work of display centre at Thatta.

CONCERN OVER BANK ROBBERIES EXPRESSED

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Sep 82 p 9

[Text] The spate of robberies and crimes of various kinds which have in recent times shaken this city--although the rest of the country has not been spared either--might well force people to change habits. Some deviations from the usual carefree patterns of the city are already visible, as people have begun to avoid the more deserted areas at nights and generally become more security conscious. However, one change which has been advocated so many times before as being essential has been sadly ignored, and we have had to pay a heavy toll for this neglect. It has been suggested on many occasions that banks for one should adopt modern security measures to guard against hold-ups, which were infrequent some years ago but have become increasingly common in recent times--so much so that they do not cause any particular excitement these days. To banks must be added those organisations which deal regularly in large amounts of cash. In fact, it can even be said of the lax security at financial institutions that it might actually have encouraged the rash of crime with which the country is now faced. If criminals had not found how easy it was to stage holdups, and how easy it also was to avoid subsequent apprehension by the police, boys in their teens or slightly older may not have taken to robberies on a grand scale.

The police certainly deserve to be questioned for its ineffectual performance, but, at the same time, banks and other financial organisations holding or dealing in substantial amounts of cash should also be asked to firm up their security arrangements. There is, of course, no assurance that only large amounts will attract criminals, but they are more likely to, and also more likely to be the cause of violence. Banks at present are 'protected' by an antiquated guard equipped with an even more antiquated weapon, which is usually unfit for use. Organisations in most cases transport very large amounts of money in a very careless manner, on unguarded vehicles which include motorcycles. When this happens on a regular basis, they become obvious targets of robbers.

How exactly a sophisticated security system should operate is a matter for experts to sort out, but a couple of glaring points must be mentioned here. The first of these relates to an efficient alarm system, with the proviso, of course, that there will be an equally efficient response to

it. There must be hidden alarms in financial institutions and other vulnerable organisations, linked to police stations, which in turn should be equipped to respond quickly when an alarm is triggered. This may seem a cumbersome arrangement, but it is followed all over the world and a start must be made here also, and soon. Another obviously vulnerable point is the transport of large amounts of cash. As mentioned earlier, this is highly unsatisfactory and there have been a number of robberies, accompanied by violence, in the last week alone at some stage when money was being transported. Most vulnerable are those organisations whose incoming or outgoing cash forms a regular and easily discernible pattern. It is patently unfair to employees to expose them to the dangers which have now become attendant to such transport of cash. The only solution seems to be the introduction of armoured, or at least heavily guarded, vehicles which, for a fee, will convey cash. There are no private organisations of this kind in the country, which means that financial institutions and other interested parties like insurance companies will have to make a beginning in this area.

MANPOWER EXPORT MONOPOLY SEEN WEAKENING

Karachi DAWN in English 10 Sep 82 p 16

[Text] Pakistan's monopoly in manpower export to the Middle East is weakening as India, Bangladesh, Thailand and South Korea are competing with it at cheaper labour rates.

This was stated last night by Brig. (retd) M.M.A. (Hesky) Baig, Chairman of the Pakistan Overseas Employment Promoters Association, at a Press conference at Taj Mahal Hotel.

Through official agencies, over 1.5 million Pakistanis have gone out for jobs in the Middle East and they are contributing approximately 3.2 billion dollars annually, he said.

"Unless our Government gives top priority to the problems facing the private sector and the Overseas Employment Promoters Association, this lucrative source of foreign exchange could be eroded substantially", Brig. Hesky Baig said.

Some of the incentive and concessions he asked on behalf of 350 licenced recruiting agencies are:

—The cash security deposit fee of Rs 100,000 be reduced and in the form of savings certificates and other government bonds. At the present rate, the Government is earning from the deposits Rs 35 million, besides adding Rs 1.75 million annually to the deposits in the form of annual licence renewal charges per year;

—The service charges be raised from Rs 1450 to Rs 3000 or equal to one month's salary of the immigrant and tax rebates on the charges;

—The intending immigrants be asked to pay one way ticket instead of asking the employer to pay for it, because in other countries, it is the other way round;

—The Overseas Employees Promoters be allowed to retain the lists of tested and approved workers to avoid wastage of time in case the same categories of workers are wanted by the employers;

—The licences should be renewed automatically or issued for five years;

—No suspension or cancellation of licences be made without a full legal enquiry; and —Fake "recruiting agencies" should be eliminated by harsh punishments.

EDITORIAL URGES FRIENDLY PERSUASION

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 5 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] The story said the raid on the Social Action Center in Catbalogan was conducted, resulting in the arrest of a nun and two other persons, after several months of surveillance by military intelligence.

That part of the story shows how government policy can widen rather than close the gulf between the government and certain people who are admittedly anti-government.

What should have been done was as government operatives started noting anti-government activities at the center they or higher authorities should have talked to the people at the center and engaged them in a dialogue.

What the government men did was to note the activities for several months and then without warning raided th place, telling the people therein in effect, "Huli kayo!"

The military cannot be blamed. They were complying with standard operating procedure. But the policy under which they operated suffered from the serious flaw of tolerating strict absence of dialogue that could reconcile Filipinos of conflicting political persuasions.

The policy seems to place more stock in physical and legal powers and less in winning hearts and minds. It seems to have given up hope on the reconcilability of Filipinos with Filipinos.

Such policy is risky if consistently applied in the provinces, because it is possible that arrested people, including members of the clergy, have a sizeable following. Their followers can be alienated from the government.

For a long time, we have been talking about human rights. But even assuming there are no rights violations, scrupulous conduct alone does not solve the problem of dissidence.

Arrests and prosecutions can be minimized by friendly persuasion and open discussion between government representatives and those who have complaints against the government.

GUARANTEE FOR FOREIGN LOANS EXTENDED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Sep 82 p 12

[Article by Loreto Cabanes]

[Text] The borrowing capacity of the National Development Company (NDC), the government investment firm, from foreign sources has been considerably bolstered by a new decree which expressly extended the guarantee of the national government to secure the obligations of NDC.

Sources said the new decree cleared once and for all the uncertainty raised by foreign bankers about how secure their lendings were to the government firm.

They said it also answered possible doubts by foreign lenders on the issue of whether their loans could be taken up by the government if and when NDC is unable to pay them.

Earlier this year, NDC attempted to raise some $250 million in the Eurodollar markets to finance the requirements for the various big projects that NDC is now undertaking.

The government firm was unsuccessful in getting the credit because foreign bankers were offering it terms which were much stiffer than those being given to other government corporations.

Bankers also expressed reservations about the full backing and credit of the national government to secure the obligations incurred by NDC which, so far, has no tract record yet in the international banking community as a borrower.

This prompted the NDC to secure an opinion from the Minister of Justice which ruled that foreign loans incurred by NDC carry the full backing and credit of the national government, it being a firm owned and controlled by the government.

As the one in charge with the implementation of the 11 major industrial projects and the rehabilitation of a number of private companies, NDC needs substantial foreign loans in the next couple of years to be able to carry out those undertakings.

Under P.D. No. 1846 which was signed June 26, 1982, it was expressly provided that the payment of all loans, credits and other indebtedness contracted by NDC "shall be and are hereby fully and unconditionally guaranteed by the Republic of the Philippines."

It further provided that the "obligations f the Republic of the Philippines as guarantor...shall be absolute and unconditional, and shall not be contingent or conditioned upon the pursuit of any right or remedy against the company or its assets or against any other person or against any collateral security for or other guarantee of the obligations of the company."

COLUMNIST CONSIDERS COST OF POLITICAL VIOLENCE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Sep 82 p 6

[Article by Apolonio Batalla]

[Text] From the military point of view violent dissidence here cannot be considered significant. It has often been stated that it is under control. Indeed, not one barangay in the country is under rebel control.

But the seriousness of the problem lies partly in the continuing loss of lives and partly in the effects of the killings on the social fabric.

Hardly a day passes that no soldiers, rebels, civilian home defense personnel, suspected informers and innocent civilians are not reported killed in this grim political struggle.

If the deaths are by themselves deplorable, their psychological effects on the population are cause for worry. Somehow, people pray that the conflict does not worsen. The trouble is there has been no development to nurture the hope.

People who have had the opportunity to ponder the problem are tempted to ask why it could have happened in a country that is otherwise blessed with many good things in life.

Filipinos are proud of their high literacy rate, their system of universal education, individual freedoms, religions, cultural heritage, and so on. All those things argue strongly in favor of political integrity.

But in this part of the world, with the notable exception of Kampuchea, this is the only country where people die almost every day as the forces of government and the dissidents fight each other without letup.

We are reminded of the rebel-infested regions of Thailand, Burma, and Malaysia. But the death rates in those remote places do not match the mortality rate in Philippine provinces.

Here it seems the death rate is taken for granted, as if the grim statistics hold no implication for the families of soldiers and rebels slain in combat, as if there is no chance that the hurt will be engraved in memory and that memory cannot give momentum to a conflict that can destroy the social fabric.

In its capacity as pater familias, the government can formulate any kind of solution to stop the bloodshed.

About the middle of the last decade, the Argentine government decided on a hard line against the dissidents, matching terror for terror. In the years following the advent of military rule, the government of Chile decided on mass liquidation.

A lot of unfavorable things have been said about the Polish government during martial law, but reading the news accounts one cannot help but conclude that while the government has been severe it has opted for mass arrests, rather than for mass liquidation.

That is a totally different policy from Iran's under the present regime, which summarily tries suspected enemies of the state and executes them.

Philippine conditions and the overall policy with regard to armed dissidence are another story. Here the soldiers search for the rebels. Rebels are either arrested or killed in combat. If arrested, they are tried. There are people who have been sentenced to death, but the sentences are not carried out for one reason or another. Death does not occur in the course of the adjudication of the criminal cases, but in ambuscades and combat in the field.

Soldiers get killed just by riding on buses, which shows the seriousness with which the dissidents pursue their mission.

Some men of the cloth have joined the rebel ranks, and this shows the seriousness of the political struggle.

Under the law, those priests are wrong. But from their philosophy of life, they think they are right. In those cases, must death necessarily be the arbiter?

Is there no mode of settlement that transcends the essentially short-sighted logic of political violence?

Since the government is the pater familias, it is up to it to think of a way of eliminating the sources of instability while saving human lives.

And it is not enough to confine our thoughts to the present, which is exacting a heavy toll. Let us also think of future possibilities. If, for example, this killing business drags on for many more years, it is not logical to assume that it will have no adverse effect on the political situation.

GAS RESERVOIRS FOUND OFF PALAWAN

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 2 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by Ray Enano]

[Text] Phillips Petroleum and Pilipinas Shell Petroleum, Inc. struck a relatively "huge" gas reservoir after completing four drill stem tests at the San Martin A-IX well off northwest Palawan island.

A drilling bulletin from the bureau of energy development (BED) stated that the first DST, which was an open hole test recorded the flow of gas at a rate of 20 million cubic feet while the fourth test revealed a rate of nine million cubic feet of gas per day.

The second and third tests, meanwhile, were conducted at the water zone of the well and recovered nothing but formation water.

With the completion of the tests, the Phillips joint venture started plugging the well temporarily for possible re-entry in the future.

The results of the tests are still being evaluated by Phillips in connection with the overall study on the economic feasibility of exploiting the San Martin gas discovery.

Sources in the industry said that the San Martin gas rate is by far the largest recorded in the country.

The same sources explained that if it were oil instead of gas, the well could have been easily commercially exploited. The gas discovery has an equivalent of over 20,000 barrels per day.

Phillips is still studying the possibility of developing the well on a commercial scale since San Martin A-IX was drilled to a depth of 1,100 feet of water before reaching a total depth of 4,282 feet.

According to sources, initial findings show that the discovery is not big enough to commercially develop the well considering the present low price of gas.

Moreover, the sources said developing the well in the deep water area is capital-intensive since it needs an equipment to "refrigerate" the stored gas.

San Martin A-IX is the 16th well drilled by Phillips and Shell and the first discovery to be considered significant. Drilling the San Martin well on a deep water has cost the two parties some $12 million.

NPA'S SLAIN IN BICOL, QUEZON ENCOUNTERS

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 1 Sep 82 p 36

[Text] Camp Nakar, Lucena City, Aug 31--Six New People's Army men were killed and several high powered weapons, including one M-16 armalite rifle, were taken by government troops in an encounter in Quezon province and in Camarines Norte.

Lt Col Recaredo A. Sarmiento II, Quezon PC commander in his report to Brig Gen Andres B. Ramos, PC/INP Recom 4 chief here, said that a group of "Samahang Yunit Pang-propaganda" of the NPA under one "Ka Santiago" reportedly operating in Calauag and Tagkawayan towns were surprised by elements of the 232nd PC company under Major George Alino.

Major Alino informed Col Sarmiento that two of his junior officers, Lts Romeo P. Sebastian and Ed Samuco engaged the group of Ka Santiago in a gunbattle along the national highway in barangay Bantulinao, Calauag, Quezon, killing one NPA identified only as "Ka Minong."

Taken from the dead NPA were one M-16 armalite rifle several magazines and 66 rounds of ammunition of M-16 rifle, binocular and several empty shells of various caliber.

MAGAT DAM INAUGURATION IN OCTOBER

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Sep 82 p 12

[Text] Ramon, Isabela, Sep 2--The National Irrigation Administration (NIA) will be taking giant steps towards the realization of its goals of an envisioned "irrigation age" when it formally inaugurates next month the ₱3.5-billion Magat high dam here.

With the completion of the Magat high dam, resettlement, and reservoir, the multi-purpose project will stand out as the largest water resource development project in Southeast Asia.

Benjamin V. Viola, project manager, said the project of the NIA in Northern Luzon was officially launched on May 7, 1975, when President Marcos signed Presidential Decree No 693.

Engineer Viola said implementation of the Magat river multi-purpose project (MRMP) was based on a preliminary study conducted in 1973 by the National Irrigation Administration (NIA) with the assistance of the United States Bureau of Reclamation (USBR) and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID).

The project was jointly financed by the Philippine government and the World Bank which extended a $150-million loan to meet its foreign exchange requirement.

Engineer Ramon S. Palomares, senior assistant project manager, said technical assistance was provided by a group of engineering consultants known as ESED as required in the loan agreement.

In addition, a specialist international board consultants assisted in the review of project implementation.

Engineer Palomares said the principal features of the MRMP is the construction of the Magat high dam and reservoir of Planas, Ramon, Isabela, six kilometers upstream of the present Maris dam.

It will also have the following features: a main dam standing 114 meters above the Magat stream bed with a crest length of 4,160 meters, a spillway 500 meters long and 164 meters wide with a discharge capacity of 30,600 cubic meters of water per second, making it seven times greater than the Pantabangan flood spillway capacity; and a 45-square-kilometer reservoir capable of storing 1.25 billion cubic meters of water a full supply level.

Engineer Melecio M. Canapi, chief, dam division, said the project is designed to provide a dependable water supply for year-round irrigation to 102,000 hectares of agriclutural lands in Isabela, Quirino and Ifugao provinces; 540 mega-watts of hydroelectric power; domestic and industrial water supply; fish conservation and recreational facilities.

NPA, MNLF MEN YIELD IN MINDANAO

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Sep 82 p 12

[Text] Zamboanga City, Sep 2--More members of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) and the New People's Army (NPA) in Southern Philippines have surrendered to the government as a result of the military's continued campaign to win back to the fold of the government misguided elements in remote areas in the region.

The biggest rebel group surrendered last Friday, Aug. 27, to Brig Gen Cirilo Bueno, Jr., 9th PC-INP regional commander in a ceremony at the PC provincial command headquarters in Dipolog city.

The 1,045 NPAs were presented to General Bueno by Lt Col Ricardo Soguilon, Zamboanga del Norte, PC provincial commander.

Soguilon said the rebels had operated in the hinterlands of the municipalities of Roxas, Katipunan, Manukan, Bunot Siayan and Sitagan, all in Zamboanga del Norte.

They yielded 40 firearms and hundreds of rounds of ammunition.

The Zamboanga del Norte PC provincial command in coordination with municipal and barangay officials negotiated the surrender of the NPAs and their supporters.

Present during the ceremony were Governor Alberto Ubay, Batasang Pambansa Assemblyman Guardson Lood, Regional Assemblyman Mariano Macias, Dipolog City Mayor Roseller Barinaga, and other mayors.

Also present were military officers headed by Col Madrino Munoz, commanding officer of the Army's 4th Infantry (Diamond) Division; and Colonel Augusto Narag, commanding officer of the 1/4 Brigade of the Philippine Army.

FUNDS FOR MINANAO INFRASTRUCTURE DEVELOPMENT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Sep 82 pp 1, 14

[Text] Marawi City, Sep 2--Minister Jesus H. Hipolito of the Ministry of Public Works and Highways (MPWH) announced yesterday that the government has set aside ₱13.01 billion in the next five years for the development of Mindanao.

Starting next year, the ministry will intensify the infrastructure development of Mindanao with ₱5.89 billion going to Regions 9 and 12, he said.

Hipolito spelled out the government infrastructure program for Mindanao in a speech during the 21st anniversary of the Mindanao State University.

He said that since Sept. 11, 1972, some 11,300 kilometers of new roads have been constructed or improved and 18,800 lineal meters of bridges built in Mandanao.

This has increased the road density in this region from zero to 0.52 kilometer per square kilometer of land area, and from 3.08 to as high as 4.58 kilometers per 1,000 inhabitants.

All this cost the government ₱2.25 billion plus another ₱2.10 billion for road maintenance, Hipolito said.

He added that the government poured billions of pesos more in other projects like flood control, ports and harbors, irrigation, airports, water supply, health centers, hospitals, and school buildings.

During the years 1972 to 1981, infrastructure investments in Mindanao, particularly Regions 9 and 12, totalled ₱1.25 billion.

This year, another ₱795 million has been programmed as capital outlays in the two regions, he said.

Hipolito said that at no other time in history has there been such financial and human resources channelled by the government to the development of Mindanao.

The minister said of the four regions of Mindanao, Regions 9, 11, and 12 have received a total of 2,730 classrooms and 624 school buildings at a cost of ₱89.3 million.

For 1982, Hipolito said, the government hopes to construct about 5,500 school buildings or a total of 16,500 classrooms costing ₱580 million.

Southern Philippines, he said, will get ₱137.5 million, the second biggest allocation in the schoolbuilding program next only to that of Luzon.

Hipolito was conferred an honorary doctorate in engineering by the MSU board of regents. The title was conferred on him by MSU president Ali Dimaporo.

The city of Marawi under mayor Omar Dianalan conferred on Hipolito the royal title of sultan. He was proclaimed as "sultan mangompia" (achiever) and was adopted son of this Islamic city.

REIGN OF TERROR IN AKLAN PROVINCE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 3 Sep 82 p 36

[Article by Ramon Tulfo]

[Text] Reliable sources say Aklan's provincial governor, vice governor, a senior board member, the mayor of the capital town of Kalibo, and the town's police chief have sought refuge in Manila and elsewhere because of the alleged reign of terror in that province. Sixty goons "imported" from Iloilo and Metro Manila are reportedly lording it over the entire province. The goons were allegedly brought into Aklan to oversee big-time gambling and prostitution in Kalibo. The man who reportedly brought them in has created a monster out of these goons because they would no longer obey him.

At least four killings in recent weeks have been attributed to these goons. Their victims were the assistant PC provincial commander; Antonio Lim, reportedly a member of the group, who was liquidated after he quarreled with gangmates on the sharing of loots; a student from Iloilo who was allegedly mistaken for the slain assistant provincial commander's relative; and a man named Rasco, who fought with a member of the group he suspected of playing around with his wife.

If there is one "good side" about the goons, the sources said, it is that they act as vigilantes. Since they started their activities, PC soldiers and policemen who beat up civilians or fire their guns indiscriminately have mended their ways. These once-abusive policemen and troopers cow in fear at the sight of the goons, the sources said.

CHDF FORCES BEEFED UP IN CAG AYAN

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] Tuguegarao, Cagayan, Sep 3--More Civilian Home Defense Force (CHDF) men will be fielded in various parts of Cagayan Valley to beef up the government's anti-insurgency drive.

Col Thomas Manlongat, deputy commander for Region II, said the move was taken in response to an appeal by local officials in the wake of a reported buildup of the New People's Army (NPA) in the area.

NPA strongholds are reportedly found in remote barangays of Cagayan, upper Kalinga, eastern Isabela, Nueva Vizcaya, and Ifugao.

In a meeting with military officials in the region, the local leaders agreed on conducting more frequent dialogues with the people "to abort the creeping influence of subversive elements in the area."

The dialogue, they said, should be held even in areas where the residents are "ideologically swayed" by the NPA.

Isabela Gov. Faustino N. Dy, who is also chairman of the Regional Development Council (RDC) and presidential action officer for development (PRAO), noted the increasing "ideological persuasion" by the NPAs and warned against the dangers posed by the rebels' preachings.

He stressed that dialogues "still remain as the keystone that shaped the people's trust and confidence in government." He urged that these must not be carried out as an official responsibility.

Cagayan Gov. Justiniano Cortez said authorities must also contend with various groups in the peace and order campaign, pointing out that "those with ideological orientation and pseudo-dissidents who are plain bandits have been confusing peace negotiators."

The Isabela governor noted that clergy members have lately become active in supporting the government's various development programs. He cited the church sector's involvement in the ex-propriated haciendas in San Antonio, Ilagan, and Sta. Isabel in Reina Mercedes town, both in Isabela.

The two haciendas, through the Ministry of Agrarian Reform (MAR), have been turned over to the tenants.

MILITARY ARRESTS NUN IN SAMAR RAID

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] Military intelligence men arrested a nun and two other persons in a raid Thursday on the Social Action Center in Catbalogan, Western Samar, the Ministry of Defense announced yesterday.

The arrest of Sr. Helena Gutierrez, Juanito Delamida, and Antonio Asistio, all of SAC, was reported by Brig Gen Salvador Mison, Eastern Command (Eascom) chief, to Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile.

The Eascom is also looking for six other church officials, namely, Fr. Edgardo Kangleon, SAC director; Msgr. Norberto Hacbang, parish priest of Catbalogan; Sr. Thelma Lauron, Sr. Ludivina Davantes, Don Mabulay, and Teodoro Reyes, all connected with the center.

The SAC was raided by Eascom operatives led by Lt Col Hernani Figueroa, chief of Eascom intelligence, with a search warrant issued by Judge Wenceslao Polo of the Samar court of first instance.

Mison said documents, propaganda materials, printing paraphernalia, and a .22-caliber Smith and Wesson magnum revolver were seized.

Mison said the search was conducted after several months of surveillance of activities at the center.

He said the center had become a hub of underground activities by known radical priests in the area.

Msgr. Hacbang, Fr. Kangleon, Sisters Thelma and Ludivina, Mabulay, and Reyes eluded arrest as they were not at the center when the raiders came.

Figueroa told the Bulletin the church officials arrested and those being hunted have been charged in court with subversion, inciting to rebellion, and illegal possession of firearm.

He said intelligence findings showed the center served as a propaganda base against the government.

Figueroa, however, would not say whether the radical priests at the center were the ones referred to as "rebel priests" by a Samar bishop.

MOST FOREIGN EXCHANGE LOANS IN DOLLARS

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Sep 82 p 12

[Text] About $9 billion or 78 per cent of the country's outstanding fixed-term foreign borrowings of $11.56 billion at the end of the first quarter are payable in US dollars and some $1.84 billion or 16 per cent are payable in Japanese yen.

The rest are payable in French francs ($177 million or two per cent), deutschemarks ($161 million or one per cent), English pound sterling ($96 million or one per cent).

Some $229 million are payable in other currencies outside of the five above.

Figures released by the Central Bank yesterday showed that $6.91 billion or 60 per cent of the total fixed-term credit went to the public sector and 40 per cent to the private sector.

Of the $6.91 billion public sector borrowings, $3.785 billion went to the government and its agencies and $2.857 billion to government-owned and controlled corporations. The Central Bank got $266 million while local governments received $2 million.

In compliance with CB policy restructuring external borrowings toward long-term maturities, long-term debts increased from 91.4 per cent to 91.6 per cent. The remaining debts have short-term and medium-term maturities.

It was observed that the borrowing costs of the loans are "relatively favorable considering that about 59 per cent of the total fixed-term debt carry fixed interest rates averaging 6.85 per cent." Forty-one per cent of the loans have floating interest rates with an average spread of 1.03 per cent.

The CB reported that transactions during the first quarter of this year resulted in a net outflow of $29 million as total principal and interest payments of ₱395 million exceeded loan availments of $366 million.

LOAN NEEDED FOR NUCLEAR POWER PLANT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 5 Sep 82 p 18

[Text] Some $450 million additional foreign exchange cost for the nuclear power plant project now under construction in Bataan may have to be raised in a package combining loans and guarantees from the Export-Import Bank of the United States and a new commercial loan from American banks, sources at the National Power Corporation disclosed the other day.

Prime Minister Cesar Virata recently stated that an additional $450 million will be raised next year for the nuclear project.

He confirmed that the Philippines will ask the US Eximbank to help raise the additional amount needed to complete the construction of the 625-megawatt power plant in Bataan whose reactor and other equipment were supplied by the Westinghouse Electric International Corporation.

The cost of the project, which was began in 1977, had gone up considerably from the original estimates due to construction delays, cost overrun and interest charges on the loans contracted so far amounting to almost $1.0 billion.

The additional safety features demanded by the Philippine government from the supplier also jacked up the price of the project.

When completed in 1985, the nuclear project, the country's first, is expected to supply 30 per cent of the electric power requirement for the Luzon grid by that time.

Sources at the NPC added that the Philippines may have to ask the American Export-Import Bank to put up an additional direct loan of $250 million for the nuclear project.

They added that the balance of $200 million may have to be obtained from commercial loans from American banks backed up by a guarantee by either the Philippine government or the Eximbank.

Eximbank originally extended some $250 million in direct loans and $365 million in guarantees for the nuclear power plant project.

MNLF COMMANDER KILLED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 5 Sep 82 p 40

[Text] Zamboanga City, Sep 4--A high ranking foreign-trained Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) commander, tagged as the chief of this city's MNLF sabotage group, was killed by still unknown gunmen, according to the Southern command (Southcom) intelligence unit under Col. Rolando Q. de Guzman.

De Guzman identified the slain MNLF commander as Mohamad Arala, 25, alias Commander Wally. Report said that Wally was about to enter his house in barangay Sta. Cruz, near the new city market when gunmen fired at him from behind. He died on the spot.

De Guzman said Wally was shot at around 10:30 p.m. last Sept. 1.

Wally's mother-in-law is the sister of Nur Misuari, self-proclaimed leader of the Southern Philippines Muslim secessionists.

About a month ago, this correspondent was able to interview the victim somewhere in the city.

Wally told Bulletin that there was the MNLF really planned to conduct massive terrorism in Mindanao and in Metro Manila, on the instructions of the MNLF chief of staff Melham Alam. Together with other MNLF and Communist Party of the Philippines (CCP) leaders, Alam is staying in a neighboring Asian country.

He said the MNLF chief of staff convened a conference in Jampiras, Sabah, last April 18.

Discussed, Wally said, were plans to conduct simultaneous raids on principal targets in Basilan, Davao, Cotabato, Iligan, and Cagayan de Oro cities, and in Metro Manila, and stockpile and distribute supplies.

Wally added that the MNLF operation is a test mission to be carried out by MNLF urban guerilla forces, mostly under "Operation Command Zapata."

CHURCH OFFICIAL DENIES SUBVERSIVE LABEL

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 7 Sep 82 p 28

[Text] The vicar general of the diocese of Calbayog, Samar, has disclaimed participation in subversive or rebellious activities in denying reports that he had eluded arrest when military intelligence agents raided the Calbayog Social Action Center and arrested a nun and two lay workers.

Msgr. Nicolas Hacbang, who is also parish priest of Catbalogan, said he was in Manila at the time of the raid, on invitation of the Catbalogan Metro Manila Residents' Association, to say mass to celebrate the feast of Saint Bartholomew, their patron saint.

Hacbang said that his duties as vicar general, parish priest, and chaplain of the Association of Small Fishermen of Samar "take up all of my time and I cannot have any more time to spare for subversion and rebellion."

"I have never made any utterance that would incite people to overthrow the government and I have never taken up nor have I told anyone to do the same. Fishermen all over Samar will attest to this."

Those arrested, and those who reportedly eluded arrest, he said, "are performing functions in the Catholic apostolate and it would be hard to think that they would all involve themselves in a concerted move to overthrow the government."

"To believe otherwise," he declared, "would be to say that subversion and rebellion are tolerated or even encouraged within the three dioceses of Samar and that of Palo, Leyte."

EXPLOSIVES EXPORTS TO MALAYSIA, THAILAND

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 2 Sep 82 p 9

[Text] The Philippines will be for the first time, be exporting emulsion explosives beginning this month.

The series of shipments worth around P5 million will be made by Nobel Philippines, initially, to Malaysia and Thailand.

The firm is a pioneer joint venture between the Nitro Nobel Group, the late Alfred Nobel's first company, and local investors headed by Republic Glass Corp.

Before Nobel started producing emulsion explosives at its plant in Balanga, Bataan, the Philippines was importing annually an average of $15-million worth of ammonium nitrate, the main raw material for industrial explosives.

Negotiations for the export of still undetermined volume is now going on with an importer in Indonesia.

The emulsion explosives--made of ammonium nitrate--is being produced by Nobel Philippines at the rate of 4,000 metric tons a year.

The Bataan plant is an adjunct of the multi-million dollar ammonium nitrate project Nobel will commission early next year in Bacong, Negros Oriental. The two plants cost the investors around P300 million.

An official of the company said that emulsion explosives has been accepted in the local market as indicated by the regular orders placed by some 25 customers, 20 of which are mining firms. The other five are construction companies.

WORKER'S REMITTANCES SHORT OF EXPECTATION

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 6 Sep 82 p 26

[Text] Foreign exchange remittances of Filipino contract workers overseas have fallen short of estimates, according to the Private Development Corporation of the Philippines (PDCP).

Comparing data obtained by the Institute of Labor and Manpower Studies (ILMS) from the Central Bank with Labor Statistics Service (LSS) estimates, the PDCP said actual remittances differ considerably.

In its Philippine Business Review for the second quarter of 1982, PDCP pointed out that for the three-year period 1978 to 1980, the country lost a total of $35.5 million in remittance shortfalls.

In 1979 alone, it said, a loss of $70.2 million was observed due to actual remittances of $365 million fell short of the expected $435.2 million.

This deficit could not be compensated for by the $34.7 million total surplus of actual remittances over estimates for 1978 and 1980, it explained.

If data from the Development Academy of the Philippines (DAP) survey would be considered, the cumulative loss from 1978 to 1981 would grow to an astonishing $305.5 million, it said.

Moreover, other data of the ILMS, based this time on expected remittances calculated by the Bureau of Employment Services (BES) of the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE), showed that the country experienced remittance shortfalls of $82.5 million, $321.1 million and $352.6 million in 1978, 1979 and 1980, respectively.

This brought the cumulative loss to an even larger $756.2 million for the three-year period.

Such a leakage of foreign exchange was due to the following factors:

--Many workers mistrust the banking system because the delays in clearing their checks has resulted in severe difficulties for their beneficiaries.

--A thriving dollar black market attracts many workers to bring their dollars through informal channels.

--The lack of control over foreign employers by MOLE cannot ensure adherence to the remittance system.

The PDCP review said it was only in mid-1982 that recruiters of land-based workers were required to forward copies of payroll sheets from their foreign principals to the MOLE.

Unless the trend for 1980 continues, the efficacy of the overseas employment program as a tool to alleviate the country's balance of payments problem would considerably be reduced, the PDCP predicted.

BONTOC RALLY HITS MILITARY ABUSES

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 6 Sep 82 p 40

[Article by I. S. Chammag]

[Text] Bontoc, Mt. Province, Sept 5--More than 1,000 tribespeople from the remote barrios of Kalinga-Apayao denounced abuses allegedly committed by military units in their areas in a rally here last Tuesday.

The demonstrators also called for a pullout of the Philippine Army unit in their area. Some of the placards they carried read "Remove the Military from Mountain Province," "Stop military abuses," "Pay for our Carabaos and other Animals which the Soldiers stole," and "Stop Molesting Us and Disturbing the Peace in the villlages."

The demonstrators converged in front of the municipal building and marched until the Capitol building where they presented their demands to Gov. Alfredo Gayagay Lamen of Kalinga-Apayao.

They then proceeded to the headquarters of the Constabulary provincial command.

The dialogue did not materialize as the newly installed provincial commander, Col. Henry Acmor, and his assistant, Maj. Leon Badival, were still in Baguio city.

A spokesman of the demonstrators said that they held the protect action because Brig. Gen. Romeo Gatan, Northern Command (Northcom) chief, denied their earlier petitions and demands to stop alleged military abuses in the area.

Igorots living along the Chico river earlier petitioned President Marcos and Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile to remove the PA unit in the Mountain Province for alleged violation of human rights.

Gatan and Acmor denied the allegation.

Meanwhile, Acmor said that a conference will be held on Sept. 7 to counter New People's Army (NPA) propaganda which, he said, is taking advantage of the depressed situation in the area.

The conference will be attended by directors of the different government ministries in Region I and provincial officials headed by Gov. Lamen.

NPA LEADER, WIFE SURRENDER

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 7 Sep 82 p 8

[Text] Balanga, Bataan, Sept. 6--A top New People's Army commander and his wife surrendered yesterday to Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Feliciano, Bataan PC commander and Bataan Integrated National Police superintendent.

A PC report said the surrender of Anastacio Cerudo, alias Kumander Boyoyoy, and Lolita Quintana, alias Ka Norie, was made through the efforts of barangay Captain Casiano Diaz of Poblacion, Morong, this province.

The report said Cerudo was No 3 man of the NPA hierarchy in Bataan and head of an NPA squad operating in the towns of Hermosa and Orion, while his wife Lolita was secretary of the NPA executive committee.

The PC said that Cerudo was recruited by Celso Magtanong alias Dong and Delia Cortez alias Ka Alma in January, 1978. He was assigned to various key positions before he became a commander.

It was reported that Quintana surrendered to the authorities in December, 1981, but rejoined the NPA when her brother, Fernando Quintana, was killed in an encounter with government troops in barangay Wakas in Pilar last January.

On her return to the NPA camp, she met Cerudo. Their marriage was solemnized by Feliza Timog alias Emma, head of the NPA provincial committee, in a ceremony held at sitio Pasukulan in the town of Abucay, her hometown.

They told Colonel Feliciano that they decided to give up the life of the hunted after the NPA provincial committee allegedly neglected and abandoned them. Their surrender, they said, was bolstered by newpaper reports that surrenderees were not maltreated.

THIRTY-SEVEN MNLF MEN SURRENDER

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 7 Sep 82 p 8

[Text] Jolo, Sept. 6--Brig. Gen. Godofredo Sta. Ana, commanding general of the 3rd Air Division, Philippine Airforce, formally accepted today the surrender of Commander Ra-il Alibbun and 36 hardcore members of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) who had been actively operating in the hills of Luuk, Sulu.

Commander Alibbun's group took advantage of the government's amnesty through the 514th Composite Tactical Squadron headed by its commander, Capt. Salvador Penaflor, after continuous negotiations by Capt. Basaron Kamlong, executive officer of the unit.

During a simple ceremony at the PAF command post in Jolo, Sta. Ana appealed to the rebel returnees to unite as brother Filipinos and uphold and maintain peace and order in the area so that the government's development efforts could be effectively carried out in the Muslim communities of Mindanao.

Sta. Ana said the government under President Marcos is sincerely implementing various reforms as initiated through its development programs. The most recent of which he said, is the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran or KKK livelihood program.

Sta. Ana encouraged the rebel returnees to avail themselves of the KKK loan assistance program so that they can maintain a primary source of income for livelihood.

Commander Alibbun and his followers turned over to the military authorities 2 M-16 Armalite rifles, 20 carbines, 12 garrand rifles all with complete ammunitions.

MP ELECTION VOTE BUYING SCHEMES DESCRIBED

Bangkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 23 Aug 82 pp 26-29

[Article: "A Tear In the Pockets of the MPs"]

[Text] Reports on the general election to be held next year and the election method to be used state that the election will be either a divided zone—arranged number or joint zone--single number type of election. The type of election used is an important factor that determines the tactics used by politicians to win vtes.

But this is not the final factor that will determine who will win.

The saying "money is king" is a saying that all circles still suscribe to, particularly political circles. Those who have money and a good financial machine will be the ones to enter the final round of the election.

From the table showing the occupations of MPs before they were elected to parliament, it can be seen that most of the MPs were businessmen, that is, they were people with economic influence in the localities. After this come government officials and lawyers since these are professions in which a person can easily gain prestige.

The most important means in the localities are the merchants and businessmen, such as the owners of the rice mills and sawmills, middlemen, construction contractors and government officials, such as the administrative officials, policemen, development officials and public health officials. This provides a good answer to the question of why so many businessmen and government officials are MPs.

Another thing that is important in winning votes is "vote getter." This usually includes teachers, kamnans, village headmen, merchants and middlemen. And whether they intend to or not, the monks are excellent vote getters.

A local banker once told CHATURAT that, besides the very well known MPs, of whom there are very few, most MPs have to spend large amounts of money to obtain a political position.

The amount of money spent by candidates to purchase votes can be estimated roughly by considering the votes won in the election. Most win about 30,000 votes. Approximately 20,000 more are paid money but do not vote or they vote for someone else. There is also the money spent by relatives and friends to purchase votes for the candidate that does not come from the candidate. When all of this is added together, it is estimated that MPs in general who receive 30,000 votes must spend money to purchase about 60,000 votes.

[Candidates] usually begin to distribute this money about 2 months before the election. During the initial period, it is not necessary to throw in large sums to gain votes since the other candidates will turn and attack. Votes are purchased within one zone using one's vote getters.

"During the election period, each person is paid about 50 baht," said a former MP from the lower northeast to CHATURAT. "But the vote getters are usually corrupt and take about half."

Thus, the money spent to purchase votes generally totals about 3 million baht.

Concerning the means of disbursing this money, it must be paid out by the vote getters, who usually include teachers, kamnans, village headmen, local merchants and the commune health official. For each election unit, there will be about two vote getters. Thus, each candidate must have about 300 vote getters. Each vote getter receives money periodically from the candidate along with plans of action. The money received is divided into two parts:

First is the money given to compensate the vote getter for his work. Each receives about 2,000 baht.

Second is the money given for distribution to the villagers.

Thus, the money spent to repay the vote getters for their work totals approximately 600,000 baht. This does not inlcude the "inducement money to work" of the vote getters. Most of the candidates give the election unit [vote gettters] a special bonus for enabling them to place first, second or third in the number of votes won since this means that the candidate has a definite chance of being elected. This special bonus is based on a per capita percentage of 5-10 baht per head.

"To win first or second place, they must have at least 80 election units with each unit obtaining approximately 300 votes," said this same former MP. "Altogether, after the election, they have to pay an additional 25,000 baht as "vote getter inducement" money.

Another important group is the group of people who check on the activities of the vote getters. These people are also called "spies." Their main task is to conceal their identities and ask the villagers which candidate is the most well known in the locality. They then report the strengths and weaknesses of their side to their campaign center. If the candidate is weak in a particular locality, no more money is disbursed to the vote getters there.

"We have to convince them that we do not have any more money. The little money left is kept for personal use as a reward,' said a staff officer who had been involved in making election plans three times. "Things are done like this in order to prevent the vote getters from attacking us. We do not disburse any more money until about 10 days before the election, when we go and disburse the money ourselves."

There are four or five spies. They use motorcycles to get around. Each is paid a salary of about 1,500 baht per month and an allowance of 100 baht per day. Also, they are reimbursed for the gasoline purchased. Altogether, the money paid to spies totals around 45,000 baht.

Expenditures for fuel are very great. Two months prior to the election, only one vehicle is used. The candidate uses this vehicle in going out to seek votes. But about 10 days before the election, 10 vehicles must be used. Small pick-up trucks are the most suitable type of vehicle for this work. When this is added to the money spent on gasoline for the motorcycles of the spies and the money spent on engine repairs, the total amount comes to approximately 126,000 baht (each vehicle uses gasoline worth about 600 baht a day).

Another necessary expense is the banquets given for the people and vote getters who drop in at the main campaign centers. Each candidate has about three centers (one center per district). This goes on constantly during the 2 months [prior to the election]. Each candidate must spend about 100,000 baht on dinner parties for those who come just to eat and for those who come on business in the evening each day.

Another large sum of money is spent by the candidate himself. These days, candidates go out to campaign and they must have about 1,000 baht in 10 and 20-baht bills with them in order to give the villagers a little support money and do good deeds as fitting. The person must maintain an appearance of being poor and of helping the poor. In giving money like this, the person's attitude is very important.

Another essential thing for gaining votes is distributing money for public projects such as giving a donation to build a temple pavilion, to dig a water well and to build a road, giving a donation at a funeral and giving offerings to monks. Concerning such expenses, the same former MP from the lower northeast estimated that each candidate must spend about 100,000 baht.

Besides this, there are other expenses during the 2 months prior to the election that the candidate must incur in order to become an MP. These total more than 110,000 baht. Such expenses include money for bodyguards, drivers, cooks and mechanics and money given with affection to certain government officials.

The expenses described above total more than 4 million baht but even this may not be enough to wage a struggle for the Thai parliament. The final movement before the election is the use of various political tactics such as releasing reports that other candidates have been arrested by the police or that they have been killed. This does not give the other candidates a chance to correct the record since such reports are released the night before the election.

As for other tactics that are used widespreadly in order to win votes, in addition to disbursing money, the candidate must pay money for the following:

First: Buying election units in cases in which the officials assigned to an election unit can "stuff the ballot boxes" for the candidate. The cost of stuffing the ballot boxes is about 100 baht per vote. In general, about five election units can be purchased and the candidate can get about 1,000 "ghost" votes, which cost him about 100,000 baht.

Second: Setting up a stake in order to win over vote getters. The candidate must give someone money to set up a stake in the stronghold of another candidate by giving the candidate who is ahead in the race [odds of] about 2:1. He then uses this trick to get the vote getters of the other candidate to work for him. This is one method used to get vote getters of the other candidate to switch and seek votes for him in order to win the stake. "In my zone last time, (Tat -- headquarters), they had the teachers support them at 2:1. They collected 100,000 baht and played with them. As it turned out, they lost the stake but won the election in that district," said the same former MP to CHATURAT.

Third: For purchasing identity cards. This is often done the night before the election so that the people do not have time to report cards missing. The candidate purchases identity cards in the stronghold of another candidate. The price is about 30-50 baht per card. This is a very frightening way of destroying the opponent's votes.

In spending such large sums of money, it is essential that the candidate have a bank in the province as a base for running the accounts since more than half the money is spent during the last 10 days prior to the election. And almost all of the money used is in the form of 10 and 20-baht bills. Thus, the candidates must have at least one bank to support them.

This top figure calculated for CHATURAT by people in vote-getting circles provides a good picture of the election law, which stipulates that no candidate can spend more than 200,000 baht. This figure in the election law is totally unrealistic in practice.

Another observation is that, concerning the large sums of money that must be spent on the election, in general the candidates from the large political parties will receive only about 100,000 to 200,000 baht from their party. Most of the money is the personal money of the candidate. They also receive financial support from their relatives and friends or supporters. However, the expenditures are enormous. Calculated in economic terms, to make a profit from the principal, in 4 years they must triple the net income before they can say that they have "covered their costs." This is impossible if they are just ordinary MPs who earn around 10,000 baht a month. It may not even be possible for them to recover their expenses even by taking some bribes.

"An MP who is not a minister or secretary to a minister will definitely lose money," said the same news source shaking his head. "[This is true] unless he is involved in certain activities and can use his position as MP as a "lubricant" to help his activities go more smoothly."

Election Expenses (per MP)

Money disbursed to buy votes	3,000,000
Money to employ vote getters	600,000

CPT CONGRESS DISCUSSED, LOCATION OF LEADERSHIP NOTED

Bangkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 23 Aug 82 pp 34-37

[Article: "Communist Affairs"]

[Text] The excitement generated by the news of the Fourth Congress of the CPT cannot be compared with that generated by the announcement of government Order 65/1982 or with that generated by the speech of Major General Chaowalit at the Government House last month. It must be compared with the hard announcement made by Lieutenant General Han Linanon, who "threatened to punish" bankers, at the Army Club on 10 August. Concerning Thailand's basic situation at present, it can be said that the CPT is playing a much smaller role in things than it did before. It is clear that the CPT is losing the propaganda and political wars to the military.

CHATURAT is publishing a political report on the situation of the Central Committee because the party itself has not openly issued an announcement in Morse code. For example, the news release printed here, which is from documents disseminated in the towns under the control of the CPT, has not been evaluated to determine whether it is real or just a fabrication.

As for the news release printed here, it can be seen that some changes in wording have been made. For example:

The phrase "based on Marxism-Leninism" replaces the phrase "Marxism-Leninism and the thoughts of Mao Tse-tung," a phrase that was used for half a century.

And instead of not mentioning the party's weaknesses, these are clearly referred to in the following passage: "The congress evaluated and recognized the party's past activities. It pointed out the strengths and weaknesses, the mistakes and the deviationist tendencies that have arisen during various periods in the past 20 years. Its firm intention is to quickly correct the weaknesses existing in the party and in the revolutionary movement."

As for adjusting the party's strategy and tactics, this is not brought out clearly in this document. The only thing is that the principle of having the "countryside surround the cities and finally seizing the cities" is not emphasized as strongly as before. But neither does it clearly express the "2 battlefields,

3 strategic zones" strategy in accord with the analyses made by various analysts. Concerning this, the CPT is still maintaining a secretive attitude. An example is the following passage: "The party must steadfastly carry on an armed struggle with the rural areas serving as its base. It must also carry on an economic and political struggle and other forms of struggle and cordinate these various forms of struggle both in the countryside and in the cities in order to seize state power in the end. The armed struggle in the countryside that the party and patriotic people who love democracy have waged for 17 years has great value for the development of the revolutionary movement. Thus, we must continue and expand this struggle using various forms and methods. At the same time, the importance of the economic, political and other forms of struggle must be stressed in accord with the real situation. These are indispensible."

In plain language, this means that the CPT still regrets things and will continue to carry on the armed struggle for a long time to come. But is has recognized that these other forms of struggle are very important too. This passage in the statement seems rather strange.

One analyst said to CHATURAT that the CPT's leadership organization is probably still composed of conservative communists only. Thus, it was not able to see what the military's game was when the military launched a political offensive by calling on the CPT to lay down its arms and come fight politically in an open democratic system. But the CPT has stubbornly announced that it will continue the armed struggle. And so the military can now claim that the CPT is not being honest with the nation or people and that it does not dare take up the challenge.

"Look. If the CPT announces that it accepts the military's democratic revolution policy and will support the military and if it gradually shows that it will openly fight in a political way by asking the military to show its sincerity by revoking the Communist Suppression Act and passing an act recognizing the position of the CPT and then announces that it is laying down its weapons, what do you think will happen? The CPT will go on the offensive instead of being on the defensive. As for their weapons, it would be impossible to check to see whether they have really put down their weapons. They could say that those who are still bearing arms are part of another movement," said this analyst.

Actually, a view similar to that of this analyst has arisen among some CPT leaders who hold power. For example, there was the attempt by Mr Damri Ruongsuwham to negotiate with the government. But because Mr Damri was not a leader in the party, his attempt failed and in the end he became a victim of the military.

It is well known that the Udom Sisuwan faction in the CPT holds views that differ greatly from those of the party center. This faction is located in the northeast and they must rely on the "united front." Mr Udom is more experienced and skilled in "united front" activities than any other person in the party. This CPT faction feels that the reason that it has survived and grown in the jungles is that its urban activities were completed before 14 October 1973. Thus, when the military launched its offensive throughout the country, Udom claims that the important people in his group went to carry on united front activities in the cities and that they were involved in united front activities that resulted in splits in the Thanom-Praphat group. These finally developed into the events of 14 October 1973.

"Concerning the congress, the northeastern committee could not accept things," reported a CHATURAT news source. "The line that resulted was the line of the northern and southern committees."

This is why the reports of "Comrade Yut," Suwit Niemsa, leaving the party are highly likely. Suwit was in charge of activities in the northeast. His views are in accord with those of Udom. He previously set up his base of operations in the cities. He feels that the party should implement the "2 battlefronts, 3 zones" strategy seriously and not follow the Chinese line 100 percent.

The [news] that Suwit has left the party is in accord with the news that his new party has established relations with Vietnam. Actually, this assumption has not been proven. The only thing is that it would be natural for Vietnam to give support "at some level" to a political force that is the enemy of its enemy. Mr Suwit's group will have to be in conflict with the CPT. There will definitely have to be relations "at some level." But this problem will unfold clearly only in the future. The important factors are whether Thailand continues to have a policy of confronting Vietnam and whether Vietnam really changes its attitude toward Thailand as Nguyen Co Thach said it would. Concerning these things, Mr Suwit's group will have to grow through its own efforts.

Even though China has been the "lord" of the CPT for a long time, prior to 1979 it can be said that the Indochina communists gave much support to the CPT since they provided a rear area [for the CPT]. And the Indochina communists had to give support because the CPT was a force that was stabbing the Thai government in the back, which acted like an enemy of itself. But later on, when the Indochina war came to an end and China threatened Indochina, support to the CPT was cut off because the CPT would not separate itself from China. During that period, the Indochina communists indicated that they would strongly support the Thai revolution of a group that was the ideological enemy of the CPT. But nothing happened because the revolutionaries in this group fought among themselves and no one in this group acted like a real revolutionary.

However, Bunyen Wothong is probably still in Laos. A CHATURAT news source has reported that, among Lao and Vietnamese leaders, there are differing opinions about supporting Bunyen since this man is not accepted by the majority of the Thai people. It is likely that, in the future, there will have to be contact between Bunyen and Suwit. At present, it is not possible to say what the results will be.

As for the CPT under the leadership of "Chief Secretary-General" Prasit Taphienthong, alias Pracha Thanyaphaibun, there is little of interest. The only thing is that if Lieutenant General Han eliminates the capitalists as he has announced, the structure of Thailand will immediately collapse and Comrade Pracha might have a chance to do something.

COLUMNIST HITS MILITARY INVOLVEMENT IN POLITICS

Bangkok PHYA KHRUT in Thai 24 Jul 82 p 3

[Angkhira Charoenrat column: "The Soldiers Have Split Ranks and Are Far From Their 'Barracks'"]

[Text] The role of the military outside the military sector is expanding greatly. And what cannot be separated are soldiers and politics and soldiers and the piling up of profits.

Ever since 1932, when a military clique seized state power and changed the government, the promoters have spoken about a system in which the people will be governed by the people. But, to date, the military has not yet returned state power to the people and will probably continue to use it as a tool of dictatorship.

During the 50 years since the change of administration, one military group after another has come seeking profits like a mosquito waiting to drink the blood of the Thai people. Some of the people and some of the groups have seen the misery but they have not sympathized with the people for very long. Because those who have power have been overwhelmed by it and their eyes have been dimmed.

In the past, we had civilian politicians who served as national leaders. But they did not last long. Concerning these past 50 years that we call a democracy, it has been calculated that there were only 10 years in which civilians played a part in governing the country.

Why has the extra-military role of the soldiers expanded beyond what anyone would have expected? There is probably only one answer and that is that the soldirs are not aware of what their real duty is and they do not know what the real meaning of democracy is.

The soldiers have claimed that it has been necessary for the military to interfere in politics in certain periods because the civilians governing the country were going to lead the nation into a disaster.

While it is true that civilians may govern the country in a dictatorial way, in the sense of soldiers breaking ranks and playing politics, to date, it is the people in uniform who are playing politics.

More and more soldiers are breaking ranks. Besides their political involvement in parliament, soldiers are also interfering directly and indirectly with the economic system. Who can deny that the reason that Thailand cannot engage in trade with Indochina is because of the military's policy that cites national security reasons.

Who can argue against the fact that closing the forests in order to suppress the communist terrorists is the same as "leaving the fish with the cat?"

Reviewing things, if the truth is admitted, at present, for some soldiers and some groups their main occupation is businesss while the military is just a side occupation.

As for the question of whether the soldiers will return to their "barracks," the answer is that this would be very difficult and probably impossible since, at present, the soldiers have gone a long way from their "barracks." And the soldiers are engrossed in the fact that they have grabbed power and are stuffing their pockets with ill-gotten gains.

If it is claimed that this is not true, just look at the high-ranking officers. Almost all of them are unusually wealthy. If it is said that they came from wealthy families, this is true for only a few. Most of them came from farm families.

It cannot be denied that some of them have profited because merchants have fawned over them in order to use their prestige in the future.

But once a person has "tasted the fruits" and accepted things from people, when he is asked to do something evil against the regulations, he must do so. It is said that soldiers will not bow down to anyone who tramples on their honor. But conversely, some soldiers are just slaves of the capitalists.

There are things that are even more serious. Soldiers have been taught not to kill each other. But because their eyes are fogged by the profits, there has been fighting. At a minimum, there is the case of a major general selling war weapons.

And another case that has come into the open is that one group of soldiers wanted to topple another group because the profits had not been divided equally.

Or there is the case of Colonel Wanchai Thammasama who was moved from the position of commander of the Ingkhayuthabarihan Camp to become the chief of staff at the Infantry Center and who then committed suicide at his house.

It appears that this happened because he had interfered with the timber trading interests of a high-ranking officer in the Fourth Army Area.

But why did Colonel Wanchai have to kill himself? His fellow officers know that before this honest soldier died he said that "I will fight this to the end even if I am discharged from government service."

This is a very murky case and so how can the villagers believe that "soldiers do not kill each other?"

PUBLIC OPINION POLL ON PUNISHMENT OF CORRUPT OFFICIALS REPORTED

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 30 Aug 82 pp 25-29

[Article: "Corrupt Government Officials: Should They Be Transferred Or Dismissed?"]

[Text] If all the countries in the world are compared to large corporations, it can be said that the government is the management apparatus and the officials are the employees of the corporation. The business of these corporations is to try in all ways possible to enable the people in the country, who are the assets of the corporation, to have a comfortable life. That is, its business is to relieve the suffering and increase the happiness of the people in the country and constantly maintain the security of the "company." The capital to run the company comes in the form of taxes collected from the people in the country. Since the government officials are the employees of the government and are responsible for serving the people, they must obey the orders of the government and carry out things in accord with the government's policies in order to reach the goals set. Whoever disobeys the orders of the boss (the government) must be punished in accord with the regulations of the company. Concerning the policy in carrying out the work that will make the company secure, it must be admitted that a policy of democracy will keep the company from going bankrupt.

Thailand is one "company" in the world. It has definite borders, resources and a population of more than 48 million. Thus, it is one of the large companies in the world. But at present, this company is in the midst of a great crisis. This is because the administrators are not acting as they said they would. There is fighting to see who will be the manager and who will be chairman. Everything is in turmoil. The policies used to manage things are not definite even though most of the people who use the services (the Thai people) want a democratic policy implemented. The income of the company is not enough to cover expenditures. The employees (the government officials) do not carry out their duties well. They disobey orders sometimes and do not always have a correct attitude toward their duties. They sometimes act like they are the masters of the people. But the company is goodhearted. Regardless of whether the employees are good or bad, it supports them until they retire and gives them a pension when they leave government service. Thus, the company's employees are cared for better than other people. As for the people in general, the assets of the company, they are given little attention. They do not have enough food or consumer goods. Thus, there is turmoil inside the company and there are so many problems that the company is on the verge of bankruptcy.

This is a rough picture of Thailand at present. It is encountering many problems. One chronic problem that has existed for a long time and that has not been solved is the problem of "corruption" among government officials, the employees of the government.

From Order 65/1982

Corruption in government circles is a social sore that Marxists have used to make successful attacks on the government. Thus, in Order 65/1982, a continuation of Order 66/1980, which took the political offensive in order to defeat the communist terrorists, there was a section concerning government officials:

7.2.2.2. Administration concerning regular government officials: The regular government officials play an important role as the means by which the state's policies are implemented, but they still lack awareness and ideals. This has resulted in their being less efficient than they should be in creating democracy for the people and creating respect for the laws. Thus, the following things must be quickly implemented in the democratic system of the regular government officials:

7.2.2.2.1. Government officials, especially high-echelon officials, must study the state's policies so that they clearly understand the policies. There must be a greater sharing of responsibility.

7.2.2.2.2. The reasons for the corruption must be found and ways to solve this problem quickly must be looked for resolutely and sincerely. In the beginning, the target should be the high-ranking government officials, particularly heads of units, in order to set an example. This will affect those at lower echelons. Even if this does not solve the problem completely, this will bring some results. If action is taken continuously, more and more results will be achieved.

7.2.2.2.3. The regulations and orders must be adhered to strictly. Those who disobey must be punished in order to set an example. Besides this, things must be watched to see to it that no requests or orders are issued that would force government officials to take responsibility for things outside their duties or beyond their capabilities.

7.2.2.2.4. High-ranking officials must give help and assurance to those officials who have devoted their lives to government service but who have been oppressed by influential people.

7.2.2.2.5 Things must be watched carefully to see to it that officials do not act like "lords" and take advantage of or oppress the people. Those officials who disobey must be punished severely.

7.2.2.2.6. The abilities of the government officials must be developed and officials must be given training so that officials at all levels develop an awareness of their position and their duties in dealing with the people in a responsible, selfless and honest way.

Disgraceful Events

Shortly after the order was issued, reports of various shameful events came flooding in. A report in the 27 July 1982 edition of THAI RAT was entitled "Judged Dismissed." The story said that "the Judicial Service Commission (JSC) issued a resolution dismissing the chief justice of the Thonburi criminal court from government service. This was because he had acted in a very improper way, ordering officials to confiscate land illegally. The JSC also appointed 19 more judicial officials.

On 26 July, Mr Banyat Suthira, the president of the Supreme Court, chaired a meeting of the JSC to issue a resolution to take disciplinary action against this judicial official, Mr Surin, who had acted improperly. After discussing the case, the commission issued a resolution stating that Mr Surin Matphong had acted in a very improper way, that is, he had ordered officials from the Department of Lands to illegally transfer land ownership during the period before he was appointed to the civil court.

At this JSC meeting, eight members voted to retire Mr Surin Matphong from government service while three voted to dismiss him. Thus, the JSC, by a vote of eight to three, punished Mr Surin by retiring him from government service with a pension.

After the JSC issued the resolution retiring Mr Surin from government service, reporters asked Mr Banyat Suthira, the president of the Supreme Court, what the next steps would be. Mr Banyat, the chairman of the JSC, said that since the JSC had issued this resolution, the next step was to submit this resolution to the minister of justice in order to issue an order in accord with the resolution.

Besides this, there have been other widely-publicized stories about corruption in police, military and government circles. For example:

"Chaiyaphum: Large-Scale Corruption in the Construction of Six Schools"; MATICHON, 2 July 1982.

"Major General Who Is Aide to Prem Involved In Weapons Smuggling"; MATICHON, 13 July 1982.

"Army Purchases 400 Artillery Shells. Navy Seizes Ship Smuggling Arms"; MATICHON, 16 July 1982.

"Bribe of 20,000 Baht Asked Not to Prosecute Gambling Case. Opportunity Used to Take Assets"; MATICHON, 20 July 1982.

"Policeman Arrested For Robbing Model. Says That the Ringleaders Are In Three Suppression Divisions"; THAI RAT , 20 July 1982.

"Never-Ending Case. Child Confesses Everything Done For Mother. Said Was Forced to Pay 1 Million Baht"; THAI RAT, 2 August 1982.

And a story that goes on and on is the story of "Lieutenant Colonel Has Conflict With General. Says That Commander Has Received Stolen Goods"; THAI RAT, 24 July 1982.

These are just the cases that have been reported in the press. How many other cases are there that have not come to the attention of the newspapermen?

A recent poll conducted by the Research Section of the Phithak Pracha Company Ltd studied the views of people [in general] and students concerning "Measures On Punishing Illegal Actions," Article 22 of which concerns "Failure By Government Officials to Carry Out Their Duties Honestly, Such As Engaging In Corruption Or Oppressing the People." People [in general] were polled during the period 17-26 May 1982. A total of 608 people were interviewed. The sampling locations included the Hua Lampong Railroad Station, the Bangkok Noi Railroad Station, the northern and northeastern bus station (Mo Chit), the southern bus station, the eastern bus station and Chatuchak Park. The students were polled during the period 16-23 June 1982. A total of 516 students were polled. The sampling locations included Kasetsat University [KU], Thammasat University [TU], Chulalongkorn University [CU] and Ramkhamhaeng Univeristy [RU]. Both the people and the students were asked to choose from the same set of 26 responses:

1. Give a suspended sentence without promotion.
2. Transfer him.
3. Transfer and reduce pay grade.
4. Dismiss from government service without pension.
5. Imprison for 1 to 5 years.
6. Imprison for 5 t 10 years.
7. Imprison for 10 to 15 years.
8. Imprison for 15 to 20 years.
9. Imprison for life.
10. Fine him for the amount he made from his dishonest actions.
11. No 10 plus up to 1 year in prison.
12. No 10 plus 1 to 5 years in prison.
13. No 10 plus 5 to 10 years in prison.
14. No 10 plus 10 to 15 years in prison.
15. No 10 plus 15 to 20 years in prison.
16. No 10 plus life in prison.
17. Confiscate all his assets.
18. No 17 plus up to 1 year in prison.
19. No 17 plus 1 to 5 years in prison.
20. No 17 plus 5 to 10 years in prison.
21. No 17 plus 10 to 15 years in prison.
22. No 17 plus 15 to 20 years in prison.

23. No 17 plus life in prison.
24. No 17 plus execute him.
25. Execute him.
26. Other, state.

For the students, the research section divided the students by institution, by grade level, that is grades 1-2 and 3-4, by sex and by academic stream, that is, science and arts. But all responded in a similar way. On the average, No 4 was chosen the most frequently, with 49.2 percent choosing "dismiss from government service without a pension." Next, with 7.5 percent, was No 3, "transfer and reduce pay grade."

As for the people, the sample was divided according to sex, education, region, age and occupation. The results were the same. That is, No 4, "dismiss from government service without pension," was selected by 46.9 percent. This was followed by No 3, "transfer and reduce pay grade," which was selected by 7.6 percent. As for the other choices, few people or students selected these other choices. Most people who now work as government officials chose No 4 too. The results of this poll show that most students and people favor stiff punishment for government officials who engage in corruption and who oppress the people. That is, they want such officials to be dismissed from government service without any pension.

The Way Out Is In Sight

Based on reports about the police that are making the headlines these days, one high-ranking person said that "this is ruining the reputation of the Police Department." The minister of interior said that an "investigation is being conducted." However, regardless of the results of the investigation, the minister of interior or the Police Department should quickly clear up things in order to relieve people's suspicions. Or they should periodically issue statements to keep the people informed about the progress of the investigations being conducted by the police. They should not ignor this matter. At a time when the Police Department is trying to create a beautiful new image for itself, it should quickly issue statements about this. Simply ignoring this will further damage the department's reputation. The Police Departemnt has a new director-general who is known to be an upright and honest man. It should quickly clear up this matter in order to welcome this director-general [to the department].

At the same time, the present minister of interior, General Sitthi Chirarot, is considered to be a very courageous and sincere individual in carrying out his duties. He should use this courage, as he did in cleaning up the Department of Public Prosecution, to quickly clean up the Police Department in order to avoid criticism by the people in general. He should study the results of this poll because it is felt that if he punishes officials as mentioned here, the people will definitely support him.

And actually, dishonesty in government circles is not found only among the police. There is corruption in all sectors. Such actions destroy the image and reputation of the country. Such things make it impossible for the state to carry out things in accord with the targets. Such actions have resulted in people being oppressed to the point where they could not bear it and so they turned against the government and started supporting the enemy. All such actions pose a danger to the security of the nation. In accord with Order 65/1982, the government has measures to supervise officials to ensure that they are honest and disciplined and make sacrifices for the country. But ever since this order was issued, stories about such actions have continued to appear. And so when will Order 65/1982 show results? There is only one way to control the officials and that is to use resolute measures and punish those who do something wrong or engage in corruption. And the only way to punish them resolutely is to "dismiss them from government service without a pension."

Article 6: Measures for punishing illegal actions.

Article 22: Failure by government officials to carry out their duties honestly, such as by engaging in corruption or oppressing the people.

ACM SIT ATTACKED FOR KHMER COALITION POLICY

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 30 Aug 82 pp 10, 11

[Article: "The Truth About the Khmer Coalition Government: Is the Thai Minister of Foreign Affairs Serving Kampuchea?"]

[Text] Ever since Vietnam sent troops into Kampuchea and drove the Khmer Rouge (Pol Pot-Khieu Samphan) out of Phnom Penh and the Khmer rouge established a guerrilla force along the Thai border, the Thai government has continually done things that have given rise to the charge that Thaiaind is not neutral in the Kampuchean problem. That is, it has been charged that Thailand really supports the Khmer groups that are enemies of the Heng Samrin group, which is supported by Vietnam and the Soviet Union. In particular, it supports the Khmer faction of Son Sann, which has the backing of the United States, and the Khmer Rouge, which is backed by communist China. The reason that Vietnam and the Heng Samrin groups have not been able to completely suppress the other Khmer groups that are their enemies is that these Khmer groups have Thailand to fall back on. In particular, the Khmer Rouge also receives support from the CPT.

During the recent past, the position of the Khmer Rouge in the international political arena was deteriorating steadily. This was because the Khmer Rouge could not get out of the predicament of being just a guerrilla force. This caused many countries to support the Heng Samrin group in its bid to gain the seat in the United Nations instead of the Khmer Rouge. This would have meant that the Heng Samrin group would have gained world-wide recognition as the legitimate governing authority in Kampuchea.

Red China wants to restore its influence over Indochina to what it was before Vietnam and the Soviet Union took control. This is because, if it is not able to maintain its influence, it means that Red China will be surrounded. And what is important is that the other countries in Southeast Asia will fall under the influence of the Soviet Union.

The United States does not want the Soviet Union to gain contorl of this region either since it was greatly distressed when the Soviet Union established friendly ties with India. Thus, the United States and China are temporarily a united front in expressing their hostility toward Vietnam and the Heng Samrin group.

As for the Khmer Rouge, actually, most Kampucheans repudiate this group because of its great cruelty when it governed Kampuchea. Son Sann, whom the United States supports, lacks ability and does not have an adequate base of support. Thus, both the United States and Red China have had to turn and give support to Sihanouk, who is wandering about abroad. This is because, at least, there are still some Kampucheans who are still tied to the foremr monarchy of Sihanouk. And there seems to be a large number of these people who oppose Vietnam and Heng Samrin.

For these reasons, a plan to form a Khmer coalition government with Sihanouk serving as president was drawn up by China and the United States.

But neither Red China nor the United States dared come forward as the prime mover in the formation of the government since they were afraid that they would not be able to come up with an excuse if they were attacked for interfering in the Kampuchean problem.

Thus, both these great powers have used a representative, Thailand, to carry out this plan. They have given certain benefits to the Thai government in exchange for its help. And this has helped turn people's attention from the domestic problems that are strongly shaking the stability of the government.

But the Thai government is worried about opposition from the majority of the people (who have lost almost all faith in the government's [ability] to govern the country). Thus, it has had to use Asean as a guise to conceal things. And the Asean countries have been happy to do this as long as Thailand takes the lead since this amounts to making Thailand a real enemy of Vietnam and the Heng Samrin group. Thailand will have to immerse itself in making preparations to defend itself from an invasion by Vietnam and will have to abandon its economic interests to these countries.

For these reasons, the formation of the Khmer coalition government was announced, with the Erawan Hotel serving as the temporary Government House.

Thailand has, without a doubt, interfered in the internal affairs of Kampuchea even if it does cite the United Nations' resolution. Other countries have issued resolutions but they have not gotten involved to the same extent that Thailand has.

There was an immediate reactin from Vietnam and the Heng Samrin group. The Asean countries, particularly Malaysia and Singapore, spread rumors throughout the world that Thailand would be invaded by Vietnam. Both Malaysia and Singapore had great economic interests behind this action.

As for Thailand, the minister of foreign affairs has shown such concern for maintaining the interests and image of the Khmer coalition and Sihanouk that people in general are wondering whether he is the minister of foreign affairs in the Prem government or in the Sihanouk government.

A ter the Sihanouk government was formed and ample propaganda was put out, the mass media in Thailand started printing contrary reports that said that more than 15,000 Kampuchean refugees at the Khao I Dang camp had submitted a petition to Thai officials expressing a desire to return to Kampuchea. Thai officials stated that this matter would be handled in accord with the wishes of the Kampucheans.

But then on 10 August, the BANGKOK POST and the NATION REVIEW printed a contrary story to the effect that Sihanouk had sent a telegram to Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the Thai minister of foreign affairs, asking him to stop the repatriation of the Kampuchean refugees from the Khao I Dang refugee camp who had volunteered to return to Kampuchea. At the same time, Sihanouk sent a telegram to In Tam, his agent. He told him to spread propaganda among the Kampuchean refugees at the Khao I Dang camp and tell them not to return to Kampuchea because there was a food shortage there and because they would be killed by the Heng Samrin group. Stated simply, [he told them that] there was food at the Khao I Dang camp and that there were people there to look after the safety [of the refugees].

The reports did not say whether or not In Tam acted in accord with Sihanouk's telegram.

But it appears that Thai officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs have stopped the repatriation of Kampuchean refugees.

Does such news make it possible to decide whether or not the Thai minister of foreign affairs is serving the Kampucheans of Sihanouk?

THAI ROLE AS PRIME MOVER IN KHMER COALITION DECRIED

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 30 Aug 82 pp 17-19

[Article: "Repercussions From the Formation of the Khmer Coalition"]

[Trxt] The fact that the Thai government, through the minister of foreign affairs, has openly involved the country in the Kampuchean situation by serving as the prime mover in uniting the three Democratic Kampuchean groups is the same as announcing to the whole world that Thailand is one country in this region that can successfully unite the Khmer groups. But in their pride, people in the cabinet have grievously pierced the hearts of the students, intellectuals, scholars and people in general, the owners of the country. And they have been greatly hurt by the implementation of a policy that will lead to a national disaster without being allowed to express an opinion on this. Even the newspapers, which are the mouthpiece of the people in a democratic system, have been muzzled to the point where they do not dare talk about this matter frankly. However, this harsh look toward the mass media cannot put a stop to the pure thoughts of the students and intellectuals, the "brains" of the country who will someday take responsibility for the nation's future. Student groups at Ramkhamhaeng University have united and shown firm resolve to have the government implement a policy of real neutrality as the government once said it would.

From an Open Letter to an Invitation to the Minister

On 3 August 1982, united students from Ramkhamhaeng University sent representatives to submit an open letter to the prime minister in order to ask the government to review the policy of neutrality. Concerning the matter of Thailand taking part in uniting the Khmer factions, the student representatives confirmed that "in meeting with the government representatives, when we first entered the Government House, the officials there all viewed us as naive children and treated us poorly. They tried to get us to leave and would not accept the letter from the students. We felt great trepidation and anxiety, anxiety from not knowing the regulations here and from being in a grand place. But this could not change our view. We kept trying and finally the officials at the Government House allowed us to meet with the deputy secretary-general of the prime minister, Rear Admiral Prakop Wasin. He accepted our open letter, talked with us and answered our questions." Concerning the responses to the questions, the student representative pointed out that "his answers were very tight-fisted' as if he did not want to clarify things for the students and people. He just said that this was the best policy possible, giving very few reasons. As for why this is the correct policy, he did not say. He only said that this was a political matter and that he could not say any more about it. This did not hurt us too much. But then he insulted us. He told us to go back to our studies in order to learn more about things." Another student said that "we feel that we have studied the matter carefully and that we have studied things in greater detail than the man [Sitthi] who has a degree in engineering. We can, therefore, look at strategical matters and at the disadvantages and advantages to Thailand in getting involved with the Khmer coalition and following along behind a few great powers.

The remarks by the minister of foreign affairs that have insulted the students and people have hurt all the students. In particular, where there were originally two united student groups, there are now four united groups. They have opened a Hyde Park [area] and issued a statement in response to the actions and statements that insulted the students and people. Also, on 9 August, they sent a letter inviting Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila to come to Ramkhamhaeng University to explain things and answer the questions of the students and people. They scheduled this for Monday, 16 August 1982, at the large stage in front of the SWP yard. The hope was that this would provide the students and people in general with information about the implementation of the foreign policy and give the thousands of students and youths studying at Ramkhamhaeng Univerity and the people in general a chance to ask the questions burning in their hearts and relieve their doubts, said one student.

16 August, the Day of the Appointment

After submitting this invitation, what impressed the students was that they received an very unexpected response. That is, a government representative, Mr Chet Suchitkun, the director-general of the Information Department, [indicated] that he would come meet with the students in accord with the invitation. This response was sent through Associate Professor Aphirom Na Nakhon, the rector of Ramkhamhaeng University. He also called by telephone and confirmed that he was definitely coming. But then the joy of the students was destroyed when an urgent letter arrived form the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The letter, dated 13 August 1982, was sent to the rector of Ramkhamhaeng University. It said: "Concerning my call to you when I said I would be happy to come meet with the three student groups at Ramkhamhaeng University in order to explain the government's policies and the actions of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the formation of the Democratic Khmer Government, I would like to [change this] and instead invite 10-15 representatives form each of these student groups to come meet with me at the Information Center...." Immediately after this letter was received, students expressed great disappointment. Mr Surin Sukkua, one of the representatives form the united students, said that "we refuse to go to the Information Center with only 20-30 representatives. This matter does not involve the interests of only a few people but the interests of all the people in the country. If just 20-30 people go, what good would this be? The 30-000-40,000 students all want to listen. We do not want to be selfi h. We want all students and people in general to listen to the government's responses." This same student also said that "if we were the government, we would dare to come speak and express our views in front of the students and people. If we act honestly, there is nothing to be afraid of. But if things have been done in a dishonest way, this is frightening. Just calling this and that person is not right. The government must explain things. It must be ready to answer the questions of the people at any time and at any place." And "Ramkhamhaeng is always ready to provide a nice place with comfortable chairs. We are always ready to listen to someone. Anyone who is involved in this particular matter can come meet with us," added another student. And another student said that "he is not courageous enough to come meet with the young people at Ramkhamhaeng. Even though students have not graduated, he does not dare come answer our questions. He has insulted us. And so if he could not answer our questions he would be humiliated in front of all the students. Thus, he changed his mind and has asked us to send representatives to meet him in order to soothe us as he has done with reporters. But as a challenge to him, I say that he can muzzle the press and close the universities but he cannot muzzle the thoughts of sincere students."

However, even though the government's representative, Mr Chet Suchitkun, did notmeet with the students at the appointed time, the students from the four united groups -- the Border Project group, the Coffee Council group, the Ram-Tabi group and the Creative Political Science group -- organized a discussion to talk with Ramkhamhaeng students about the problem of uniting the Khmer groups. About 800-1,000 students attended. They listened to the data presented by the student representatives, who talked about the atmosphere when they went to submit their open letter to General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister, at the Government House on 3 August. Besides this, they also talked about strategy and the importance of Thailand. They said that the "great powers, particularly the United States, China and the Soviet Union, are resolutely determined to expand their influence in Southeast Asia, including influence over the sea areas and the Strait of Malacca." The student representatives said that "if they can take control of Thailand, they will easily be able to seize other countries in this region. And that means that great influence and profits will go to a single great power." During this discussion, the students discussed the repercussions to Thailand from having united the three Khmer factions. [They said that] "more refugees will enter Thailand since the war in Kampuchea will go on and on. Vietnamese-Heng Samrin soldiers will launch attacks against the Khmer coalition forces that are located along the Thai border and these forces will retreat into Thailand. Vietnam will cross the border in pursuit and, in the end, Thailand's border area will become a battlefield like in Lebanon. And in the end, Thailand will not be able to ask for help from anyone because this is an internal matter that Thailand got involved in by itself."

The discussion that day became very heated. In between speeches there was music played by Ramkhamhaeng students. And before the speeches were concluded, there was a sudden rainstorm. Some of the students were very interested and so they waited for the rain to stop so they could listen to more speeches. Finally the four united groups set up a new stage below the HB building and about 500 students went to listen to the rest of the speeches, which concluded around 1900 hours. The students then went home.

Summary

There have been many cases in which the government has neglected the students and people and then received the painful consequences of having done so. Governments have fallen, as in the case of 14 October and 6 October. And the present matter may be a fuse that will lead to dissatisfaction among the students and people in general. If the government, through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, maintains its inflexibility and continues to carry on a policy that serves the interests of other countries more than it serves the interests of Thailand and a disaster befalls the country, it will be the duty of the students and people to join together to oppose this. Besides the fact that the government must remain truly neutral and be willing to listen to the criticisms and answer the questions of the people, who are the owners of the country and who have the right to be concerned about their homeland, it is not necessary to select a high class, which means their survival if anything should happen. It is they alone who will receive the consequences, not someone else. They must be ready to get on an airplane and go to a third country.

EFFECT OF KHMER REPATRIATION IN LIGHT OF COALITION EXAMINED

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 30 Aug 82 pp 14-16

[Article: Khmer Repatriation: Beware of the War Ahead"]

[Text] Ever since the Khmer coalition government, composed of the Norodom Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan groups, was formed and an agreement to unite was signed in Malaysia on 22 June, the Kampuchean problem has become more and more complex. The movements of this coalition government and the reaction of Vietnam have been watched with great interest by all sides. This is because this may affect the security and safety of all countries in this region, particularly Thailand, which is in a forward position and must confront the Indochina countries directly.

Concerning the formation of the Khmer coalition, one result that cannot be denied is that the coalition government has gone on the political offensive at the international level and gained an advantage over the Heng Samrin group, which is supported by Vietnam. Political analysts all agree that, the formation of the coalition government will enable Democratic Kampuchea to keep its seat in the United Nations for at least 1 more year. But militarily, whether the balance of power will shift back toward Democratic Kampuchea is a matter filled with difficulties. It appears that it would be very difficult for the 30,000 troops of the Khmer Rouge, the 9,000 troops of Son Sann and the 3,000 troops who support Sihanouk to drive the Vietnamese troops, totalling more than 180,000 men, out of Kampuchea.

Concerning this, after the coalition government was formed, Sihanouk and Son Sann immediately announced that if they are given support, including weapons and various war materials, by third countries, they will be able to expand their forces greatly. And it is highly possible that this is true. When Sihanouk went to visit the Kampucheans living in the Khao I Dang refugee camp and those living along the Thai border at the beginning of July, many Kampucheans went to welcome him and many were ready to join with him in driving the Vietnamese troops out of their country. It is certain that, if these Kampucheans join with the Khmer coalition, Vietnam will face much stronger opposition since the number of Kampuchean refugees living in the refugee camps and along the Thai-Kampuchean border totals several hundred thousand. This is indicated by the following statistics on the number of refugees as of 3 August, which does not inlcude the refugees waiting to be sent to a third country:

1. The Khao I Dang refugee camp: 33,136 people.
2. The Sa Kaeo camp: 17,720 people.
3. The Phaya Kamphut camp: 20,206 people.
4. Along the border area: 294,112 people.

Khmer Repatriation...For Whom?

"At just the Khao I Dang refugee camp alone, more than 15,000 refugees expressed their desire by submitting an appeal asking to return to Kampuchea," said Major General Somkhit Chongphayuha, the commander of the division responsible for the border area in Prachinburi, to the mass media on 9 August. Major General Somkhit summarized the things that made these refugees ask to be repatriated. He said that there were two reasons:

1. These refugees have hope in the new government formed by the leaders of the three Khmer factions.

2. At present, within 5-10 kilometers of the border, things are peaceful and so it is possible to earn a living in this area. This has made the Kampucheans want to return to their homeland and so many of them have volunteered to return.

We have been repatriating people frequently. But after Sihanouk visited the refugee camps, there was a wave of patriotism and many more Kampucheans came to volunteer. For most of them, we provide buses to transport them and drop them off at night because we do not want to do this with any fanfare.Otherwise, Vietnam might take action," said one official who is responsible for this to PATINYA. As for the number of refugees who have been repatriated to Kampuchea, in July alone, 2,334 were repatriated. Most were from the Khao I Dang and Sa Kaeo camps. As for the release points, they are released in the Chong Chom area in Surin Province and at Ban Nong Samet and Ban Nong Chan in Prachinburi Province. "Most of these go and join Sihanouk's forces. As for foodstuffs and other supplies, they are provided things by the World Food Program and the International Red Cross," said the same official to PATINYA . Besides this, there are still many more refugees who want to return to their country as Major General Somkhit said.

Concerning the repatriation of these Kampuchean refugees, looked at from another angle, this will greatly benefit several sides:

Democratic Kampuchea: The formation of the Khmer coalition has enabled the forces of these Khmer factions to have greater unity. Refugees who previously refused to fight for national liberation under the leadership of the Khmer Rouge are now willing to join in the struggle against Vietnam under the leadership of Sihanouk, the leader of this coalition government. And the return of these refugees to Kampuchea, who have returned with the aim of joining the army of Democratic Kampuchea, will greatly increase the size of the forces of Democratic Kampuchea. This will make things much more difficult for Vietnam and greatly increase its losses.

Thailand: The refugee problem, which Thailand has constantly had to take responsibility for, has made things very difficult for Thailand. Thus, the repatriation of these refugees will lighten Thailand's burden somewhat. And from the strategic standpoint, the fact that the forces of Democratic Kampuchea will be stronger because of receiving more men and supplies will result in the war in Kampuchea intensifying. This has caused some Thai officials to feel that the danger to Thailand posed by Vietnam will decrease as long as Kampuchea continues to have internal problems and serves as a buffer state between Thailand and Vietnam as at present.

The United Nations and, in particular, the United States, which is responsible for providing money to support the refugees and for admitting many of these refugees into the country: Since more of the Khmer refugees have begun to return to Kampuchea, this will help relieve this burden on the United States. Besides this, since Vietnam will face greater opposition from the Kampucheans, Vietnam will be placed in a much more difficult situation. And in the end, Vietnam will not be able to maintain control of the Kampuchean problem. When that happens the United Nations may be able to play a greater role in bringing about peace or pressuring Vietnam to withdraw from Kampuchea.

China: The increased influence of Vietnam and the Soviet Union in this part of the world has resulted in China being surrounded by these two countries. That is, none of the countries around China, which includes the Soviet Union, Vietnam, India, Laos and Mongolia, has friendly feelings toward China. This has obstructed China's communications, especially its sea communications. In not too long, this will begin to weaken China. Thus, since the course of the struggle in Vietnam has a chance to shift with Democratic Kampuchea gaining an advantage over Vietnam, this will enable China to increase its influence and again play a role in Kampuchea. This will in turn enable China to interfere in Laos and Vietnam by using Kampuchea as a bridge in spreading its influence.

However, concerning the benefits that will accrue to these countries, there is still an important problem and that is Vietnam's attitude of preventing the repatriation of these Kampucheans.

Beware, War Is Ahead

Concerning the repatriation of Khmer refugees, actually, this is not the first time that people have been repatriated. At the beginning of June 1979, the Thai government of General Kriangsak Chamanan repatriated more than 30,000 Kampucheans. This resulted because the aid received from foreign countries to help Thailand look after the refugees decreased so much that Thailand was no longer able to bear this burden. The result was that foreign countries increased the aid given to Thailand. And in June 1980, Thailand repatriated more than 10,000 Kampucheans, most of whom were members of the Khmer Rouge. They joined the forces of Pol Pot and fought against Vietnam. Vietnam strongly protested against this and finally invaded Thailand in the Non Mak Mun area. Both sides suffered heavy losses (for the details of this, please see the 11 July 1981 edition of PATINYA: "Vietnam Invades Thailand: War or Political Trick?")

The Non Mak Mun affair took place because Thailand repatriated Kampuchean refugees in order to increase the military capabilities of the Khmer Rouge, which led to a small war between Thailand and Vietnam. And it is just this that many people are afraid of. They are afraid that Thailand's repatriation of Kampucheans in order to increase the combat strength of the Khmer coalition government will lead to another border clash between Thailand and Vietnam just as happened on 22 June 1980.

"I do not think that Vietnam will dare to attack Thailand this time. At present, our combat forces are on the alert. During the joint combat exercises at the end of May, which were conducted in this area, we put almost all our heavy weapons in place, including the artillery and tanks that we received from the United States, which have greater capabilities that those of Vietnam. Thus, Vietnam will not dare to attack us," said a high-ranking officer to PATINYA.

However, since the three Khmer factions established a loose coalition government, Vietnam has shown a much harder attitude. This can be seen in the statement by Nguyen Co Thach, who said that "Vietnamese troops have been trying to avoid pursuing the Khmer Rouge across the border into Thailand. But from now on, we will no longer worry about this." In addition, Vietnam has moved more men and heavy artillery into the Thai border area. It cannot be denied that this change in the situation could lead to a clash along the Thai-Kampuchean border at any time as long as the two sides continue to challenge each other and risk a disaster. Concerning this, Sihanouk is well aware of the fact that Vietnam may take large-scale military action, which would result in his forces suffering heavy losses. Thus, he sent a telegram from Peking to General In Tam, his right-hand man, and to Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the Thai minister of foreign affairs, asking them to halt the repatriation of Kampucyean refugees for the time being.

The Conclusion

National security is the most important thing for the country. And anything that makes the country safer and more secure is something that the government should do immediately. But in taking action, things should not be done in such haste that [we] neglect to look at things from all sides.

In principle, the repatriation of the refugees should benefit all sides. The Kampucheans will be able to return to their motherland and Thailand will be able to greatly reduce its responsibility for the refugees. But the thing that Thailand must be well aware of is that such action in a time of crisis may pose a danger to the country and this should be avoided. Besides this, concerning the various things that may happen, the government should always inform the people, the owners of the country, ahead of time. Even if something unexpected occurs, the people, who understand what caused this to happen, will be able to control the situation and not let things go too far. Otherwise, those with bad intentions toward the country may be able to use this and lead the country into a war that would be disastrous for all sides concerned.

This path to war is short and it is easy to reach that point. This is opposite from the path to peace, which is long and which is a great challenge to the abilities of the government. But the result is real peace and security for the country.

DETAILS OF KING'S ILLNESS REPORTED

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 22-28 Aug 82 pp 26-30

[Article: "The King's Illness"]

[Excerpts] When the Bureau of the Royal Household announced that the king was ill, the people became very alarmed. At the same time, there were many rumors concerning the nature of the illness and this caused much suspicion among the people. As a newspaper that is responsible for presenting the facts, SU ANAKHOT has tried to learn the facts about the king's illness and present them to the people. This is because we do not want the people to have any doubts about the nature of the king's illness. Thus, SU ANAKHOT is presenting the facts for readers so that readers will know the facts in detail.

Mycoplasmal Pneumonia

During the past 2 to 3 years, the mycoplasmal pneumonia organism has spread widely in the Khmer refugee camps in Sa Kaeo District, Prachinburi Province. This is a virus-bacteria-like organism that is difficult to obtain a culture on. It is difficult to obtain a definite diagnosis by checking the blood. It usually takes awhile before definite results can be obtained. The spread of mycoplasmal pneumonia at the Khmer refugee camps was reported only recently by Dr Amphon Sukhonthaman, of the Faculty of Medicine, Chulalongkorn University. This report stated that both doctors and nurses working at the camps have come down with pneumonia. One nurse has died form this disease.

The Beginning of the Illness

The king went to visit the people, soldiers, policemen and others working in Sa Kaeo District, Prachinburi Province, on 1 July 1982. After visiting soldiers and policemen, he went and visited the Khmer refugee camps in this area. After returning from Prachinburi, he worked very hard and did not rest at all. He was also in the rain and sun a lot and this weakened him since he had to work so hard. Then on 8 July 1982, the king went to give degrees to approximately 2,000 graduates at Mahidol University. This took 4 hours. While giving the degrees, his nose became congested and he felt discomfort. But he did not tell anyone. On 9 July, he carried on activities as usual.

Then on 10 July 1982, he went to attend the funeral of Siri Sarasin at Wat Thepsirin. Smoke from the royal flame was blown to where he was and he breathed much smoke into his lungs. He had already begun to show signs of being ill and breathing the smoke increased the infection in his lungs.

After returning from the funeral of Lady Siri Sarasin, that night, he had a slight fever and so he asked Dr Danai Sanitwong Na Ayuthaya, his regular physician, to come examine him. The doctor examined him and diasnosed his illness as influenza. This is because the initial symptoms of mycoplasmal pneumonia resemble those of influenza. The Bureau fo the Royal Household thus had to issue a statement to inform the people in order to cancel the king's regular activities.

Symptoms

On the evening of 10 July, the king had a very high fever. The doctor gave him some medicine to lower his fever. But the fever did not go down. On 11 July 1982, even though he still had a fever, he went to work on the second floor of the Amphonsathan radio station. The queen was very worried by the king's fever and so she asked him to return to his room and rest. That night, his temperature rose to 39 degrees centigrade.But his regular doctor did not suspect that he was suffering from some other illness. On 12 July 1982, his fever began to subside somewhat and this made his doctor feel better.

Further Symptoms

On 13 July 1982, the king's fever rose sharply again, reaching 41-42 degrees. He also began to cough a lot and his pulse became irregular. Dr Danai Sanitwong Na Ayuthaya contacted the senior doctor, Lieutenant General Chinda Sanitwong Na Ayuthaya, and asked him to examine the king. Both doctors agreed that it was necessary to assemble a medical team to treat the king since there were cardical symptoms. At that time, the doctors did not yet suspect that he had pneumonia. They still thought he was suffering from influenza and had an ordinary case of bronchitis with caridical complications. During the middle of the night of 13 July, the king's condition worsened. And on the morning of 14 July 1982, the doctor took an x-ray of his lungs. This showed that the king had a severe inflammation of the lungs. Following this, a cardiologist gave him an electrocardiogram and this showed that he had cardical complications, with the indication being cardiopericarditis. The symptoms were very serious. At that time, the king complained of feeling very tired and of a rapid pulse. The doctors gave him an injection but his condition did not improve.

The Formation of a Medical Team

Since the condition of the king had worsened, the prime minister, in his capacity as head of the Bureau of the Royal Household, formed a medical team. Dr Sem

Phringphuangkaeo, the minister of public health, served as the head of the team, which was composed of Dr Kalayanakit Kittiyakon form the Faculty of Medicine, Ramathibodi Hospital, who is a heart surgeon, Dr Songkhram Sapcharoen, a lung specialist and the director of the Chonlaprathan Hospital, Dr Saman Trakunthim, a lung specialist from the Ministry of Public Health, Dr Udomphon Kasemsan, a cardiologist, Dr Chotbun Buranawet, Lieutenant General Chinda Sanitwong, Dr Danai Sanitwong Na Ayuthaya, Dr Choetchai Chiemchaisi, the assistant director of the Pra Monguy Khlao Hospital and Dr Thongchai Wannasiri.

The medical team held a meeting to discuss the king's condition. After discussing his condition, they administered a saline solution intravenously. The medical team felt that his illness was definitely a type of pneumonia. The pneumonia could have been brought on by a bacteria or virus, of which there are various types. Or he may have contacted mycoplasma pneumonia, a disease that he had had before in 1975 at Phuphing Rachaniwet Palace in Chiang Mai Province. But the medical team did not make a definite diagnosis as to which organism was involved since they could not prove for sure which organism had caused the king's illness. They decided to give him antibiotics.After the medical team gave him the medicine, the king said that he could now breathe more easily. His temperature at that time was 41-42 degrees; this greatly alarmed the medical team. But after the medical team gave him the medicine, the fever subsided and his pulse was more regular. On the evening of 14 July 1982, the team of doctors and nurses stayed in his bedroom and monitored his condition closely.

Watched Closely by Family

During the time that the king was sick, the queen and Princess Rattana Ratchasuda stayed near him, never leaving his bedroom. As for the Crown Prince, he had been in Chiang Mai Province practicing flying F5 aircraft since the beginning of July. When he learned of the king's illness, he returned to Bangkok, arriving at 2100 hours on 14 July 1982. The Crown Prince went to see the king. The queen, Crown Prince and princess watched over the king together and discussed matters together like a family in a time of crisis. As for Princess Chulaphon, because she was pregnant, the medical team recommended that she not enter the bedroom of the king. They were afraid that she would contact the disease from the king and that this would endanger her child. The same recommendation was given to Flying Officer Wirayut Ditsayasin. If he entered the bedroom of the king, he could spread the organism to Princess Chulaphon. The medical team thus definitely recommended that he not go into the king's bedroom.

Preparing For a Crisis

On the evening of 14 July 1982, because the king was very sick, several close relatives went to Chitlada Palace in order to wait for news of the king's condition. Also waiting in the auditorium of Chitlada Palace were General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister, Air Chief Marshal Harim Hongsakun, the president of parliament, several of the deputy prime ministers, General Athit Kamlangek, the assistant commander in chief of the army, high-ranking officers and royal councilors. They waited all night for news of the king's condition. General Prem Tinsulanon waited all night in the palace auditorium for news of the king's condition, never leaving the palace until the morning of 15 July when he went straight to the Government House. During the night of 14 July, the king's condition was very alarming. The Supreme Patriarch and Somdet Phra Tan Sangwon frequently contacted the palace. The Supreme Patriarch was so alarmed that he sent the Council of Elders to watch over the king. That same night, the Capital Guards Force was put on alert.

Even Though He Was Seriously Ill, He Maintained His Concentration

On the night of 14 July, the king's condition was very serious. He perspired profusely because of his high fever. His clothing had to be changed and he had to be sponged off every 15-20 minutes. And his bedsheets had to be changed every 15-20 minutes too since they were wet from the perspiration. The king felt very uncomfortable; he tossed and turned constantly during the night of 14 July. The king constantly listened to the tape of a sermon by Somdet Phra Yan Sangwon concerning keeping one's equanimity. He also listened to the tape of a sermon by Somdet Phra Maha Wirawong, who resides at Wat Racha Phatikaram. He would rest for only 10 to 15 minutes and then wake up again. On awaking, he again listened to the tape on equanimity and practiced maintaining concentration when he felt ill. This is why he was always able to remain calm and did not act restless. He cooperated completely with the medical team when they gave him the intravenous saline solution, when he was given injections and when blood samples were taken. He did not complain or cause the medical team any trouble at all.

He Was In a Humorous Mood

On 15 July, his fever began to subside and his pulse was slower. But the other symptoms were still present. On the morning of 16 July, the medical team was pleased by the fact that the king's pulse was again normal and there was no sign of any heart abnormality. His temperature was about normal. During this period, chest x-rays were taken daily, and EKGs were taken regularly. While he was being monitored, or having EKGs taken, it turned out that his heart did not beat "in time" and since the king is a musician, he said that the rhythm of his heartbeat was like a 5/4 beat in music. He said that after he recovered, he would compose a song in 5/4 rhythm entitled "High Fever."

A Rash

On 18 July, after the fever had subsided, another complication arose. He developed a rash all over his body. His entire body was reddish. The medical team brought in a dermatologist from Chulalongkorn Hospital to help treat this. At the same time, the king's white blood count fell and this greatly alarmed the medical team.

As for the rash that developed, neither the dermatologist nor the medical team could determine for certain whether the king had had an allergic reaction to the medicine given to him or whether this was a symptom of mycoplasmal pneumonia. The doctors took blood samples and sent them to the Siriraj Hospital, the Chulalongkorn Hospital, Denmark and the United States for analysis. The U.S. Embassy in Thailand provided good support and cooperation. It provided a special airplane to take the blood sample for analysis. The medical team sent blood samples abroad for analysis because they wanted to identify the organism for certain since during the first 7 days they had not been able to identify the organism. Thus, they had been treating the illness more or less by guesswork. However, since his condition had improved, with the fever subsiding, the pulse returning to normal and the "phra kansa" declining, the medical team stopped giving him antibiotics and had him take only the medicine for his heart. During this period, blood samples of 50-100 CCs had to be taken almost daily. During his illness, the king constantly maintained a humorous mood. His concentration was good. His mood was bright and he bantered with the medical team when his condition had improved. He kidded by saying that this medical team practiced an ancient type of medicine, saying that they did not give any medicine but only drew blood.

During this period when his condition began to improve, he was very worried about the queen mother. He was afraid that if the queen mother learned about his condition, she would become very worried. He thus asked Somdet Phra Chao Phi Nang Thoe and Chao Fa Kalayaniwattana, who had been watching over him every day for 2-3 hours, to go inform the queen mother, who was then in Switzerland, that there was nothing to worry about.

Rumors

At a time when the people were very worried about the king's condition, some groups with bad intentions toward the well-being and security of the country spread bad rumors about the king and the royal family.

These rumors were spread in a systematic and continuous way. Leaflets and underground documents were sent to the newspapers and various sectors of the mass media and even to important government locations such as parliament, ministries and departments and educational institutions at all levels. Besides this, people were sent to spread rumors at private business institutions and at public places such as commercial banks and private hospitals. Those spreading the rumors claimed to be poeple who were close to events or relatives of those involved depending on how they wanted to "pass themselves off." These rumors spread quickly. Even while the king was still ill, these rumors reached the king himself and he even read at least 20 of these illegal leaflets and underground documents written by these ill-intentioned people. And even though people made an attempt to correct these rumors, the king, reposing in a state of equanimity, said "never mind. Let them go ahead and spread rumors. Nothing needs to be corrected."

More Worried About His Work Than About Himself

The king was very worried about the work that he had left unfinished. Even though the doctors suggested that he rest as much as possible in order to recover his health, he continued to call in people to discuss the various projects that were underway. He considered matters and asked that things be carried out in accord with the decisions. Mom Chao Chakraphan Phensiri Chakraphan, a councilor, led a group of high-ranking government officials from the Irrigation Department to see him in order to get his opinion about some of the projects of the Irrigation Department that had not been finished. He signed the Royal Act to close parliament and did all the work given to him by his secretary. Even though high-ranking monks told him that he should rest and not engage in any work for the time being and gave him sermons to help relieve his illness, the king continued to be more worried about his work than his health and made preparations to go out into the countryside to carry on activities when he had recovered.

Government Sectors Correct the Rumors

As for the various rumors, SU ANAKHOT asked the Office of the Prime Minister and the Bureau of the Royal Household what action would be taken. High-ranking officials from both the Office of the Prime Minister and the Bureau of the Royal Household replied that, concerning these rumors, many people had become very concerned. They wrote letters and sent telegrams to the Bureau of the Royal Household and to the Office of the Prime Minister asking that these rumors be corrected.

But neither the Office of the Prime Minister nor the Bureau of the Royal Household felt that these rumors were true. They did not feel that any importance should be attached to these rumors by issuing a statement of denial since such an action might benefit these ill-intentioned poeple. They felt that it would be like getting caught in a trap set by these people.

However, as for all the rumors in this period, SU ANAKHOT does not feel that this matter can be turned over to the government alone to handle. All the people are responsible for blocking such rumors by considering the various reports carefully and seriously. People must not fall victim to the rumors and allow the rumors to destroy everything to the point where things cannot be corrected.

ACCUSED TORTURER STATES VIEWS ON CPT ACTIVITY, LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 16 Aug 82 p 2

[Interview with Charun Chamrak, the district officer in Sawang Daen Din District and the commander of Forward Operations Headquarters at the Chaloemphon Camp in Sakon Nakhon Province; date not specified]

> [Text] Mr Charun Chamrak, age 44, is married to Mrs Sanong Chamrak and has two children. He received his BA degree in law from Thammasat University. He once worked as a teacher and first served as deputy district officer in Khirimat District, Sukhothai Province. He then served in Na Kae District in Nakhon Phanom Province, Muang District in Kanchanaburi Province, So Phisai and Song Dao districts in Sakon Nakhon Province and Sawang Daen Din District. He was recognized as the outstanding district officer 3 years in a row. Besides this, he is a combat district officer. Two MPs from Sakon Nakhon Province have charged that he has tortured people suspected of engaging in communist activities. MATUPHUM met him when he was being welcomed by a large crowd of villagers at the Chaloemphon Camp in Sakon Nakhon Province.

[Question] Concerning the charges by MPs from Sakon Nakhon Province that you have oppressed and killed people, what is the truth about this?

[Answer] As for the truth about this, the truth is that the villagers in this area, that is, in Sawang Daen Din, Song Dao and Waritchaphum, love me very much because no one has ever given them the help that I have. Regardless of what it is, if it is possible for me to help, I do so.

Since the election is approaching, the MPs are afraid that I will run for election or that I will not support them in their bid for election to parliament. I think that this is what has happened.

Another matter that I have thought about is the matter of interests. I always consider the interests of the majority of the people in making a decision. If somwething does not harm the interests of the people, I try not to get involved But if the interests of the people are affected -- for example, in the past

MPs wanted to build a road already planned in the KSC project and villagers complained -- I must listen to the villagers. [The MPs] cannot expect me to agree with them.

And their attitude is that I must agree with whatever they want to do. But if the people do not agree, I cannot help them.

The most important matter concerns timber. That is, we affirm that the government wants the people to have a good standard of living. If the people are to live comfortably, they must build houses. We ignore the fact that people cut timber to build houses. But some people want to profit by smuggling timber and selling it. We have to arrest such people and prosecute the case.

These are the main reasons why I have been attacked. Other matters should not be a problem.

[Question] As for the government, it seems that things are being done at cross purposes. Do you think that pressure can be exerted to have things carried out cooperatively?

[Answer] Its like this. The administrative system has two forms. The first is called the top-down system. That is, if there is a need, orders are sent down.

The CPT calls this fulfilling one's own wishes.

The other system is known as the bottom-up system, from the bottom to the top in two directions.

We hold to the parliamentary way, that is, moving up from the masses, or people. This is the correct way in a community or nation. In any system, if it is a top-down type system, that system will not last very long. This can be seen in both Fascist and Marxist systems. Any system in which orders come from the top will last only temporarily. Things must come from the bottom.

[Question] As a government official, have you been able to sort out the problems of government officials and determine what they are?

[Answer] As for present problems, we can separate them as follows:

The foremost problem is that government officials are not very serious about their duties. They do the work, but not enthusiastically. That is, they work like bar girls who sit around waiting for time to pass and then collect their salaries.

Another problem is that the bureaucracy is like a person who has been enclosed in a shroud and bound hand and foot. Government officials are afraid of everything. They are afraid that they will be blamed, as I have been blamed. They are so afraid that they do not dare do anything. They are even afraid to criticize druken officials who work in the district and criticize the people. I cannot work in such a situation. Or take the problem of rice prices being high, [we] have to wait to purchase rice form the storehouse organization.

But why should we have to wait? What can we do to put Kennedy's principle into action. He asked what he could do for the United States, not what the United States could do for him.

These days, I am applying this principle in my work. As a governmetn official who lives off tne taxes paid by the people, I think about how I can help the country. I do not think about getting a salary increase. There is no need for alarm or impatience. Even if I am criticized, I must work hard.

[Question] Since this has happened, what are your feelings about this?

[Anwer] As a person who is responsible for carrying out things, I know that I cannot please everyone. There will be some who hate me. This is only natural since their interests have been affected. But I have stayed calm because I think that this is a common matter in a selfish society that lacks moral principles.

[Question] What principles do you hold to in your work so that you can reach the villagers in order to solve all the problems?

[Answer] My principle is that [before] taking any kind of action, we first have to gather data and get the opinions and feelings of the people.

For example, data are obtained from the kamnans, from the members of the Village Scouts and Volunteer Defense Corps, from the teachers and from the psychological operations teams that go into the villagers.

As for myself, at the office, I have placed my desk in the front area so that when people come to the district office, they meet me first.

But if there are not too many people, I go and visit the villages. This is not usually done in other districts.

As for solving the various problems, such as suppressing gambling, if we know that much gambling goes on in a certain village, I do not send in the police or go there myself to arrest people. We must gather opinions and find out what most of the people in the village think about gambling. We hold a conference to express ideas in a democratic way.

If more than half the people in the village want to have gambling, we allow them to go ahead and gamble. Its up to the local authorities. If their police go make arrests, that is their business.

But if the majority of the people say that gambling is not good, we have to provide help. They msut investigate and see who is gambling and give them a warning. If these people do not heed the warning, they are arrested. But if there is any fear of danger, they can inform us and we will make the arrests.

It is the same in suppressing the communist terrorists. If a village is under the influence of the communist terrorists, we hold a conference and ask the people if they would like to be comunist terrorists. If they do, they can say so. If they want to live in a democracy, they can express their opinion.

In every village where we go, if we finish the work, there will not be any communist terrorists in the area. This is the principle that I use.

[Question] It has been said that our democratic system is continually on the verge of collapse because the military has continually interfered. If this is the case, how can we prevent this from happening?

[Answer] I am really a civilian, but I also serve as the base commander. My personal view is that this is misunderstood. Normally, if we study history so that we understand things clearly, the military is responsible for defending the country. They have always been aware of their duty and have not wanted to interfere in other things.

But as for people intefering and upsetting things. this has happened to us many times in the past because our MPs have caused it to happen by causing trouble in parliament. The reason is that they have wanted to make money in order to make themselves more important. There are very few MPs who hold to the ideal of making sacrifices for the country.

When it reaches this point, there is no unity in parliament and these people try to involve the various institutions and the military.

The country is in a bad situation and the military has to set rules and regulations. But that is not their desire.That is my opinion.

In my view, the real foundation is the people. If the people understand, if they have ideals and if they are familiar with the election process and elect good representatives, problems such as this will not arise.

We can see that, at present, the military itself is tired of being drawn into things. The good MPs are tired of this too. This can be seen from the fact that they have announced that they will not run for election again because they are tired. The intellectuals too are tired of this.

[Question] Based on what you have done in suppressing the communist terrorists can you say whether people have fled into the jungle to join the CPT because there has been a decline in ideals or is it because the government has not implemented democracy and living conditions are not good enough?

[Answer] As for people going into the jungle and joining the CPT, blaming the government or anyone else is not right. State officials should not be blamed because this is too narrowminded.

In my opinion, this concerns the class problem, which exists in all societies. There are classes in all societies -- the wealthy class, the poor class, the laborers, the intellectuals.

In a short summary, [it can be said that] we must close the gap. If we can do so and if we succeed in bringing about mutual understanding and cooperation, I think that we can solve this problem. Concerning what we have done, 300-400 people have surrundered. The thing that I am constantly aware of is that I am not part of any class. I am the district officer and do not belong to anyone. I am the district officer of all the people. I am not the district officer of some higher ranking person or of anyone else.

The words "district officer of the people" mean that when the majority of the people say something or view something a particular way, I must respond to their desires. When we reach a certain point, the merchants....Previously, people said that it was difficult to get along with the merchants here. When I first arrived, I believed this. But now I think that we understand each other.

As for the poor people in Sawang Daen Din, I think they are very wonderful people. As a concrete example, we formed a Volunteer Defense Corp unit. I obtained money for their unit so that money could be disbursed during periods when they were having problems or being persecuted. Whenever I have asked merchants to help, they have helped. This is the role of state power in serving as the link between the various classes. We are the link between the poor and the secure and between the uncultured and the cultured. [If] we can coordinate the activities, ideas and interests, these problems will disappear.

Like the CPT problem. In my view, this is a problem of there being a gap between the classes. If I, as the state power here, can be the link, I guarantee you that this problem will disappear.

[Question] There are people who feel that the people in the jungle did not flee there because of government policies but because of ideological differences. What is your view on this?

[Answer] I do not agree with either position. As for ideological differences, I do not believe that they left because of this since everyone wants to be beautiful, wealthy and powerful.

As for these ideological differences, actually there have been major conflicts. Those who failed to gain power left. There is no other reason.

The government is the same. I do not agree with their leaving and then surrendering. The government does not have a good policy. I feel that, in society, there must be a struggle for power, to gain more power and be richer than other people. This is natural in society.

But then, instead of saying "I" want to have this and that, they said that they would have to do this and that under their leadership in order for the country to prosper. But what has been recognized is that the members of the CPT who have returned home returned to their homes and are struggling to make a living. The great changes in themselves and their families are correct.

The government must help these people. I am in the middle. I do not agree with Thais killing each other just because they do not have power.

Thais should be friendly with each other because, at present, just look around the country. What are the problems? Those people are ready to suppress us. Thus, as Prime Minister Kriangsak said, we do not have time to argue among ourselves. They [the communists] should return. No one has won or lost. It is not a matter of the government being clever and the CPT not being clever and their having to return. Both sides are composed of Thais. They should return to take part in making their family and personal revolutions strong. In this way, the community will grow.

[Question] When the CPT held its Fourth Party Congress, it affirmed that it would continue the armed struggle in coordination with carrying on a struggle in the cities and that it would not carry on the struggle peacefully as many groups wanted. Since this is the case, what can you do?

[Answer] We think that we can do so. Even though the congress indicated that the CPT will continue to use a policy of violence, that is, that state power comes from the barrel of a gun, we are confident because Thais believe in Buddhism and are religious at heart. When we talk about this, we have to use the strongest tie of the Thai people, that is, blood relations. When someone, Thai or Moslim, goes into the jungle, we have their relatives go talk with them.

These Thais will not kill or betray them because they are relatives.

It is not necessary to give any guarantees.We have to use this strong point to talk together.

As for their indicating that they will have to use violence, I do not think that they can. Because how can a son kill his father. At present, we are using their fathers to go talk with them; I don't go. A son would not dare kill his father. Even if their superiors order them to kill everyone and forbids them from having any contact, if a father goes to visit his son and a mother cries in front of her son, the son will immediately have a change of heart. No son could fail to love his mother. We must study things like this.

As for their indicating that they will use violence, I think they should be allowed to go ahead and say such things. But I do not think they can do so. However, we should not be fooled by them. We must pull them in our direction. We must not allow this congress to pull us in their direction. They must follow our path; we must not follow theirs.

But at present, I will say frankly that the [CPT] members in the jungle knew that this would be the recommendation. About 60-70 percent came out at "Phu Saklak." All said that even though they had planned to come out later on, they couldn't wait. About 30 percent are left.

I have asked them why. They said they had to wait for the congress. I asked them if they were certain that, once the congress was over, they would struggle to seize power. They said they were not certain. But they have continued living like that because they have been there a long time and are afraid of this and that. They have no buffaloes or land to farm. Those who have been in the jungle for a long time have taken their children into the jungle too and many have died. It is hard for them to leave but they will probably do so very soon.

[Question] You don't think that they are still holding to their principles?

[Answer] Some, but not many. Take Zone 555, for example. We can see clearly that Mr Than has not changed his thinking. His world view is still very narrow. He is a Maoist, which means that he follows the book exactly. He does not accept what anyone else says.

In the jungle, they call them single-minded. They follow what Mao said "to the letter." They are not concerned about what other people have to say.

In our area, we call such people dinosaurs. Because those who are narrowminded and have a narrowminded world view will soon become extinct.

[Question] Which things that you have done in your work are you most proud of and excited about?

[Answer] I am excited about many things, the clashes with the terrorists and meeting with them, although not drinking with them. And there is the matter of complaints being lodged. The people gathered together. I was very excited. Over 10,000 people gathered together.

I asked all those who loved me to return home. And all 10,000 went home. Human hearts are very hard; who can be sure of trust. And I am not sure I could do the same thing again.

[Question] Concerning the matter of this complaint, weren't you afraid of their influence?

[Answer] No. I wasn't afraid of their influence. Because I know who I am working for. I am working in the interests of the poeple and my foundation is the people. Thus, there is nothing to be afraid of.

I am satisfied with what I have because the people have arranged everything. This includes us. The people have told us not to worry. If government officials cannot support themselves, they will support them.

As for the threat of someone hiring a gunman to come kill me if I do not move within 24 hours, this is a common matter. This has happened to me so frequently that I ignore it now. Because whom do we act, speak and think for? For ourselves or for the majority?

If [you] do something for the people, do not be afraid after you do it. And if you are afraid, do not do it.

[Question] Have you ever considered getting into politics?

[Answer] Never. Many people have asked me and spoken to me about this. In particular, the villagers have told me that if I were to run for MP, they would support me.

But I said no. I would like to compare being an MP with being a tree that cannot bear fruit. Once elected, to have a chance to form a government, you have to have a majority of the seats. If your party has few seats, you cannot do anything.

But as a district officer, wherever I go to speak, the people stop to listen and they believe me. I have a chance to build democracy and political idealism. This is of more use than being an MP.

This means that I can be of greater use as a district officer than as an MP. Thus, I do not intend to enter politics. I wouldn't do so even if you paid me a lot money. What I want to do most in my life is be a district officer.

COLUMNIST: THAIS CAN ONLY BLAME SELVES IF KHMER COALITION FLOPS

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 22 July 82 p 5

[Column by Suret Buachat: "It Will Take a Lot Longer to Unite the Kampucheans"]

[Text] It is certain that none of those who exerted pressure on the three Khmer factions, that is the Khmer Seri of Son Sann, the Moulinaka faction of Prince Sihanouk and the Khmer Rouge of Pol Pot, are satisfied with the announced list of those who are in the new Khmer government that has been set up in the jungle near, although not right next to, the Thai border.

Concerning the new Khmer coalition government, which was formed in order to oppose Vietnam, there is nothing to show that any important changes have been made, except the formation of a "loose coalition," which was discussed previously when several members of Asean tried to prod the leaders of the three Khmer factions to sit down at the table together.

Why haven't there been any new changes? A general answer is that the leaders of the three factions still do not get along with each other and they are still trying to preserve the interests of their own faction and gain more than the other factions.

The Khmer Rouge continues to be the only faction that must go out into the jungles to fight the Vietnamese troops and the forces of the Heng Samrin government.

The Khmer Seri will probably continue to engage in both secret and open trading activities along the Thai border.

Sihanouk's Moulinaka faction will probably do very little, just as before. None of its members have ever done much. Most of them are still living abroad and they are not very adept at fighting or anything else except talking and writing.

They were able to unite because of the prestige of Sihanouk in the eyes of many countries. In particular, it was the Asean countries that pushed him into the national political arena again.

Besides the Asean countries, looking closely, it can be seen that no other country, either large or small, really supported Sihanouk's return this time, and this includes the United States and China.

One country that did support this was Thailand. But this was because of "national interests," which we hold above all else. Adn we had lost all hope of finding anyone else to fight Vietnam in the form of a buffer state.

Many countries have been supporting the Khmer Rouge both secretely and openly even though each country recoils from the genocidal behavior of the Khmer Rouge.

The countries that have supported the Khmer Rouge, either through Thailand or directly, include China, Italy, Japan, Sweden and Australia. Besides China, which has given greater support than any of the others and which has given all types of support, including weapons, clothing and food, the other countries have given mostly food and medicines.

Concerning this aid given to the Khmer Rouge, it can be said that this amounted to recognizing the Khmer Rouge in addition to simply showing a humanitarian feeling, which is an ordinary matter.

China has given the Khmer Rouge such full and close support that it can be said that the Kampuchean people in the liberated zones of the Khmer Rouge and even the Khmer Rouge soldiers are in many ways living like Chinese.

The Khmer Rouge leaders who will really endure do not include Pol Pot or Khieu Samphan. This is because Pol Pot was "ruined" by the killings of his fellow countrymen and Khieu Samphan is sick.

The real leaders of the Khmer Rouge at present who are capable men include Son Sen on the military front and Ieng Sary on the economic and foreign affairs fronts.

Of the three Khmer factions, the group in the worst condition is the Khmer Seri of Son Sann, who has constantly received secret support from the United States. This is true even though this fact on has been given its "share" of ministerial positions and Son Sann is the prime minister.

Those at the top, or at the forefront, of the Khmer Seri are people who hold extreme right-wing views. Most once worked as businessmen and traders and many of them are still engaged in such activities.

And there are the Kampucheans who left their homeland a long time ago and went and settled down abroad. There are also the people who went abroad to study for advanced degrees and who have long been out of touch with the events that have taken place in their country.

From what has been shown above, it can be seen that the group best suited to oppose the Vietnamese is the Khmer Rouge.

The weakness of the Khmer Rouge is the matter of their "redness." This is an image that countries that hold right-wing political views and that hate "red" fear greatly, as if it were a disease that they cannot come in contact with.

As for the enormous amount of criticism to the effect that Thailand is getting too involved in this and is inviting the enemy into the house or that Thailand has welcomed Prince Sihanouk with too much fanfare, if we consider things from the standpoint of geography and political histroy, it can be seen that Thailand does not have any other choice. This is the policy that had to be implemented, regardless of whether there are differences of opinion among the leaders of Thailand, particularly in the military and civilian camps.

Thailand has chosen not to have any more friendly dealings with Vietnam. From now on, we will fight with or argue with them and we will do so openly.

This policy was announced unofficially when the Khmer coalition gvoernment that opposes Vietnam and that relies on Thailand convened its last conference and announced that it was at war with Vietnam.

It is true that, for international or regional political circles,the formation of a friendly national representative, or nation that we can talk with, as the country's representative in the United Nations is a legitimate political stratagem and a matter of prestige. But it can be seen that the fact that the Khmer Rouge, which from now on will be known as the Khmer Coalition Government, has held on to its seat in the United Nations will not result in Vietnam withdrawing its forces from Kampuchea or relieve Thailand of having to care for tens of thousands of Kampuchean refugees.

We are entering a path on which it will be difficult to turn back.

As for whether the results will be good or bad, that is a matter for the future. If the results are bad, we cannot blame anyone except ourselves.

This is not a matter of Asean countries taking advantage of each other, or of Sihanouk's insane boldness. It is really a matter concerning Thailand itself.

NORTHEASTERN LITERARY WORK CAUSES CONTROVERSY OVER SEPARATISM

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 26 Jul 82 p 7

[Arts and Culture column by Prathip Chumphon: "'Phun Wiang' and the Problem of National Security"]

[Text] "Phun Wiang" is a literary work from the northeast that provides another view of historical events by a person who was oppressed. Such a work is difficult to find in our ancient literary works.

The events discussed, which took place at the beginning of the Rattanakosin period, include corvee labor, a dispute between the provincial town and the center, the Sa Kiet Ngong rebellion, the rebellion by Prince Anuwong of Vientiane and the war between Thailand and Vietnam.

[A picture of] being called up for corvee labor, being oppressed, being separated from what one loves and being moved from one's native region is reflected in moving and simple words.

As for the interesting aspect of the contents, besides its literary flavor, the historical data, particularly those that conflict with central documents, should be discussed.

"Phun Wiang" should be regarded as a very important document for studies dealing with the history of the early Rattanakosin period, particularly the rebellions by various important people, in order to determine what the "facts" are based on.

The reason that Thai scholars have not shown much interest is that they view this literary work as a Lao literary work. Because of this view, various prejudices have arisen.

What is important is that this document has caused a split between the local area and the center. Some people think that the people who have been involved in studying this document are the ones who want to split the 16 northeastern provinces [from Thailand] and return them to Laos.

People even think that the researchers want to return Pra Kaeo Morakot, the symbol of the Thai nation, to Laos since some parts of Phun Wiang refer to Pra Kaeo Morakot being taken from Vientiane during the reign of King Taksin.

This conflict appeared clearly at a seminar on the history of the northeast that was held in 1979 at Mahasarakham Teachers' College. This resulted in the researchers being viewed as communists, terrorists and foreigners even though the researchers were only trying to determine, in all fairness, who the author of this work was and where he had gotten his data.

Besides this, they studied the disputes between the center and the provincial towns. Since there are records of the same event that differ from each other, this is an advance in scholarship without any hidden prejudices or evil intentions.

All the documents have been treated fairly, with the backgrounds and sources of the documents analyzed. This is a correct research method that is in accord with the principles of scholarship. And neither the Thai side nor the Lao side has been maligned. This includes the proposals made at the National Chot Mai Hak Hall and at the seminar on the history of the northeast and in various writings, including Thawat Phunnosa's [book] "Phun Wiang: an Historical and Literary Study" and my "Phun Wiang, a Literary Work On Oppression."

And these things have led to a debate on problems concerning the literary work Phun Wiang, which will be arranged by the Historical Society of Thailand at the Faculty of Arts, Chulalongkorn University.

At this debate, it is hoped that there will be probing analytical research and scholarly arguments. And it is hoped that those who take part in the debate will not get into a violent disagreement, which could create political divisions or lead to problems concerning the security of the state. These things are dangerous to scholarship and, in particular, to scholars.

The various views on Phun Wiang and the histroy of the early Rattanakosin period will have to be disseminated in a detailed and forthright manner in order to learn what scholars in our country now think about this document.

But this will be discussed next time.

LIMITATION OF TRADE WITH INDOCINA ASSAILED

Bangkok SIAM RAT SAPPADA WICHAN in Thai 22 Aug 82 pp 5, 6

[Article: "Sell Rice to Vietnam; Do Not Just Engage In War"]

[Text] The government has given the green light to selling 48,000 tons of rice to Vietnam. This rice will be sent in four shipments of 12,000 tons each. This information is from a news report from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Security First

In addition to carrying on an international political policy of opposing Vietnam, which invaded a neighboring country in order to become the main power in this region, Thailand is also using economic measures to oppose Vietnam. These measures include not exporting important goods to Vietnam, particularly after the clash along the Thai border in June 1980.

It is common knowledge that this attitude originated from the National Security Council since Squadron Leader Prasong Sursiri, the secretary-general of the National Security Council, has said that Thailand will not sell to Vietnam because it is afraid that [Vietnam] "does not have any money to pay for the goods."

And recently, the secretary-general of the National Security Council reaffirmed his attitude by saying that "concerning the fact that some people are saying that Thailand should sell rice to Vietnam, Thailand will not do this yet. We will wait and watch Vietnam as long as possible."

"Vietnam has said that, before the war to win independence from France, the Vietnamese people ate only one meal a day. But now things are better and they eat two meals a day. We must wait and see what the truth is," said Squadron Leader Prasong.

Rice Won't Be Sold

Rice is an important agricultural product of Thailand, and it is necessary to rely on foreign markets. In the 1981/1982 production season, Thailand experienced a severe export crisis because of the fact that paddy yields here were very high, reaching approximately 17-18 million tons, and rice yields in some countries that had once purchased rice from us rose greatly. This made it necessary for the government to try to export rice using every means available, including lowering rice reserves and opening export markets in Africa. But the domestic situation has not improved. This can be seen from the fact that the farmers are still selling paddy at prices 1,000 baht below the guaranteed price of 3,750 baht per kwian [1 kwian equals 2,000 liters].

And the fact that the government has a policy of not selling rice to the Indochina countries has just made this problem that much worse.

Statistics of the Department of Business Economics, Ministry of Commerce, show that, in 1982, Thailand sold only 1 metric ton of rice, valued at only 3,000 baht, to Vietnam. In the period 1977-1980, the amounts of rice sold to Vietnam were, respectively, approximately 76,461 metric tons valued at 292.6 million baht; 29,498 metric tons valued at 120.2 million baht; 98,442 metric tons valued at 376 million baht; and approximately 50,314 metric tons valued at 225.6 million baht.

As for Laos, Thailand did not sell any rice to them in 1977, 1979, 1980 or 1981. In 1978 we sold them 7 metric tons valued at 44,000 baht.

As for Kampuchea, in 1981, we sold them approximately 12,700 metric tons valued at 87.7 million baht. And in 1977, 1979 and 1980, the amounts of rice sold were, in order, approximately 1,000 metric tons valued at 3.3 million baht; 15,600 metric tons valued at 79.4 million baht; and approximately 11,685 metric tons valued at 70 million baht. No rice was sold to Kampuchea in 1978.

Thailand Loses Profits

Concerning the fact that Thailand has implemented a security policy that hinders trade with the Indochina countries, actually, this policy has not achieved any results because Singpore, which is a member of Asean too, has taken this opportunity to sell rice to Vietnam.

A report from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs states that during the first 7 months of this year, Singapore bought 50,000 tons of rice from Thailand in order to resell it to Vietnam. At the same time, last year, the Soviet Union purchased 277,000 tons from Thailand in order to send it to Vietnam.

Mr Phichai Rattakun, the leader of the Democrat Party and the former minister of foreign affairs, told SAPPADA WICHAN that "Thailand is not selling goods to them because it wants to use this as a weapon to get them to qucikly withdraw their troops from Kampuchea. But actually, although we have not sold things to them, Singapore and the Soviet Union have purchased goods from Thailand and then turned around and sold them to [Vietnam]. They are making large profits from this."

"This policy of Thailand is worthless. We should separate politics from trade," said Mr Phichai.

For Good Relations

Mr Chet Sucharitkun, the director-general of the Information Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, told SAPPADA WICHAN that "concerning rice purchases that have not gone through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the fact is that private companies have received orders from the Soviet Union, which then sends it to Vietnam."

"When Nguyen Co Thach came, he did not mention purchasing rice," said the director-general of the Information Department. "Vietnam has very little foreign currency left. The Soviet Union purchases rice for them and immediately pays for it in cash."

Mr Chet gave his personal view on the matter of selling rice for shipment to Vietnam. He said that as for national security, this would probably not have any effect. But this would have a good economic effect and help stimulate exports and push up paddy prices.

"Selling rice to them will help improve relations between Thailand and Vietnam," said the secretary-general of the Information Department. "This will show Thailand's goodwill."

Textiles Are Still Singing In Waiting

Besides this, textiles, which are a type of product that we normally sell to neighboring countries in large quantities, are still being blocked by the political policy, or national security. Many of the small textile factories have had to shut down or cut back production. This has affected employee layoffs and created labor problems.

Concerning this, in his capacity as president of the Textile Association, Major General Praman Adireksan, the deputy prime minister, sent a petition to the prime minister asking him to review this matter since textile activities had been seriously affected.

Mr Komon Tantiwanit, the manager of the Textile Association, told SAPPADA WICHA that "we have not yet received a reply. We do not know whether the government will change its policy and allow border trade."

"At present, we have many problems. We have been seriously affected because textile markets in neighboring countries are [taking] only about 20 percent of our porduction," said Mr Komon. "Since border trading has been closed, some smuggling may be going on but not much."

Merchants Come Forward

The Thai government is allowing rice to be sold to the Soviet Union for later shipment to Vietnam and this rice is sold through Thai merchants. This is proper because the profits will go to Thais. We should not let Singapore serve as the middleman in this trade because this is not wise and it does not benefit our country at all.

However, besides rice, there are textiles and many otehr types of goods that the military has placed in the category of controlled goods along the border. This matter should be reviewed in the interests of the country's trade.

And if the government is afraid of going against its announced principle of not selling goods to Vietnam, it can let the merchants do so. But in practice, trade should be allowed for the common interests of the country.

NATURAL GAS PROJECT SAID TO HIT SEVERE SNAG

Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Aug 82 p 12

[Article by Jacques de Barrin: "Disappointment for Natural Gas"]

[Text] When underseas natural gas deposits had been opened to development in September 1981, the government had seen in this event the promise of a "bright life" for the Thai people. A serious setabck: on 3 August the American company responsible for the drilling, Union Oil, announced that hydrocarbon reserves in its lease area of Erawan are less than one-third of previous estimates, or 80 billion cubic meters instead of 260 billion.

An underwater gas pipeline (425 km) had begun to pump this natural gas to shore across the Gulf of Thailand. At the outset, this gas was to supply the cement plants and electric power plants in Bangpakong and southern Bangkok which were operating on fuel oil until now. But, Union Oil, which had committed itself to supply 32 million cubic meters per day from the beginning, and then 40 as of July 1982, only succeeded in producing about 10 million cubic meters per day at the beginning of exploration, and barely reached 22.5 million in the second quarter of this year.

For the moment, experts from the Petroleum Authority of Thailand and Union Oil are not capable of giving a clear explanation for this drop in production, or of telling what is due to technical shortcomings, or what to chance. A manager of the American firm limited himself to stating: "Of all of our fields of exploration, this one has been the greatest disappointment."

To compensate for the lack of return, the American company has proposed to the Bangkok authorities to explore new deposits in the Gulf of Thailand and especially to proceed with about 60 additional drilling areas in its Erawan lease area, with the understanding that the company would cover the costs of this investment. Despite everything, were these explorations to prove promising, natural gas production could not reach 32 million cubic meters per day before January 1984 in the opinion of the experts. Will Esso's very encouraging drilling near Khon-Kaen in the northeast of the country provide other guarantees for the future?

Whatever the case, for the moment Thai authorities are refusing to confirm Union Oil's pessimistic conclusions. "This company is not capable of honoring its commitments; other companies could do the work in its place," threatened Mr Chatichai Choonhavan, minister of industry. If the natural gas reserves finally do prove to be less than the estimates, will the government agree to deal amicable with its leaseholder and renegotiate the terms of the contract as the lessee is requesting? Will Thailand be obliged to decrease the "tremendous investments" that it was intending to make to derive the best advantage from its natural gas? In this way Thailand was hoping to reduce imported petroleum's share of its fuel consumption from 75 percent in 1981 to 52 percent in 1986. Beginning with the treatment of this precious fuel, and with the cooperation of foreign countries--Japan in particular--it was planning to develop a vast industrial complex around Rayong, the length of the country's east coast: a deepwater port, petrochemical plants, etc.

Already, construction of one of the two plants for gas separation, with a treatment capacity of 60 million cubic meters per day, is in the process of being negotiated with an American-Japanese consortium. Construction of a fertilizer plant, jointly financed by public and private funds, is also under study. In the longer term--around the 1990's--Bangkok authorities were planning to export liquefied natural gas, which Japan has already said it would buy. Today, others are wondering whether Thailand will have to give up its dream of entering the club of newly industrialized countries before the end of this decade.

FUTURE OF COCOS ISLANDS VIEWED

BK181128 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1110 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Report from the "Australian Insight" program on the future of the Cocos Islands]

[Excerpts] The United Nations has an interest in Cocos because it considers the 300 Malays who have lived there for several generations as an indigenous people. Therefore, under a United Nations resolution they should make an act of self-determination about their future status.

The Australian Government this week sent a minister to find out the wishes of the Cocos Malays. Basically, they have three options: They can seek full independence from Australia or they can opt for integration either as part of an Australian state or part of the Australian capital territory where the capital, Canberra, is situated. The third option is somewhere in between--a form of free association with Australia. This would entail an autonomous state with the islanders managing their own internal affairs and their economy, but with Australia being responsible for the island's foreign affairs and defense.

[Begin recording] There was a definite statement that they do not wish to pursue independence. There was a disposition for integration. [End recording] That's the Australian minister for home affairs and environment, Tom McVeigh, speaking on Cocos after three long sessions with the islanders. He flew there at the request of the foreign minister, Tony Street, who is concerned that Australia should start the process of finding out the islanders' wishes before the United Nations General Assembly begins meeting in New York later this month. In spite of its remoteness, Cocos is important to Australia. Strategically, its airstrip provides a vital link for military and commercial aircraft crossing the Indian Ocean. There's also a $6 million quarantine station where cattle being imported to Australia are held for 90 days to ensure animal diseases are not introduced to Australia. There are two inhabited islands: Home Island where the 300 Malays live along with the shy millionaire Australian, who was born there, called John Clunies Ross. But more about him in a moment. On West Island, live about 250 Australians who work in the territory's administration office or on the quarantine station or the airfield.

In 1974, the United Nations sent a mission from its Decolonization Committee to visit Cocos and the members were not impressed with what they found. The mission reported that there was no such thing as democracy under the Clunies Ross rule. Primary school education was not compulsory; there was no secondary education at all and there was a primitive manner of paying the Cocos Malays with plastic tokens which were redeemable only at the island store--and that happened to be owned by Clunies Ross. The report on the feudal system operating on Home Island embarassed the Australian Government. In 1978, after much bitter haggling, the Australian Government paid John Clunies Ross $6.25 million to buy back his land. The Australian dollar is worth slightly less than the U.S. dollar. The land was handed over to the Malays to work.

The minister for home affairs, Mr McVeigh, whose department administers the territory, made two trips to Home Island during his visit this week. On his second visit there, he and his advisers spent 90 minutes in the Council Chamber with members of the council and the cooperative. Because the islanders don't speak English, the negotiations had to be conducted through an interpreter, but officials told me later that the atmosphere had been extremely friendly. The Cocos Malays are a cautious, conservative people, but it was clear from talking to them that they wanted a minimum of disruption to their lives on Cocos.

I spoke to Mr (Waheen), the chairman of the council, about his talks with Mr McVeigh. Mr (Waheen) said the islanders were extremely happy that they could meet the minister from Australia and grateful that he had come from Canberra to Cocos to see their situation for himself. He said the members of the council and the cooperative had carefully weighed up the advantages and disadvantages of the three choices before them on their future and there would be further discussions among the rest of the Malays on the island.

On West Island, a few Australians privately expressed their concerns to me about the future of Cocos Island. But significantly, none of them would agree to be interviewed. Life in Cocos has its drawbacks because of its isolation and the fact that supplies are flown from Australia only once a fortnight. But as against that, Australians there are paid tax-free salaries and can buy goods duty free. Some people are concerned that integration with Australia might mean the end of that situation. The minister, Mr McVeigh, would not give an assurance on that score when I questioned him. Just before he flew from Cocos on board his Royal Australian Air Force plane, I asked him whether the islands would be integrated with western Australia or with the Australian capital territory.

[Begin McVeigh recording] We didn't get to the stage of integration for electoral purposes. After all, it is only a very minor part. We hope there would be a great deal of self government here and there would only be a very minor need to be represented at the Australian Parliament. But those things are things that will evolve over a period of time. It is more important to get the guidelines and the parameters right in the early stages.

[Question] Will there be further talks in Canberra when the council sends a delegation to Canberra?

[Answer] I have invited them to send a delegation to Canberra. Similarly, they have invited me to come back.

[Question] How do you see the economic future of a state like Cocos Islands?

[Answer] I think the economic possibilities are there.

[Question] Why didn't you meet Mr Clunies Ross?

[Answer] Well, Mr Clunies Ross has already had a discussion with me in Australia. He came over to Australia, I had a long discussion with him. But I didn't come over here to see Mr Clunies Ross. You must remember, of course, that Mr Clunies Ross is a person living privately on part of Home Island. I came over here for discussions with the Cocos Malays in line with the requirements of the United Nations for them to seek self-determination.

[Question] When do you think it is likely that they will make this act of self-determination?

[Answer] Well, they expressed to me a willingness that there had been a long enough delay up to the present and they hoped that I, as the responsible minister, could move forward now with a certain degree of urgency. But, in the final analysis it is for the mission from the United Nations to come here and observe and see for themselves that the local people have reached a consensus.

BRIEFS

ENVOYS TO PHILIPPINES, JORDAN--New Australiam ambassadors have been appointed to the Philippines and to Jordan. A senior career officer of the Department of Foreign Affairs, R.R. Fernandez, is to succeed Richard Woolcott as Australia's ambassador to Manila. Fernandez has served as ambassador in Burma and Yugoslavia and held senior positions in Washington and London before taking up his current post as ambassador to Belgium and the European community. Richard Gate, currently ambassador to Burma, is to become Australia's first resident ambassador to Jordan. [Text] [BK240721 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 23 Sep 82]

FIJI, VANUATU AIR SURVEYS--Australia is carrying out high altitude aerial photographic surveys in Fiji and Vanuatu under the defense cooperation program. Minister for Defense Sinclair said that a six-man Royal Australian Air Force team was using a Lear jet aircraft to undertake air photography of Fiji. At the same time, a four-man army team was using a Beechcraft Queen air to photograph the entire Vanuatu Archipelago. The projects will help Fiji and Vanuatu to update their national maps. INDIA TO CUT JAGUAR JET PRODUCTION

Kathmandu THE RISING NEPAL in English 21 Sep 82 p 6

[Text] New Delhi, (AFP):

India has decided to slash by half production of Anglo-French deep penetration Jaguar aircraft with strategic planners suggesting a balance between the strike aircraft and interceptors, like the French Mirage-2000 for which India has already signed an intent to proceed document, defence officials said here Monday.

The confirmation that New Delhi had decided to cut down the production of Jaguar aircraft from the original 65 to 31, came in a dispatch from the London correspondent of the Indian news agency, PTI Monday.

India and Britain signed a 1.2 billion U. S. dollar contract in October 1978 for the import of 40 fully assembled fly-off condition aircraft, assembly of 45 more in India with the option to produce 65 more under licence here.

The agency report, which is considered reliable, said India was now using the option clause and a new agreement will soon be signed between British Aerospace and the state-owned Indian company—Hindustan Aeronautics Limited—where the aircraft is being assembled and will be eventually produced.

The defence officials who asked not to be identified by name said the present strategic conditions here have led to the government's decision with the planners suggesting that India should have a balance between the two—the deep penetration strike aircraft and the interceptors.

India and France signed the intent to proceed document last April for the purchase of 40 Mirage-2000 by 1984 and the manufacture of 110 more under licence here.

French Defense Minister Charles Hernu, is expected here early next month to formalise the document and fix the delivery schedule, informed sources said.

'INDONESIA TIMES' EDITORIAL WELCOMES PRESS LAW

BK181622 Jakarta INDONESIA TIMES in English 11 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Welcoming Amended, Revised Press Law"]

[Text] On Tuesday the 7th of September 1982, the DPR [Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat--People's Representation Council] approved an amended and revised law on basic provisions for the press. The bill was submitted by the government to the DPR on 31 May 1982.

By amending the law the government and the DPR have fulfilled the guideline of state policy directive that in order to build information and press in the framework of implementing pancasila democracy and to guaranteea healthy growth of a free and responsible press, the law regarding basic provisions of the press had to be revised.

According to the amended press law, the national press has the duty of perpetuating and popularising pancasila, fighting for truth and justice, stimulating the spirit of dedication for national struggle, consolidating national unity and cohesion, deepening national discipline and responsibility, helping to raise the intelligence of the nation, invigorating people's participation in development, and realising a new international order in the field of information and communication.

On the other hand the press is invested with the rights of control, constructive criticism and correction. In exercising its rights and duties, freedom of the press is guaranteed in accordance with its national responsibility.

In the amended law, SIT [Surat Izin Terbit] (letter of publication permit) has been replaced by SIUPP [Surat Izin Usaha Penerbitan Pers] (letter of permit for press publication enterprise). There was strong opinion that SIT limited the freedom of the press.

The old law did not guarantee the commercial and business position of the press. By introducing SIUPP both aspects of the press are guaranteed. We cannot achieve our ideals without a strong and sound economic background. SIUPP is meant to provide such background and harmony, high productivity and efficiency in the press business since it is based on the principle of equitable participation in the management of business among the press members and their leadership.

Nowadays, the information industry is a strong and decisive power which decides much of the fate of a nation in all fields. Because of its strength and influence the press used to be called the fourth estate in the West. For instance it may create an explosive political and economic situation if it reports in an insinuating way. Therefore, if the press and information industry is not well defined and organised it may create havoc in a country. It is liable to be infiltrated and influenced by foreign capital and interests. By introducing SIUPP in the amended law it is hoped that this will be avoided. And SIUPP will guarantee that a press enterprise will become a collective enterprising legal body based on brotherhood among the management, reporters and other workers. Indeed the amended law has made our press acquire a truly national identity. It has entered a new era where it can advance national interest and cope with the regional and international situation. It can cooperate more effectively with the ASEAN press and other press organisations belonging to the nonaligned countries and the developing countries. With the press freedom invested by the amended press law and the awareness of its national and press responsibility, our national press can now contribute to and participate fully in the development drive we are undertaking to attain a just and prosperous pancasila society. The recent remark made by the minister of religious affairs on the so-called "MPR [Majelis Permusyawaratan Rakyat] Koran" or press congress can be, therefore, understood in the context of the amended law, to mean that the freedom of the press to discuss pancasila as the sole basis of political parties, functional groups and mass organisations should not exceed the limit of press ethics and responsibility and insinuate and set groups against one another. The press is free to discuss, to opine and criticise as long as it is healthy, positive and constructive.

This amended press law should be followed as soon as possible by the issuance of necessary rules and regulations on the implementation of the law so that it may start to function as desired by the consensus of the people.

We welcome the amended press law.

FOOD SUBSIDY FUNDS--Jakarta, 17 Sep (AFP)--The Indonesian Government has decided to do away with food subsidies originally scheduled to amount to over $300 million this fiscal year in an effort to cope with sagging exports and the effects of the world recession. Announcing this yesterday, the head of the National Logistics Agency "Bulog," Bustanil Arifin, said the freed amount would instead be used to help finance government development projects.

Bustanil Arifin, who is also junior minister of cooperatives, said the Indonesian economy was facing a "heavy slump" as a result of the world recession and declining oil and non-oil exports. Quoting Bank of Indonesia figures, he said the Indonesian aggregate export figure for the first semester of this year had dipped to slightly over 3 billion from some U.S.$10.3 billion in the same period last year. Oil and natural gas exports for the corresponding first semesters dropped from 3.56 billion to U.S.$6.62 billion and non-energy exports from 2.26 billion to U.S.$1.413 billion. CHEA SIM VISITS MONASTERY IN PHNOM PENH

[Text] Phnom Penh, 22 Sep (SPK)--On 20 September, Chea Sim, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau and chairman of the National Assembly and the KUFNCD Council, visited Unnalaom Monastery in Phnom Penh.

The venerable Tep Vong, vice chairman of the Front Council; Min Khin, acting general secretary of the Front; My Samedi, chairman of the Phnom Penh KUFNCD Committee and dean of the faculty of medicine and pharmacy, accompanied Chairman Chea Sim.
Chea Sim informed the monks about actualities in Kampuchea and emphasized that the successes achieved up to now are due to the efforts of all the people, including monks and intellectuals, and to the disinterested aid of Vietnam and international humanitarian organizations.

He said:

Under the correct leadership of the party and the Front, monks participated in the victorious struggle against the colonialists, the imperialists and the expansionists and are truly participating in the construction of the new life and, with all the people, have made the Kampuchean revolution advance.

Chairman Chea Sim talked about the enemies' maneuvers to sabotage the Kampuchean revolution: forming a political opposition aimed at fooling international opinion, distorting the Kampuchea-Vietnam proletarian internationalist solidarity, creating the so-called "tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea...." Despite their efforts, the enemies will fail in the face of the rock-like union of our people, he affirmed.

The monks of Unnalaom monastery expressed their gratitude to the party and the Front which liberated the nation and returned religious freedom, which was abolished under the genocidal Pol Pot regime, to them. They promised to do everything possible to contribute to the defense and reconstruction of the country in advancing toward socialism.

HENG SAMRIN GREETS NICARAGUAN CHAIRMAN CASTANO

BK151029 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0406 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 15 Sep (SPK)--Heng Samrin, chairman of the Kampuchean Council of State, recently sent his "warmest congratulations" to Bayardo Arrce Castano, chairman of the Nicaraguan Council of State [name and title as received], on the occasion of the 161st anniversary of the Republic of Nicaragua's national independence proclamation.

Chairman Heng Samrin stressed that in the safeguard of national independence and sovereignty and the revolutionary gains, we note with satisfaction that, under the just leadership of the Sandinist Front, the Nicaraguan people have achieved great successes by defeating the perfidious maneuvers of the imperialists and the remnants of Somoza. Faced with threats of aggression from the U.S. imperialists, the Kampuchean people will always be on the side of the fraternal Nicaraguan people to fight against the eventual provocations of the U.S. imperialists and their lackeys.

We are convinced that the fraternal friendship and the militant soladarity between our two countries--wrought from the common struggle against the imperialists, expansionists and international reactionaries--will strengthen further.

On the same occasion, Hun Sen, Kampuchean minister of foreign affairs, also sent congratulations to his Nicaraguan counterpart Miguel D'Escoto.

INFANTRY SCHOOL MARKS FOUNDING OF BULGARIAN ARMY

BK250748 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1200 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] On the afternoon of 23 September 1982, the infantry school held a meeting to mark the founding anniversary of the Bulgarian Army on 23 September 1944. The meeting was held in the presence of Comrade Tea Banh, deputy minister of national defense and deputy chief of the KPRAF general staff; Comrade An Sum, chief of the KPRAF Propaganda and Education Department; Comrade Chey Sangyun of the Combat Planning Department; Comrade Peng Pat, director of the infantry school; Comrade Simeon Dimitrov, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the People's Republic of Bulgaria to the PRK; and cadres from all departments and offices under the Defense Ministry. Also attending the meeting were all the trainees at the infantry school.

First, Comrade Simeon Dimitrov spoke on the development of the Bulgarian Army, which has surmounted all difficulties and built Bulgaria into a socialist country with an advanced industry and modern agriculture, adding that this has enabled the Bulgarian Army to defend its fatherland and contribute to safeguarding peace and security in Europe and the whole world.

In his speech Comrade Tae Banh, deputy minister of national defense and deputy chief of the general staff, acclaimed the heroic model set forth by the Bulgarian Army in its valiant struggle with the support and close cooperation of the heroic Soviet Army, which toppled the fascist regime and brought about the establishment of the People's Republic of Bulgaria on 9 September 1944. Comrade Tae Banh stressed: Our people and entire army warmly support the initiatives of the Soviet Union and the socialist community, including Bulgaria, for the strengthening of peace and security in Europe and the whole world as proved by Comrade Leonid Brezhnev's statement that the Soviet Union will not use nuclear weapons first, that it supports the struggle of the Arab and Palestinian peoples as well as all other people's struggles throughout the world and that it resolutely opposes the U.S. imperialists and the Israeli aggression in Lebanon. Although the PRK and the People's Republic of Bulgaria are far apart, our two peoples and armies have close relations. On 2 December 1979, a high-ranking delegation of the People's Republic of Bulgaria led by Comrade Todor Zhivkov, first secretary of the Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee and chairman of the Bulgarian Council of State, paid an official friendship visit to Kampuchea during which the delegation was warmly welcomed by the Kampuchean people of all strata. A high-ranking PRK delegation led by Comrade Heng Samrin, KPRP general secretary and chairman of the PRK Council of State, visited the People's Republic of Bulgaria from 21-25 November 1980. A high-ranking delegation of the Bulgarian National Assembly recently paid a visit to Kampuchea. Our people and army have the firm conviction that, as in the past, the Bulgarian people and army will always stay by our side. We will strive to learn from the model of heroic struggle, a model full of patriotism and the pure spirit of internationalism set forth by the heroic cadres and combatants of the valiant Bulgarian Army, in fulfilling our national defense and construction tasks in order to turn ourselves into members of a new army loved and trusted by the people.

WEEKLY ANTI-GUERRILLA ACTIVITIES REPORT

BK011046 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1200 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Weekly roundup of KPRAF activities]

[Excerpts] [passage omitted] According to reports we received for the third week of September, our valiant border defense forces defeated all the perfidious maneuvers of the Pol Pot bandits and other reactionaries--lackeys of the Beijing expansionists and U.S. imperialists--who kept sneaking in to disrupt the peaceful life of our people with the backing of the Thai authorities.

Recently, the Thais stirred up trouble by sending their L-19 and F-5 aircraft to violate our airspace 10 times over the sectors between Dangkum and Poipet, and Hill 505 west of Pailin. Furthermore, they made reconnaissance flights between 2 and 4 km deep over our territory in the sectors between Smat Deng and Hill 343 western Pursat Province, and flew seven other reconnaissance flights over Hill 505.

At sea, the Thai sent their boats and armed vessels to fish and carry out spying missions 225 times in our waters. On 17 September, they insolently shelled from their ships Hill 237 20 km west of Kach Kong Island.

They also ordered 45 shellings using 120-mm mortars and H-12 rockets on our villages along the border such as Hill 343 and 199 in Koh Kong Province; Kantout, Pailin and Poipet in Battambang Province; west of Smat Deng in Pursat Province; and Trapeang Kol in Preah Vihear.

On 18 September, 500 shells landed on Hill 505 west of Pailin.

With the frequent backing of Thai artillery fire, the Pol Pot bandits and other reactionary Khmers living on Thai soil crossed the border in small groups in foolish attempts to steal food from our people and plant mines on communications lines along the border. None of their attempts escaped the vigilance of our revolutionary armed forces and people who smashed every move the bandits made.

On 18 September, our armed forces ambushed a group of bandits who sneaked in to spy. We killed three of them and seized an M-79. On the same day, in Chikreng District, Siem Reap Province, our vigilant force spotted three bandits who were spying and attempting to blow up a bridge on Route 6. Our courageous militiamen immediately surrounded them and took all of them prisoner before they even had time to commit their crimes. We seized two B-40 launchers and a mine.

A day earlier, on 17 September, our armed forces ambushed a group of bandits who were preparing to loot the people's rice 4 km west of Ta Sanh. We killed nine of them on the spot and seized four weapons.

A bit earlier, in Amleang area, Kompong Speu Province, a group of bandits--who were attempting to steal our people's rice and cattle--were reported to our armed forces. In this battle we killed five enemy elements, wounded three others and seized eight weapons and five mines. The remaining members of the group fled for their lives in panic and were intercepted by our local militia force which killed another bandit and seized four weapons including a B-40 launcher.

On 20 September, 10 km southwest of Choam Khsan in Preah Vihear Province, a group of bandits crossed over from Thailand in an attempt to plant mines along Route 69 but were intercepted by our forces which took immediate measures to destroy the enemies. The battle only lasted for a short period and we killed five bandits on the spot and seized two weapons and 50 mines. [passage omitted]

In the past week, in Chong Kal and Srei Snam in Siem Reap-Oddar Meanchey Province, 16 families persuaded 16 of their relatives to surrender to our authorities bringing with them many weapons. Also in the same week, we persuaded 88 Pol Pot soldiers to return to the fold. [passage omitted]

POLITICAL STABILITY QUESTIONED

Kathmandu THE MOTHERLAND in English 17 Sep 82 p 3

[Editorial: "Political Stability"]

[Text]

Taking stock of the situation prevailing in the country today, we find very little reason to remain complacent. The situation is such that one cannot just say what might happen next. The political stability which the country is claimed to have achieved following the general election only shows that Prime Minister Thapa is keeping his fingers crossed. What one should understand in this context is that the apparent political stability without economic development can prove ultimately ephemeral. In fact it makes no sense to talk about political stability when the economy of the country is sinking with no sign of hope in the foreseeable future. The simmering discontent among the students who have championed the cause of the people who are virtually groaning under pressure of rising prices and non-availability of essential commodity like rice and oil can also be a pointer to coming events. The common man is so badly hit that he has lost the purchasing power. The few depots opened at some of the places of the town have not changed the market trend which is marked by the upward swing. The situation can be exploited by politicians any time when the opportunity to do so comes their way. In the circumstances, it is useless to talk about the seeming political stablity which can be as fragile as anything among people who are literally living below subsistence level. The foodgrains now being made available by donor countries cannot also solve the problem because wherefrom the people can get money to buy the grains ? Even the peasantry of the country are out of their work because of the drought and they cannot be expected to have money to buy the grains, unless arrangement can be made to lend them interest free money. Moreover, they are not the only people who are suffering because there are others who have neither field to cultivate nor any work to do. Some kind of job opportunities will have to be generated for them if the government means to mitigate their sufferings.

ECONOMIC RELATIONS AGREEMENT--New Zealand's prime minister, Mr Muldoon, has warned Australia that New Zealand will not agree to major changes in the closer economic relations draft agreement. But, Mr Muldoon said in Wellington that he was still hopeful a final agreement could be reached in time for legislation to pass through the New Zealand Parliament this year. This would enable the phasing in of the agreement from early next year. The prime minister said Australian industry was objecting to the length of the phase-out period for protection and also to incentives for New Zealand manufacturers. But, Mr Muldoon said that periods were necessary to permit New Zealand industry to adjust to the new economic relations across the Tasman. HAQ TO VISIT CHINA, OTHER COUNTRIES

[Excerpts] President Gen Mohammad Ziaul Haq today declared open the 3,950-foot-long Dadu-Moro bridge, which has been built at the cost of 302 million rupees.

Later, talking to newsmen upon his arrival in Karachi, the president said the government is fully aware of its sacred responsibility regarding the protection of life and honor of citizens, and it is determined to discharge this responsibility. He said the people should not be concerned about the present activities of antisocial elements and added that various incidents in Lahore and the murder of [Federal Advisory Council member] Zahurul Hassan Bhopali are part of a series of well-designed misdeeds of a defeated group. He said the people's cooperation is essential in eliminating all such activities.

The president said the administration is setting up local committees in which the people will fully participate. Under special instructions deputy commissioners are issuing licenses for arms to noble citizens in order to create a sense of security and stability.

Answering a question, the president said the local bodies elections will certainly be held next year. However, the president added, general elections will be held at an appropriate time.

The president said he would undertake visits to China and the DPRK beginning the 17th of next month followed by visits to Indonesia and Malaysia in November. The president said Pakistan has very close and friendly relations with China and both countries have been exchanging delegations at every level to further strengthen the existing cordial relations.

VIOLENCE SEEN POSING CHALLENGE TO ZIA'S RULE

BK231401 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 18 Sep 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Pakistan Portents"]

[Text] President Ziaul-Haq's response to the rising wave of violence and terrorism in Pakistan may not cool let alone end a dangerous new situation. At least two members of the Majlis-e-Shoora, the country's nominated parliament, have been murdered in recent days: One gunned down at high noon in his party office in the heart of Karachi, and the other fatally injured when a tractor deliberately ploughed into his car on a highway in Sind Province. These telling incidents follow a series of car bomb explosions and a rash of anti-Zia posters in various parts of the country.

The president has termed the killings acts of desperation on the part of the opposition. He could be right though it might be premature to club all his opponents, even the Bhutto family, under a single label. However, his immediate response is likely to prove counterproductive. He has ordered that firearms licences be issued to "law abiding" citizens for self-defence. This is a sure recipe for further violence and bloodshed. For, if the pro-regime elements are indeed armed, it could well mark the beginning of a civil war. In any case, what is happening already has the makings of a bloody backlash against the long suppression of political activity and dissent.

The 5 years General Zia has been in the saddle have witnessed several open expressions of popular protest against the military dispensation. With all political activity banned, non-political groups like students, teachers and lawyers have come to articulate the public mood. In fact, lawyers all over the country have launched a nationwide protest against the Qazi courts ordinance and other inroads into their and the judiciary's functioning, as also against other recent fiats further curbing the rights of government employees and the press. Such protests, whatever their intensity, are within the traditional parameters. Not so the latest incidents of violence and terrorism which represent the rise of a new kind of extremism that could alter the very fabric of Pakistan's political culture and leave behind an ugly legacy for future elected governments.

Far from keeping to his own repeatedly advanced timetable for the restoration of an elected civilian government, General Zia has progressively tightened the screws on political activity. The formation of the Majlis-e-Shoora has not been followed by the announcement of a firm schedule for elections. The president's own reputation for integrity and simplicity has been an asset and, despite mass arrests, curbs, taboos and even reports of torture in jails, his has not been a bloodthirsty regime. The economy is not doing too badly even if not too well. He has been seeking to reorder Pakistan's external relations and an accommodation with India, measures which probably enjoy considerable support. These should give him the strength to unfold a scheme for political advance which would culminate in the restoration of an elected government before too long.

YAQUB KHAN COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH PYM--Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan has said he had useful talks with British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym in London on Afghanistan, the Middle East and other matters. He was talking to Pakistani newsmen in London before his departure for New York to lead the Pakistan delegation at the UN General Assembly session. He said he would be having further talks on Afghanistan at the United Nations with the secretary general's special envoy, Cordovez. These talks will be a continuation of the indirect talks on Afghanistan held in Geneva last June. He reiterated that Pakistan's position on Afghanistan remains unchanged and whatever solution was devised for the Afghan problem, it will be based on the resolutions of the UN General Assembly and the Islamic foreign ministers conference. He said Cordovez would also be visiting Islamabad, Kabul and Tehran in next November for continuation of the talks on Afghanistan. Sahabzada Yaqub Khan said he also looked forward to meeting Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko during his visit to the United Nations. The Pakistan foreign minister emphatically stated that Pakistan had no plan whatsoever to produce nuclear weapons and that Pakistan's nuclear program was only for peaceful purposes. EDITORIAL ON U.S. INVESTMENT IN COUNTRY

[Editorial: "Attracting Investments"]

[Text] One of the ways to tell the success of the president's visit is the amount of new U.S. investments it will generate in the near future. For the visit gave an opportunity for reaffirming friendship and alliance, proving Philippine stability, and citing investment possibilities here.

The president took advantage of his visit to invite U.S. investors and to pledge fair treatment.

Given the facts about this country established during the visit as well as all others directly available here, there is no reason investments in certain industries will unduly be withheld.

There are many cases to prove that U.S. investments located in less hospitable climes with the consequence that they have been either confiscated outright or rendered unprofitable by a turn of the political wheel.

Still the basic needs of investors must be fulfilled by the Philippines. For example, communication facilities must be considerably improved. Not many might want to set up plants in this country if telecommunications are inadequate.

There must likewise be an adequate supply of energy in the place where plants are to be set up.

Such basic needs should be met.

The time for debating the desirability of foreign investments in principle is long past. The immediate concern is to find employment for the growing addition to the work force.

CPP LEADERS IN SOUTH STRUGGLE FOR POWER

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Sep 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Mel Parale]

[Text] MALAGUTAY, Zamboanga City, Sept. 26--President Marcos was today informed by military authorities that an intense power struggle has rocked the Communist Party of the Philippines with the killing last Monday of Edgar Jopson, erstwhile CPP chairman in Mindanao.

Gen. Fabian C. Ver, AFP chief of staff, cut short his address at the 6th anniversary celebration here of the AFP southern support command when the regional command received an overseas call from the President.

The President was verifying the status of certain military officers abroad.

GEN. VER took the opportunity to convey to the President latest information monitored by the intelligence community on the effects of Jopson's killing to the movement.

Jopson, who was sent to link the student and labor sectors in sowing unrest in the country this month, was killed in a shootout with government troopers in his hideout in Davao City.

Ver told the President that the object of the new power play in the movement is the post left vacant by Jopson.

MAIN protagonists are Benjamin de Vera, a CPP leader, who counts on the support of Mindanao CPP members, and Rolly Kintanar, the No. 2 CPP leader in the region who is backed by rebel ranks in the Visayas. Kintanar has a P150,000 price on his head.

De Very used to be the CPP chairman in Mindanao when he was captured. He has escaped and is among top CPP leaders being hunted.

Ver also informed the President that CPP leaders who had converted in Mindanao to plan sabotage operations have apparently gone back to their respective lairs in the Visayas and the Bicol region after the raid of the Davao assembly point.

VER declassified more documents seized in the raid showing that the CPP and its military arm, the New People's Army, were bracing for a massive anti-government propaganda and recruitment offensive.

He also revealed intelligence reports that they have identified the sources of incendiary bombs planted in some big hotels in Metro Manila. The devices had been found and defused by bomb disposal experts.

One of the suppliers, Ver said, was a Filipino holding office at a building housing a Philippine consulate in California.

VER said the intelligence community has also more information on other links of plotters to sow disorder.

Ver said that the government is still in full control of peace and order based on reports of regional military commands.

REBEL ALLIANCE IN SOUTH BARED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 11

[Article by Nelly Sindayen]

[Text]

Maj. Gen. Delfin Castro, chief of the Southern command (Southcom) in Mindanao, revealed yesterday that the military arms of the three major rebel groups have formally organized an alliance.

Speaking before the United Nations Walkers Club, Castro said "definitely, there's an alliance" among the Moro National Liberation Front's (MNLF) Bangsa Moro Army, the Communist Party of the Philippines' New People's Army (NPA), and the Partidong Demokratiko Sosyalista ng Pilipinas' Sandigan Army.

The existence of the BMA-NPA-Sandigan alliance is revealed in documents seized from both the MNLF and the CPP, the Southcom chief told his audience.

Castro stressed that as a result of this new alliance, "you don't hear of any fighting between the MNLF and the CPP and the Sandigan in Mindanao."

The alliance, he said, is possibly headed by a "common leader" whose identity he did not disclose.

Castro also affirmed a common military and government belief that MNLF chairman Nur Misuari is a Communist and has always been one since the 60's.

Castro refused to comment when asked if the Libyan government is giving Muslim rebels any aid. The only kind of support Libya gives the Muslims, he said, is development support through the hospital in Marawi city, Castro said.

He added that Libyan Ambassador Moustafa Dreiza has pledged to establish manpower skills training centers for Muslims as well as Christians in Mindanao.

Castro said the MNLF is now divided into three factions: the Misuari faction, the Hashim Salamat faction, and the Bangsa Moro Liberation Organization faction of former Congressman Rashid Lucman.

Despite the continued suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in Mindanao's Regions 9 and 12, he said, the military authorities hardly take advantage of the situation. He added that the continued suspension of the privilege has been recommended by the Muslim leaders.

Brig. Gen. Pedrito C. de Guzman, commander of Constabulary Region XI based in Davao city, alerted his men yesterday against possible attacks by communist rebels to avenge the loss of their top leader.

De Guzman informed Gen. Fabian C. Ver, Armed Forces chief of staff, that they have received intelligence reports that the New People's Army was planning reprisal actions following the death of Edgar Jopson, 35, No. 1 Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) leader in Mindanao.

The NPA offensives would be carried out this month or the first few days of next month in line with the CPP/NPA's "Operations Skylark" or "September movement" to stage strikes, bombings, and assassinations nationwide.

Jopson was slain in a shootout with lawmen in his Skylark subdivision hideout in Catalunan Grande, Davao city, last Sept. 20, hours before the NPA's were to launch attacks on several targets coinciding with the anniversary of the imposition of martial law.

De Guzman informed Ver that he has also ordered an intensified hunt for Rolly Kintanar, No. 2 CPP/NPA man in the area who is likely to succeed Jopson. Kintanar has a ₱150,000 price over his head.

DRIVE AGAINST ANTIGOVERNMENT ELEMENTS STEPPED UP

HK250418 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Report by Abe Licayan]

[Text] The PC (Philippine Constabulatory) has stepped up its civic-action drive in central Visayas, particularly in the remote Baranggay to thwart the activities of anti-government elements.

Brig Gen Alfredo S. Olano, Region 9 PC commander, said these elements, all believed to be members of the Communist Party of the Philippines, conduct teach-ins among the people and incite them by blowing up the failures of the government. After winning their sentiments, the subversives then start recruiting Baranggay residents into the New People's Army, the military man of the Communist Party.

Olano also has ordered an all-out war against armed groups terrorizing the people in the mountain areas in central Visayas, including Cebu, and against holdup gangs operating in the city.

In Negros Occidental, PC soldiers and policemen captured last week six suspected dissidents in Baranggay Ilaya, Calatrava Town. Only three suspects were identified as Aniceto Villamor, Wilfredo Villamor and Rogelio Carmelotes.

Confiscated from the suspects were a .30 caliber Springfield rifle, three .38 caliber revolvers, a 12 guage shotgun and assorted ammunition, including some M-14 and M-16 armalite rifles.

Villamor admitted he was the "Commander Chito" operating in Baranggay Ilaya, Cruz, Paghumayan Macasilaw and Pantaw of Calatrava.

Another suspected rebel, identified as Juanito Caramihan was captured in Sitio Mailig, Baranggay Winaswasan. Confiscated from him was a .38 revolver.

A composite team also captured Diosinio Caballes who admitted participation in the 5 August ambuscade at Baranggay Agpangi which resulted in the slaying of six Calatrava policemen and four civilians.

NO PROBLEMS IN ALLIANCE WITH U.S.

HK231430 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 23 Sep 82 p 6

[Editorial: "On an Alliance"]

[Text] Before he set off for the state visit and on arrival in the United States, the president told the press he would not bother President Reagan, who already had had to contend with many problems. The message deserves discussion to be appreciated.

First, it should be noted that U.S. foreign policy is weighted down by the domestic problems of many countries, including allies. Those problems affect U.S. interests, and therefore the U.S. Government feels it must do something.

The United States has problems not only with individual countries but also with regional developments. One good example is the Middle East. If the United States has long conceded that it is no longer the world's policeman, it must in certain cases act like a policeman or a fireman. In that role the United States has had to contend with political and economic problems. The foreign policy and the manner it is carried out are so important that sometimes they decide the fate of an American administration.

What is often times forgotten is the Philippines does not give problems to the U.S. administration. Whatever problems it has do not compel the United States to act either as a policeman or a fireman. Those agreements signed in Washington are the usual stuff of a normal bilateral relationship. They are mutually beneficial. Because there are no attempts at imposition either way the direct material benefits are cause neither for excessive jubiliation nor disappointment. Alliances flourish best when there are no serious outstanding problems, for in that case no party is called upon to do something extraordinary for the sake of the other.

The U.S. Government would have much less problems if all its allies were like the Philippines.

FEWER LABOR STRIKES IN 1982 NOTED

HK010231 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 30 Sep 82 pp 1, 15

[Text] Labor Deputy Minister Carmedo C. Noriel clarified yesterday reports attributing the decline in the number of strikes in the first semester of 1982 mainly to Batas Pambansa [BP] 130 and BP 227. These laws allegedly rendered labor unions ineffective in winning higher wages.

Noriel said that while the reported incidence of strikes is lower than in 1981, some strikes this year cover more workers and tended to be of longer duration even after the passage of BP 130 on 17 August 1981, which guarantees the valid exercise of the rights to strike and to lockout.

He recalled that in the first semester of 1981, Presidential Decree 823 was still in effect although the need to replace it with a new law was recognized with the lifting of martial law last January.

He said the first half of 1982 was already governed by BP 130 but the rate of strikes could not have been appreciably affected by BP 227 which was signed into law only last June.

Winning higher wages and securing improved benefits for the workers cannot be accurately measured in proportion to the number of strikes declared, Noriel stressed, adding that a strike is not an end by itself, only a means of last resort.

He noted that 624 new collective bargaining contracts have so far been executed and filed with the MOLE [Ministry of Labor and Employment] this year, reflecting improved workers' benefits even under adverse economic conditions and more safeguards in the strike law.

Most of the CBAS [expansion unknown] were principally the product of collective bargaining or the efforts of trade unions and employers themselves through negotiations and without the need for direct action, Noriel said. Other CBAS were concluded with the assistance of conciliators and arbitrators of the ministry, he added.

He said the two laws have succeeded in minimizing, if not eliminating, spontaneous strikes precipitated by a minority within a union or even by external pressures, thus helping bring about greater stability and industrial peace.

Other factors behind the decline in strikes, Noriel said, is the fact that many collective agreements are negotiated and concluded in the early part of the year so that fewer negotiations take place at the later part of the year.

He said recession has made workers more careful not to lose their jobs in mass lay offs due to business failure.

PAPER SEES VIETNAMESE THREAT AS REAL

HK010204 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 30 Sep 82 p 4

[Editorial: "The Vietnamese Threat Is Real"]

[Text] President Marcos' candid admission before the editorial board of the LOS ANGELES TIMES that Soviet-backed Vietnam is the most serious threat to Asian security today should not be taken lightly.

The president, in fact, was telling the U.S. Government and the American public that greater interest and effort should be exerted by the United States to contain what could be a gradual but accelerated phase in subversive infiltration of areas in Southeast Asia which have always been aligned with the West in life-style and government systems.

Matters have been aggravated recently by an exchange of divergent views between the member-states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to which the Philippines belongs and Vietnam over ASEAN's insistence that Vietnam withdraw its army from Kampuchea and allow its people to select their own government.

It was obvious that the president wanted to stress the point further when he said that neither China, the Soviet Union or Japan were the biggest security threat to Asia but "Vietnam backed by Russia."

For one, Vietnam has the largest standing army in this side of the world. The quick withdrawal of America from South Vietnam in the early 1970's resulted in the stock-piling of millions of dollars worth of military hardware which the conquering Vietnamese troops made good use of. Added to this has been the steady influx of Soviet arms and experts to help speed up the recovery of the country.

No one knows for sure these days how strongly entrenched the Soviets are in Vietnam. Certainly, however, Cam Ranh and Da Nang, American bases fully equipped and prepared for armed conflict, are being utilized by the Vietnamese and their Soviet allies. These two bases present an outright threat to shipping in the South China Sea, especially shipping en route to Japan, another Western ally.

The threat to the Philippines is direct. Vietnam lies immediately to the west of this country and only the South China Sea separates the two countries. At least twice this year, the Philippine Government protested reported intrusions by Soviet planes into Philippine air space. Where the jet patrols came from may never be known but it is certain their landing point would be somewhere in Vietnam.

Perhaps only the belligerent stance of China to the north of Vietnam has kept the Vietnamese military from steam-rolling into Thailand and Malaysia in a move to bring within the communist orbit the rich Southeast Asian nations. If and when this happens, the West stands to lose a vital source of natural resources. This would, in turn, seriously affect its industrial output.

Mr Marcos said the threat was real and imminent. He noted earlier that increased incidence of subversive activities not only in the Philippines but also in other ASEAN member states was an indication of the program being set into motion by the international communist movement.

Soviet-backed Vietnam is the sword-wielding arm that can inflict a mortal wound on Southeast Asia unless, of course, America realizes the peril before it is too late and moves toward off the oncoming blade of the sword.

BRIEFS

SURRENDER OF LUZON DISSIDENTS EXPECTED--Military authorities in northern Luzon expect more dissidents to surrender shortly. This is due to the reported demoralization in the ranks of the New People's Army [NPA]. The military learned of the demoralization from some dissidents who surrendered to the authorities recently. The same dissidents provided the military with enough information for the capture of notorious NPA commanders. [Text] [HK170029 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 16 Sep 82]

TOBACCO PRODUCTION--Virginia flue-cured tobacco production soared from 37,962,089.85 kilos valued at P332,572,458.00 in 1981 to 47,421,069.40 kilos amounting to P493,155,785.67 this year, an increase of over 9 million kilos valued at P160,583,327.67. The percentage of exportable-grade Virginia leaf registered a 4.83 percent hike as production of grades A, B, and C climbed from 59.91 percent last year to 64.74 percent in 1982. Justice Federico B. Moreno, PVTA [Philippine Virginia Tobacco Administration] chairman, said 38,583 Virginia tobacco farmers and their families in the provinces of La Union, Ilocos Sur, Ilocos Norte, and Abra received P496,155,785.67 this year. The unusually high rate of increase in the production of Virginia leaf this year can be attributed to the fact that farmers who planted cotton in 1981 returned to tobacco this year, he said. Moreno also reported that burley tobacco production in Pangasinan, Occidental Mindoro, and Tarlac recorded an increase of 16,251.50 kilos or P7,954,027.10. Total production rose from 12,767,251.00 kilos valued at P72,922,767.85 last year to 12,783,772.50 kilos worth P80,876,794.95 in 1982, Moreno added. EIGHT KILLED IN DAVAO DEL NORTE--Manila, 28 Sep (AFP)--The Communist New People's Army (NPA) yesterday killed seven troopers and one civilian in an ambush in Concepcion Town, Davao Del Norte Province in southern Philippines, military authorities said. The authorities said the heavily armed NPA guerrillas immobilized their army truck with an M-29 grenade before peppering its occupants with bullets 590 miles (944 kms) southeast of Manila. The fatalities were members of the crack Delta Company of the Philippine Army's 37th infantry battalion. They were on their way to establish a detachment in nearby Asuncion Town when the NPA team of about 60 guerrillas attacked, the military said. The civilian fatality was a truck helper. Four others aboard the truck were wounded, including a Civilian Home Defense Force (CHDF) team leader, the military added. The NPA ambushers carted away eight armalite rifles and thousands of rounds of ammunition from the dead soldiers. [Text] [OW281241 Hong Kong AFP in English 0758 GMT 28 Sep 82]

SIX KILLED IN ZAMBOANGA DEL SUR--Zamboanga City, Southern Philippines, 28 Sep (AFP)--Communist New People's Army (NPA) guerrillas killed six people including four soldiers when they attacked a detachment in remote Siay Town in Zamboanga Del Sur Province north of here, military sources said today. The attack seemed aimed at capturing firearms, according to the sources. Rifles, ammunition and other combat equipment were taken from the dead soldiers, whose outnumbered companions were driven off by the 50-strong band, sources said. The civilian victims were at the detachment when the 30-minute gun-battle occurred. Meanwhile, in Kabasalan Town also in Zamboanga Del Sur, a nurse was kidnapped by Moslem rebels apparently to attend to their sick and wounded, the same sources said. The rebels, belonging to the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF), had been fighting a secessionist war since 1972. [Text] [OW281243 Hong Kong AFP in English 1120 GMT 28 Sep 82]

AUSTRALIAN PRIEST ARRESTED--An Australian Roman Catholic priest accused by Philippine military authorities of having explosives and antigovernment documents at his home said today he was a victim of a frameup intended to undermine the work of the Church. Father Brian Gore, originally from Perth, was arrested late last week in his parish near Kabankaln in the central Philippines. He and four Filipinos were questioned for 5 hours about the alleged discovery of the fragmentation grenade, five rounds of ammunition and, what was termed, subversive documents. Military authorities said they were preparing charges of subversion and illegal possession of explosives against Father Gore who was attached to the Columban Order. But he was allowed to return to his parish where he has worked for the past 10 years. [Text] [BK290914 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 29 Sep 82]

MARCOS TOLD OF COMMUNIST LEADER'S DEATH--In Zamboanga City, AFP [Armed Forces of the Philippines] Chief of Staff Gen Fabian Ver has informed President Marcos that the killing of Communist leader Edgar Jopson has resulted in a power struggle among the communist leaders in Mindanao. Involved in the power struggle are Romulo Kintanar, the No 2 man in the Communist hierarchy in the South and Benjamin de Vera, the former top man. De Vera reportedly wanted to regain power after his escape from government custody. President Marcos made an overseas telephone call to General Ver when the AFP chief of staff was in Zamboanga City yesterday for the sixth anniversary of the Seventh Philippine Logistics Base in (Malagutay). On that occasion, Region 11 Commander Brig Gen Pedrito de Guzman also briefed General Ver on the peace and order situation in Mindanao. SUSPECTED NPA PRIEST CAPTURED--Manila, 24 Sep (AFP)--The Philippine military has captured one of eight Catholic priests originally assigned to Samar Province who have reportedly joined the Communist New People's Army (NPA), military sources said today. The priest, identified as Father Orlando Tizon, alias Father Land Otisan, former parish priest of Calbayog City in Samar, central Philippines, was captured when army troops killed ranking Communist Party leader Edgar Jopson on Tuesday. Mr Jopson, 35, said to be the Communist Party chairman of Mindanao (southern Philippines), was killed in a shootout in Davao City 590 miles (944 kms) south of Manila when the military discovered his hiding place. Military authorities said Fr Tizon joined the communist underground after a quarrel with a bishop from Samar, whose northern region is a stronghold of the NPA. Seven other priests were said to have followed his example. The Catholic hierarchy in the Philippines has repeatedly expressed concern over the growing number of young radical priests who either sympathize with or join the NPA. SINO-LANKA CASH TRADE DEAL SIGNED

[Article by Minoli de Soysa]

[Text] Sri Lanka and China yesterday concluded for the first time a cash trade agreement to replace the traditional barter trade that has been operating between the two countries.

"The new agreement, which will provide most-favoured nation treatment for both countries, shows that Sri Lanka and China are able to continue trading despite changing world and domestic circumstances", Trade and Shipping Minister Lalith Athulathmudali said after signing the agreement yesterday

Signing for China was First Vice Minister of the Ministry of Foreign and Economic Relations and Trade, Zheng Tuobin who headed a top-level eight-member delegation to Colombo to negotiate the agreement.

The agreement will come into operation on January 1, 1983 and will enable both countries to purchase from each other 1,600 million rupees worth of goods next year.

Trade agreements between China and Sri Lanka have been negotiated every five years since 1952. The sixth one, negotiated in 1977 provided for a (barter exchange of rubber and rice. Since Sri Lanka no longer requires large quantities of rice, the agreement has been changed to one of cash trade.

"If the Maha and Yala seasons were successful, the country would not need to import rice in 1983", Mr. Athulathmudali said.

Mr Tuobin said his country would continue to be a purchaser of Sri Lanka rubber. China will also purchase several other commodities, he said, according to needs and market conditions.

China will buy rubber, coconut, tea, oils, coffee, manufactured rubber, graphite, ilmenite and other products while Sri Lanka will purchase rice, foodstuff, textiles, chemicals, bicycles, machinery, steel, cement and other products from China.

The agreement also provides for the establishment of a joint trade committee to regularly review the implementation of the agreement and to promote and develop trade between the two countries. It will be automatically extended every five years unless notice of termination is given by either country.

POSSIBLE GENERAL ELECTIONS IN NOVEMBER

[Article by Jennifer Henricus]

[Text]

Sri Lankans who will go to the polls on October 20 for the Presidential elections may be called upon to vote once again at a parliamentary general elections in November

A snap parliamentary poll, political observers believe, is a strong likelihood in November. Two senior Cabinet Ministers already heightened speculation in this regard.

State Minister Anandatissa de Alwis last week told a meeting of the Organising Committee of the PATA 1984 conference in Colombo that Sri Lanka would have a general election some time in November.

Yesterday Finance and Planning Minister Ronnie de Mel also gave an indication of parliamentary polls in November when he said that a vote on account to cover expenditure for the first quarter of next year would be presented in November instead of Government's sixth budget which was scheduled for November 10.

However, according to authoritative government sources, the dissolution of Parliament will hinge on the outcome of the Presidential elections.

Mr. de Mel told 'SUN' that it was not feasible to present the budget in November because with the dissolution of Parliament for the general elections it would not be possible to debate the Appropriations Bill for 1983 to a finish.

The budget for the financial year 1982 will be presented in January instead, 'SUN' learns. This budget, political observers say, will be the first of the new government that will be formed after the general elections.

The Vote on Account covers only three months. In moving such a vote for expenditure for this period, the President need not disclose to Parliament his intention. Instead he can authorise the issue of funds from the Consolidated Fund to cover expenditure for this period.

HECTOR FEARS FOR HIS FUTURE

[Article by Richard de Silva]

"I wrote my Last Will before I came forward for the Presidential Election as the SLFP candidate because I know that if I lose, I will be either sent to jail or sent 6 feet underground", said Mr. Hector Kobbekaduwe at a rally at Wariapola.

He said that he would bring back the 1972 Constitution with certain amendments so that the sovereignty of the people would be safe-guarded and the supremacy of Parliament maintained.

He said that he didn't want to become President for the sake of the glamour of office, but to save the country from it being a pawn of the foreign powers.

It was the people's duty to safeguard the independence of the country. IN order to do that, the people will have to defeat Mr.J.R.Jayewardene at the Presidential election.

Yesterday, Mr.Kobbekaduwe addressed a series of meetings starting from Mannakulam to Wariapola, to Nattandenya, Pannala and Dambadeniya.

A common feature at these meetings was that a large number of Buddhist Priests attended these meetings.

At Anamaduwa where a meeting was scheduled to be held was cancelled owing to police refusal to hold that meeting on the ground as a UNP meeting was being held at the adjoining premises but no such UNP meeting was held.

HECTOR WILL DISSOLVE PARLIAMENT IF ELECTED

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 22 Sep 82 p 11

[Text]

Mr. Hector Kobbekaduwa SLFP nominee for the presidential election told a public meeting held at the Panadura Kataragama Kovil premises on Saturday that he would give back Mrs Sirimavo Bandaranaike her civic rights, restore the rice ration and subsidise the cost of essential goods. He would also dissolve the present parliament to elect a set of new MPs.

Mr Kobbekaduwa was garlanded by Mr. W. D. L Appuhamy Panadura SLFP chief organiser on his arrival at the Kovil premises.

Mr. Kobbekaduwa Said he was the common candidate as all the leftist parties except the LSSP had promised to support him at the forthcoming presidential election.

Mr Kobbekaduwa added he would take back the strikers with full back pay.

Mr Anil Moonesinghe the leader of the breakaway LSSP group said it was the late Dr. N. M. Perera who had safeguarded the rights of the working class. The present leadership of the LSSP would not serve the working class. The duty of the working class of the country was to support the Sri Lanka Freedom Party.

Panadura SLFP Chief Organiser W D. L Appuhamy stated that the poor masses have come forward to support the SLFP as they had under gone severe hardships during the last five years.

Mr. D. M. Jayaratne a former deputy minister Mr Tudor Dayaratne Bandaragma SLFP and several others spoke.

JVP WOULD RETIRE OVER 50'S

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 22 Sep 82 p 1

[Article by L. B. Wijayasiri]

[Text]

It is as sure as the sun and moon shine that I will be elected President on October 20, and as soon as I am elected, I will retire all those over fifty years of age, declared the JVP candidate at the Presidential election, Mr.Rohana Wijeweera, at a rally at George E. de Silva Park, Kandy.

Mr.Wijeweera said that within 24 hours of his assuming office as President, he will issue directions to nationalise all the private lands, factories, business enterprises. He would also pay compensation and back wages up to the cent to all those who had lost their jobs from 1947 to 1982 and all of them would be reinstated.

Mr.Wijeweera said the time had come for people like President Jayewardene, Dr.Colvin R.de Silva and Mr.Hector Kobbekaduwe, who were in their seventies and Sixties to be retired.

Young people like him should be elected to the office of President As soon as he was elected, all those who had passed 50 years of age would be sent on retirement and replaced by young people. He would usher in a new era.

For the past half a century, the people of this country had been misled and fooled by the UNP. LSSP, SLFP and CP. Power had changed hands from the UNP to the SLFP and back to the UNP again. That cycle should now end. The masses had suffered enough under both the UNP and SLFP. In 1977, Mr.Jayewardene came into power on false promises. After he assumed office, the rice ration was removed and the prices of all essentials were increased by several fold.

Now the SLFP was trying to make capital out of the situation and trying to get the people to jump from the frying pan into the fire.

SEVERE DROUGHT IN PUTTALAM DISTRICT

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 22 Sep 82 p 13

[Text]

The entire Puttalam District is in the grip of a severe drought. There has not been a drop of rain for the last six months Farmers are faced with this a problem in cultivating their paddy fields and highland crops.

From the 1980-81 Maha season the cultivation of paddy had dropped to a great extent.

Farmers are kept going by the relief given by the government and also by the grant of subsidies

Some farmers are however not getting these subsidies. Those who possess hand tractors are left out of the scheme as they are expected to earn an income by ploughing others fields. Some of these tractor-owner farmers now intend disposing of their tractors and lands in a bid to survive by other means.

The Puttalam-Tabbowa area has over 3000 acres of paddy land which are irrigated by the Tabbowa tank This has now gone bone dry and the farmers are in a quandary as to how they are going to cultivate for the coming Maha season.

Farmers say that they cannot anticipate rain even in the next two months. Heavy winds during the day and cold weather at night are however experienced. Tabbowa farmers are finding it difficult to obtain water for drinking and bathing purposes as the Mee Oya and Nari Oya which supply them with water are also drying up.

At the requests of the MPs of the district, the government is supplying drinking water through bowsers in some areas

Some farmers told me that if a permanent water scheme through Mee Oya could be constructed the Tabbowa tank could be easily filled with water for cultivation during both seasons.

For a season farmers in the Tabbowa area produce over four lakhs of bushels of paddy if there is sufficient water in the tank. As there was no rain for the last three seasons, two seasons were cultivated on the Bethmay basis giving a farmer only one acre to cultivate the produce of which is hardly sufficient to earn an income other than for his own sustenance.

Farmers stressed that unless a permanent water supply scheme is provided there is no alternative but to give up their lands and seek greener pastures elsewhere.

If the government constructs a chain of windmills in the Tabbowa area, at least a part of the farming could be done they said The windmills could be operated successfully as the velocity of the wind in that area is very high.

Farmers thanked the Government for the relief measures granted to them and hoped that these measures would be given to all farmers irrespective of whether they owned tractors or not.

SHARP DROP IN TEA CROP REPORTED

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 23 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] Sri Lanka's 1982 tea production losses have continued into August when a crop loss of 2.9 million kilos has been recorded bringing the production shortfall during the January — August period upto a depressing 17.1 million kilos.

Most of this year's crop loss is attributed to a drought-hit first quarter when production took a bad beating.

The Colombo tea trade said that there is a global shortfall in tea production this year with most major producers, including India, suffering substantial crop losses.

Eastern Brokers, the Colombo tea brokers, has reported the global crop loss on available figures (which do not include China's production) to be 40.3 million kilos

Although Sri Lanka's August production is available, most countries, including India which is the world's biggest tea producer, has published production figures only upto July.

Against the cheerless picture on the production front, prices have been attractive with the 1982 gross sale average at the Colombo tea sale [words indistinct] 22.15 per kilo upto now against last year's RS. 18.46.

This has ensured that estates are getting prices ahead of their cost of production, a cause for great satisfaction in the context of last year's results.

Iraq has been the major buyer who had helped keep tea prices buoyant in Colombo, traders said.

Discussing production losses elsewhere, a trader said that South India had lost 5.1 million kilos upto July while North India's crop loss for the same period was 10.2 million kilos.

Meanwhile reports said that China is increasing its tea shipments to London. According to figures compiled by the International Trade Centre (ITC), a Geneva-based UN agency, China's tea exports to London during the first five months of this year was 4,938 m.t. against 1,105 m.t. during the corresponding period the previous year.

Production in China has been rated at about 170 million kilos of which 72 million kilos were exported mainly to the USA, Australia, the UK and the continent during the first seven months of the year.

TRADE UNIONS SUPPORT KOBBEKADUWA

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 22 Sep 82 p 1

[Article by Prasad Gunewardene]

[Text]

Eight major trade unions have pledged their support to the SLFP Presidential candidate Mr.Hector Kobbekaduwe in the forthcoming Presidential election.

These trade unions are the Ceylon Federation of Trade Unions, Public Services Trade Union Federation, Lanka Kamkaru Samithi Mandalaya, Samastha Lanka Lipikaru Sangamaya, Local Government Lipikaru Sangamaya, Democratic Workers' Congress, Sri Lanka Independent Trade Union Federation and the Sri Lanka Government Trade Union fFederation.

Mr.L.W.Panditha, General Secretary of the CFTU told "The Island" that a joint Conference of these trade unions will be called in the near future to decide on an island wide campaign to defeat the UNP candidate Mr.J.R.Jayewardene.

He said that the trade union movement had suffered under the present government and every possible effort would be made to defeat President Jayewardene at the Presidential election.

COMMENTATOR SAYS KAMPUCHEA POLICY MAY BACKFIRE

BK240315 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Text] The strategy of attrition adopted by Thailand and ASEAN to bring about the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and Laos may backfire, foreign policy commentator Dr Thira Nutpiam has warned.

Dr Thira, a lecturer at Sinlapakon University, made the comment in a paper sponsored by the Social Science Association of Thailand, which will be presented tonight during a function at Chulalongkom University.

The paper says that Thailand, ASEAN, the United States and China have adopted a policy which was based on the assumption that Hanoi's intervention in Kampuchea and Laos would jeopardise Vietnam's economy and force it to withdraw its occupying armies from the two countries.

Dr Thira said that the success of such a policy depended on ASEAN's ability to maintain its unity and apply pressure on Hanoi through diplomatic and economic isolation and also on Vietnam's ability to bear economic and military pressure from others.

But he said that the policy seemed to contradict Thailand's interests. This was because the strategy of attrition tended to push Vietnam further into the Soviet camp, which was basically against Thailand's objective of a Vietnam free of external influence.

The conflict in Kampuchea affected Thailand by creating tension along the border and adding to the refugee problem. Prolonging the conflict at a time when Thailand's economic and political situation was deteriorating would unavoidably harm Thailand's national interest, Dr Thira wrote.

The strategy drawn up by Thai leaders was understandable, given Thailand's position as a frontline state. But Dr Thira asked how long Thailand could maintain this strategy, given that the pressures on Vietnam might backfire.

Dr Thira said the success of the strategy would depend on the capability of the Democratic Kampuchean forces, ASEAN unity and the threat of a Chinese lesson--all of which would deter Vietnamese aggression.

He said that while these conditions could not be assured, Thailand's policy towards Vietnam was perhaps the most favourable.

Dr Thira also suggested in the paper that U.S. attitude in the Southeast Asian region may also be a factor endangering the Indochinese situation. U.S. opposition to Hanoi and its tilt towards Beijing has made the situation in the region difficult. The United States has overestimated the importance of the Chinese role and underestimated Chinese potential to pose a threat to stability and security in Asia, he said.

He said the alternative may be a change in the U.S. attitude towards the Vietnam in order to reduce its reliance on Moscow and bring it to the negotiating table with ASEAN.

JAPAN AID TO CGDK 'POLITICALLY ORIENTED'

BK270205 Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 27 Sep 82 pp 1, 2

[By Suthichai Yun]

[Text] Tokyo--Japan has channelled footstuffs and medicines to the two non-communist factions in the coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea. The Khmer Rouge were specifically singled out as nonrecipients of this new flow of Japanese aid, senior Japanese officials at the Foreign Ministry here told the nation.

"After all, the Chinese have been helping the Khmer Rouge anyway. So, that's a kind of division of albour between China and Japan," said the officials earlier this week.

Despite the "humanitarian" nature of the Japanese assistance to the Khmer Resistance Coalition, the officials admitted that political considerations were very much part of the decision-making process.

Japanese officials said their government has, since the formation of the Kampuchean Coalition government, channelled more humanitarian assistance to the Son Sann's and Sihanouk's groups in response to ASEAN's call to strengthen the two non-communist factions of the tripartite coalition government, the third party being the Khmer Rouge.

Diplomatic observers described the Japanese new assistance pattern as "more selective and more politically-oriented."

As of 1 September, the Japanese Government has signed a contract with the World Food Programme worth 1.8 billion yen for 30,000 tons of Thai rice to be distributed to Kampuchean refugees and affected Thais.

The Japanese Government has also provided 500 million yen of canned tuna fish imported from Japan to be distributed to Khmer refugees under the control of Son Sann and Sihanouk factions. The total amount of canned fish is about 500 tons.

Also, medicines worth 100,000 U.S. dollars, acquired from different sources at the recommendation of the Japanese medical teams and JICA [expansion unknown] relief mission, have been pledged after the formation of the Kampuchean Coalition Government.

While all these items of humanitarian aid would be distrubuted through the World Food Programme, it is understood that the canned fish and medicines in particular would be handed out only to people under the Son Sann and Sihanouk factions, the Japanese officials said.

The Japanese Foreign Ministry officials, in their briefings to the nation, admitted that they remain "skeptical" over the viability of turning the CGDK into a decisive military force.

A senior official said: "Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan have sought separate meetings with Japanese diplomats in New York (during the UN General Assembly this month) and Tokyo. That only reflects the lack of cohesiveness in the coalition government. If there is one government, only one person should suffice to talk to us."

But the Japanese Government is determined to follow the ASEAN initiatives and policy on the Kampuchean issue.

"There may, at times, be false alarm from certain ASEAN countries in the form of speculations that Tokyo may be considering resuming the frozen aid to Hanoi although we have repeatedly told our ASEAN friends that they could rest assured that nothing of that sort is in the works. Well, we just have to improve on our credibility, that's all," said the Japanese official.

The official said Japan considers the Khmer Coalition Government under Sihanouk's presidency an important part of the "game of patience" to win over Vietnam and to pressure Hanoi to pull its troops out of Kampuchea.

"We must keep the Khmer issue alive in the wake of so many international issues which may overshadow the unacceptable Vietnamese, occupation of Kampuchea. In this connection, the so-called re-emergency of Prince Sihanouk has had great impact," another senior official said.

The Japanese officials also said that they did not believe Hanoi's claim of the "China threat" would justify what Vietnam had done to Kampuchea.

"As to what constitutes a threat, it could be a very subjective and pyschological matter. Certainly, we have always said we would take into consideration Vietnam's legitimate security interests. That's why Japan has offered economic reconstruction aid as an incentive for Hanoi to find a political settlement to the Khmer problem along the ASEAN-proposed United Nations resolutions," the officials said.

Japanese policy-makers, however, admitted that the "economic bait" alone might not be adequate in convincing Vietnam to pull its groops out of Kampuchea.

"The Hanoi leadership realizes that its soft belly, the south, is still far from coming under control and corruption as well as dissidence remain prevalent. Should China regain influence in Kampuchea, Vietnam is afraid its soft belly would really be affected," the Japanese officials said.

Japan believes its "offer of economic reconstruction" is but one leverage to be used. "But the time now is not ripe to consider that as an effective leverage just yet," another senior Japanese official said.

BID TO EXTEND PARLIAMENT'S TERM DISCUSSED

BK200249 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 20 Sep 82 p 2

[Text] A political party leader said on Saturday that he wanted the term of Parliament to be extended for another two years so that Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon's Government can continue to tackle some of the country's serious economic, social and political problems.

Two veteran politicians, however, opposed any attempt to prolong Parliament's tenure which is scheduled to end next April.

Colonel Phatthana Phayakkhanithi, leader of the "Sahachat" Party, said that he believed next April's elections should be postponed for at least two years so that the government can continue to solve problems such as unemployment, refugees and internal security.

He said that the government had become more stable following the appointment of General Athit Kamlang-ek as army commander-in-chief.

The ex-ambassador to Vietnam maintained that he was not against the elections or against the democratic process. But he said internal and external circumstances meant that a stable government such as Gen Prem's should remain in power.

He also doubted whether a new government would be as stable as the present one, adding that the government fully knew how to extend Parliament's term.

However, Mr Klaeo Norapati, secretary-general of the Social Democratic Party [SDP], dismissed claims that there would be a "quiet coup" to pre-empt the next elections.

Commenting on Dr Chai-anan Samutwantit's forecast that there may be an attempt to prolong the tenure of the Parliament for two more years without elections, Klaeo said he did not think such a move would take place because it would be contrary to what the public wants.

"People are smarter today and they will not just let democracy be taken away from them easily," he argued. He added that coups would never solve the problems faced by the country, contending that the military alone could not do everything.

"They need popular support as well as advice and assistance from other people, such as scholars who would certainly refuse to cooperate with anyone who tore our constitution to pieces," he said.

The SDP secretary-general claimed that it was too late to amend the provisional clause of the constitution and any move in this direction would draw strong criticism from the public.

Meanwhile, Dr Yupha Udomsak of the Social Action Party said that it was unlikely that the government's or Parliament's terms could be extended because this was against the constitution which stipulates that general elections must be held every four years.

"It can be done if the constitution was amended. But who will do it, if not the Parliament. I don't think the Parliament will do it," she added.

The Phichit MP noted that the government could extend its tenure by staging a coup but she urged both it and Parliament to stick to the rules and allow elections to take place as scheduled. "Four years is enough time to remain in office. The people should be given an opportunity to elect qualified men into office and get rid of the unqualified ones," she stated.

As for her own plans, Dr Yupha said she would temporarily leave politics and would not stand in next year's elections.

SECRET FUNDS UNDER 'HEAVY FIRE' IN BUDGET DEBATE

BK240555 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 24 Sep 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] Secret funds, including one for national security purposes, came under heavy fire when debate on the second and final readings of the budget bill began in Parliament yesterday.

A secret 213 million baht fund for national security, included in Article 4 of the budget bill, was approved by a 218-12 vote.

The Parliament also passed the total budget allocation of 177,000 million baht, outlined under Article 3.

The debate, which began at 9:30 a.m. and was adjourned at 6:15 p.m., was expected to be completed today, although most of the articles are yet to be considered.

Several MPs questioned the need for the secret national security fund, citing the apparent defeat of the communist insurgency.

Budget Scrutiny Committee member Pancha Kesonthong explained that the secret fund was needed to finance the development of areas retaken from the communists.

Although military suppression operations against communist insurgency had been successful, development teams needed to be sent in after soldiers were pulled out, he said.

MNR Pancha said the secret fund had been drawn up in detail and was not "vague" as some MPs claimed.

Apart from development, the secret fund also financed intelligence gathering, special operations and other schemes aimed at boosting national security, he said.

On Clause 7 of Article 4 which also concerned national security, Mr Pancha explained that the 1,565 million baht earmarked in this category would be spent on psychological warfare and strengthening village defence.

MP Sombun Chiramakon (Democrat, Nakhon Ratchasima) demanding a 10 percent cut of the total budget, said he saw no reason to increase the secret fund of the office of the prime minister above last year's allocation.

Even the Mineral Resources Department had a secret budget, he said.

Mr Sombun said that the government would save about 7,000 million baht if it scrapped all the secret funds.

In reply, Mr Pancha said that the budget was drawn up from data supplied by various department agencies and nothing was illegal.

He said that all secret funds for non-military use were included in the allocation to the office of the prime minister and this was why it was larger than last year.

He said that the Mineral Resources Department's secret fund was for intelligence-gathering purposes and operations against ore smugglers. [passage omitted]

AUGUST UN REPORT ON INDOCHINESE REFUGEES CITED

BK210231 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 21 Sep 82 p 6

[Text] More Indochinese left Thailand last month than arrived, but more than 175,000 refugees remained in the country's camps, United Nations officials reported yesterday.

A monthly report by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) said just two Vietnamese arrived by boat in Thailand in August, along with another 464 Laotians and Kampucheans.

During the month, 136 boat people and 1,704 other Indochinese left Thailand for third countries or a large transit camp in the Philippines, the report said.

Thailand had 175,094 Indochinese refugees at the end of last month, officials said, by far the largest number of refugees in Asia. Hong Kong, with just 12,814 boat people in its camps and jails, has the second greatest number.

Officials said the total included 84,568 Kampucheans, 27,906 Lao, 54,570 Laotian hilltribes and 8,050 Vietnamese.

The UNHCR report said that since 1975, Thailand has provided shelter to 584,594 Indochinese refugees, of whom 401,361 have gone on to third countries.

In another report yesterday, the Geneva-based Intergovernmental Committee for Migration (ICM) said the orderly departure programme of Vietnamese for Ho Chi Minh City slowed by nearly a third last month compared with the previous month.

ICM said that in August just 720 Vietnamese left their country legally. In July more than 1,000 were flown out of South Vietnam.

The programme was instituted in 1978 as part of a plan to cut down on the number of illegal departures by boat.

During August, 3,006 Vietnamese boat people successfully fled their country to first asylum in Asia, compared with the 720 who were given Hanoi's permission to leave.

SPOKESMAN ON EEC TEXTILE ACCORD; ALBANIA TIES

BK151125 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Spokesman of the prime minister's office Trairong Suwannakhiri and his deputy, Mrs Wanida Chitman, today reported on the results of the weekly cabinet session which was held at Government House and presided over by Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon. [passage omitted]

The cabinet approved the new textile trade agreement reached with the EEC. According to a report by the Commerce Industry, the Thai delegation appointed in accordance with the cabinet decision on 22 June held talks with the EEC delegation on Thailand's textile exports to the EEC. As a result of the talks, both sides concluded a new agreement which will take effect from 1 January 1983 to 31 December 1986. The new agreement is beneficial to Thialand as follows:

1. It provides Thailand with a greater quota of textile exports to the EEC.

2. Thailand will also enjoy a better condition on quota use. Under the old agreement, if Thailand failed to meet the quota for a particular year, the EEC would reduce it for the following year. Under the new agreement, Thailand may unilaterally reduce textile export quota for the following year if it cannot fill the agreed quota, and instead send other types of goods to make up for the quota. The cabinet approved the proposal made by the Commerce Ministry. [passage omitted]

The cabinet also approved the proposal by the Foreign Ministry on the establishment of diplomatic relations with the People's Socialist Republic of Albania. The announcement will be made on 30 September this year.

ANALYST SAYS ARMY MORE DEEPLY SPLIT THAN EVER

BK290413 Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 29 Sep 82 p 3

[Text] The army is now suffering more from divisiveness and factionalism than at any other time in its recent history and is also attaching too much importance to personality cults.

Those were the claims made yesterday by Dr Chai-anan Samutthawanit, a deputy dean of Chulalongkon University's political science faculty.

Speaking at a seminar at the university, Dr Chai-anan charged that the army's persistent refusal to readmit the "young Turk" officers despite their outstanding record in combatting communist guerrillas, has deepened the split in the army.

He said these officers were treated worse than the disillusioned students who joined the communists after the bloody riot in 1976 and eventually gave themselves up to the government.

Most of the "young Turk" officers were dismissed from the army because of their involvement in the abortive 1 April coup attempt last year.

Dr Chai-anan also claimed that the army appears to attach great importance to personality cults by portraying certain individual officers as heroes. This method was once employed in China, but has now been dumped completely, he said, adding he did not understand why it is now being introduced in this country.

The outspoken academic said that he felt the prevailing attitude regarding personality cults and the treatment of the "young Turks" were the worst mistakes ever made by the army in the history of the Rattanakosin era.

He also claimed that a plan by the army-controlled radio network to broadcast live in the installation ceremony of General Athit Kamlang-ek as the new army commander in chief was an attempt at portraying the general as a folk hero and increasing his influence.

"How will the people react if I do the same thing if I am promoted as the faculty dean?" he asked.

Dr Chai-anan then turned his attack on Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon. He said that the premier often refused face-to-face meetings with people who came to see him to voice their grievances by claiming that he was engaged in other business.

But when a group of supporters showed up in front of the premier's house after the recent grenade attack, he was all smiles and talked to them for a long time, said the deputy dean.

PREM SAYS KING'S HEALTH IMPROVING STEADILY

BK160730 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0530 GMT 15 Sep 82

[15 September interview given by Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon to newsmen at Government House--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Prem] It is public knowledge that his majesty the king has been ill for the past two months. He is now steadily recovering from his illness to the satisfaction of the panel of doctors headed by the minister of public health, who is present here with me today. The king's condition, as could be seen in three recent television film clips, appeared to be satisfactory and this has pleased his people. He is also very concerned about his people. For example, he summoned the Irrigation Department director general to the Palace last night for a briefing on the flooding. He also inquired about the weather forecast. He is quite adept at weather forecasting.

I have brought this topic up so that you newsmen can inform the people, because everyone is concerned about the king's wellbeing. However, undesirable, false rumors in certain places and among certain groups of people still persist. I would like you [to] widely publish the correct information that the king is steadily recovering from his illness to the satisfaction of the panel of doctors treating him. The panel of doctors has advised that he takes sufficient rest, and he has always obeyed the panel.

I wish to inform all that the contents of the rumors are vicious, irreverent and incorrect. [passage omitted]

THAILAND STILL HAS TO CARRY REFUGEE BURDEN

BK150400 Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 15 Sep 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Refugees Here: Memories Are Quick to Fade"]

[Text] It is very easy to dismiss Thailand's refugee problem as purely geographical--if Thailand was not next door to two Indochinese on whom the Vietnamese and the Soviet Union thrust communism, we would not have had any refugees. We know, and everybody else knows, how the refugees, boat people from Vietnam were treated in such countries like Malaysia, Singapore, Philippines and, even, Hong Kong and Japan. But Thailand has been flooded with refugees and there were two assurances in which this country believed. One was that the UN High Commissioner for Refugees would take care of them and the second was that richer third countries would resettle them.

In both Thailand has been disa-pointed, especially after 1978 when the Vietnamese invaded Kampuchea and the Khmer refugees started a massive inflow into Thailand. Possibly Thailand was quite wrong to have ever believed that the UNHCR could do anything about the refugees. So far as we know the UNHCR has been unable to do anything about refugees in any country. They do get a lot of money from the richer countries, and after milking that sum of the high salaries of the top-heavy commission, there is not all that much left for helping refugees.

One lack of positive thinking, or for the matter negative thinking, is absent in the UNHCR since they approached the Heng Samrin Regime in Phnom Penh to take back the Khmer refugees. Possibly it did not occur to them that it was the Heng Samrin Regime from which the refugees fled. It is possible at the instance of the authorities concerned in UNHCR, Thai Government and the Coalition Government of Kampuchea to enable some repatriation back to their homeland where there is sufficient territory available for doing so.

In this, Pakistan, which harbours the largest number of refugees in the world, and Thailand are not the same. The Afghan refugees in Pakistan do not want to be repatriated into a third country because they consider themselves a national patriotic force, which if given sufficient arms, can harass the Soviet army enough to make them leave their country. But the Indochinese refugees are people without any hope since they fear, and possibly rightly, that if they are repatriated to their homeland, willy-nilly, they have to live under extreme hardships of communism.

Nobody blames the United States for losing the war in Vietnam, but once Indochina was inevitably sold out to the communists, the U.S. has a greater stake in picking up the refugees who can be described in present-day terminology as "fallout," and this is a responsibility primarily of the U.S. But there are new laws and regulations, we are told, which now govern the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), which has depleted the American intake of refugees.

Some figures, released by the United States by the way, will amplify what we are trying to say. In 1980, the total departure of refugees to the U.S. were 93,614; in 1981 the departures were 82,782; during this year to date the departures have been 10,998. The total departures this year, when it ends, is likely to be about one-seventh of the previous year. A set of regulations governs and emigration of refugees to the U.S. by the INS which starts with the question: "Who is a refugee"?. From then on everything becomes totally murky but outwardly tied up into neat packages by red tape.

Let us make a big concession to the U.S. and the richer countries who can easily take in the refugees--let us say that the Khmers (forgetting the other Indochinese) should stay in Thailand, go back to their homeland with the guerrillas of the coalition government and help them in any way they could. Suppose we accept this argument. Then is any one of the richer countries prepared to answer the question: How much non-military aid they have given to the coalition government? Let us start counting this amount of military aid from $1, shall we?

REFUGEES AGREE TO LEAVE CAMP--It has been reported that after defying authorities for two days about 2,000 Laotian refugees agreed to leave the Don Sawan Camp in the northeastern province of Nong Khai for other camps in nearby Nakhon Phanom and Ubon Ratchathani Provinces. The refugees had refused to agree to vacate the camp, which is being closed in line with an Interior Ministry plan to reduce the number of refugee camps. Don Sawan Camp holds Laotian refugees who illegally entered Thailand before January last year. The Laotians elected representatives to negotiate with the authorities for permission to stay, but their request was rejected. The Nong Khai governor has disclosed that the refugees will be shifted as soon as officials at the Nakhon Phanom and Ubon Ratchathani Camps are ready to admit them. He said this would be before the end of this month. [Text] [BK171641 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 17 Sep 82]

MORE RICE EXPORTS EXPECTED--Thailand's rice exports this year are expected to exceed 3.5 million tons, judging from the favourable export trend during the first eight months of this year, chairman of the board of trade's Rice

Committee Mr Sman Ophatwong, said yesterday. For the January-August period, Thailand exported 2,528,030.22 tons of rice worth 15,657.3 million baht, private traders shipped out 1,636,012.05 tons or about 64.7 percent, while the government exported the rest. Mr Sman noted that although many rice and crop plantations were damaged by Typhoon Hope, raising doubts about this season's rice crop, the situation is not all bad as the typhoon didn't last too long and subsequent floodwaters receded quickly. "With the drought over and no other natural disasters expected between now and harvesting time, more rice is expected this year than in 1981," Mr Sman said. TIN PRODUCTION, EXPORTS--Thailand's tin production and exports in the first half of this year dropped considerably from those of the same period in 1981, the Board of Trade [BOT] reported. The major reasons for the sharp decline in both production and exports are the reduced richness of tin ore deposits, the higher production costs and the falling price of tin in the world market, the BOT said. Thailand produced 21,515 tons of tin ores between January and June this year, down a steep 14.99 percent from 24,741 tons in the same period last year, and exported 15,402 tons of tin metal worth about 4,955 million baht, a drop of 17.99 percent in volume and 6.28 percent in value from 18,780 tons valued at 5,287 million baht during January-June 1981. FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HAILS ARAB PEACE PLAN

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Bangladesh has warmly welcomed the Arab peace plan adopted at the just concluded Arab summit in Fez and hoped that peace and stability would soon prevail in Lebanon, reports BSS.

A spokesman of the Foreign Ministry on Tuesday described the peace plan as an achievement for the 900 million Muslims of the world.

He believed that the initiative taken by the Arab summit would lead to a permanent peace in the Middle East and achieve for the heroic people of Palestine their legitimate rights.

The spokesman said, the Government of Bangladesh had expressed great satisfaction at the highly successful outcome of the summit meeting of the heads of Arab states just concluded in Fez. The solemn display of unity by the Arab leaders has ushered in a new era for the Muslim ummah.

Bangladesh, the spokesman said, warmly welcomed the Arab peace plan adopted in the summit meeting as an achievement for and on behalf of the 900 million Muslims of the world.

Bangladesh believes that this initiative will lead to a permanent peace in the Middle East, and achieve for the heroic people of Palestine their legitimate rights including an independent Palestinian state, with Jerusalem as its capital.

The Government of Bangladesh also expressed its sincere hope that peace and stability would soon prevail in Lebanon, the spokesman added.

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM UPGRADED TO MINISTERIAL WING

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Government has upgraded the cell for Works Programme into a full-fledged ministerial wing and allocated larger funds for the programme this year, the Minister for Local Government, Mr Mahbubur Rahman, said on Tuesday, reports BSS.

Of the total Tk 1,000 crore planned to be spent in next eight years in Works Programme, he said, TK 50 crore had been earmarked for the current fiscal year and Tk 120 crore for the following two years to generate increase development activities, particularly in rural areas.

The Minister told officials of the Works Programme wing and its foreign consultants at a meeting that an amount of Tk 450 crore had been linked-up and indications for more funds from abroad were received by the Government.

Unlike in the past, Mr Rahman pointed out, the programme had been organised into a full-fledged wing with provisions for accountability for both use of funds and progress achieved. The accountability in the past was 'poor', he added.

The Minister said that the elevation of the two decade-old cell that ran on 'adhoc' basis into a wing of the Ministry of Local Government indicated the importance the present Government attached to it especially to step up the pace of progress in rural areas.

He said with the increased allocation of Tk 50 crore this year compared to the average annual allocation of Tk 15 crore since independence the Government would concentrate more in building rural infrastructure in backward and distressed areas.

Mr Rahman said the execution of the Works Programme would be made through people's participation. The local bodies like union, thana and zilla parishads would play vital role for execution and the ministerial wing would oversee the functioning.

The Works Programme Wing, he added, would have officials at the thana level and would formulate development programmes and take policy decisions for promoting rural communications and irrigation facilities.

The Works Programme, he said, would be entirely development-oriented in keeping with the policy of the present Government. Part of it would also be directed towards urban areas and for this Tk 40 crore has been earmarked under 2nd Five-Year Plan.

A major objective of setting up the wing, he added, was to reduce "misuse and misappropriation of funds". The projects would be taken up solely on the basis of "merit" uninfluenced by "political or personal considerations", he added.

STATUS OF DEPUTY DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS TO BE RAISED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 15 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The status of the Deputy Commissioners of the Districts will be upgraded to that of the Joint Secretary to the government under the changed administrative set up.

The present status of the Deputy Commissioners is equivalent to the Deputy Secretary of the government. There are six districts where Deputy Commissioners are even below the rank of the Deputy Secretary.

Likewise the status of the Chief Executive of the thanas which will become the hub of the national activities will be that of Additional Deputy Commissioners.

The government has taken in hand 75 thanas for development in the first phase. There are in all 472 thanas throughout the country. There are 130 thanas in Dacca Division, 127 thanas in Chittagong Division, 120 thanas in Rajshahi Division and 95 thanas in Khulna Division.

The government is not abolishing all the subdivisions for the time being.

Since subdivisional officers will be lower in rank and status than the Chief Executive Officer of the developed thanas, the thana chief executive officers will directly deal with the Deputy Commissioners of their respective districts.

The rank and status of the officials of other government agencies working in thanas, which will be taken for development will also be upgraded enabling them to take on the spot decision.

BEIJING DINNER FOR FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION REPORTED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 15 Sep 82 p 4

[Article by Abdul Matin]

[Text] Peking, Sept. 13:--"The friendship of Chinese people with the people of Bangladesh is deep-rooted and it will remain everlasting. China will give all round help to the people of Bangladesh in reconstruction of their national economy".

This assurance was given by Mr. Wang Bingnan, President, Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries at a dinner hosted by him on Sunday in honour of the friendship delegation of Bangladesh which is being led by Mr. Ataur Rahman Khan.

Recalling the sweet recollection of his visit to Bangladesh in March last, Mr. Wang Bingnan said that the people of Bangladesh were China's trusted friends.

Praising the role played by the peasants in the rural areas of Bangladesh Mr. Wang Bingnan said the land of that country is very fertile and the farmers are very industrious.

He hoped that Bangladesh will march forward day by day in its national reconstruction.

He termed Mr. Ataur Rahman Khan as a very old friend of China and the Chinese people.

Referring to the recently concluded 12th party Congress Mr. Wang Bingnan said that China gave highest importance to handing over the leadership to the younger generation because they are the future of China.

Mr. Wang Bingnan reiterated that the Chinese will always stand by the people of Bangladesh in time of need.

Mr. Ataur Rahman Khan in his reply said that our relations with China date back to three thousand years. Recalling the visits of Fah Hien and Huen Sang to Bangladesh in the long past, Mr. Khan paid rich tributes to them for building real ties between the two peoples of China and Bangladesh.

Referring to his first visit to China in 1952 Mr Khan said that the country had made tremendous progress in all spheres in the last three decades.

Mr. Ataur Rahman Khan praised the decisions taken at the last party Congress of China. He said that these decisions will give impetus to the peoples of all Third World countries to be self-reliant in all affairs.

Replying to the sentiments expressed by Mr. Wang Bingnan that "Friendship should not be empty" Mr. Khan said we believe in real friendship, friendship in heart.

Mr. Anwar Hashim, Minister and charge d'Affaires Bangla-embassy also spoke on the occasion. He evaluated the development of Sino-Bangladesh friendship and cooperation and expressed optimism about the further strengthening of friendly relations and mutually beneficial cooperation between the two governments as well as between the two peoples in the years to come.

Fakir Alamgir, a renowned folk singer of Dacca, rendered some songs.

Besides Mr. Wang Bingnan the dinner was attended by some of the high officials of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign countries.

Mr. Abdul Matin, Secretary of the delegation, also spoke on the occasion.

NE WIN SPEAKS ON PROPOSED CITIZENSHIP LAW

BK130126 Rangoon Domestic Service in Burmese 1345 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Speech by U Ne Win, chairman of the Burma Socialist Program Party [BSPP] given 8 October at the seventh meeting of the BSPP Central Committee held in the conference hall of the presidential compound on Ahlone Road, Rangoon--recorded]

[Text] Dear comrade members of the Central Committee: The topic I will discuss today concerns an important law--that is, I will explain the Burmese citizenship law. If I am to explain this law, it will be necessary to explain its background. I have no desire to hurt anyone when explaining the history behind it; however, since I shall be citing actual incidents, there may be instances where some may be affected. My intention, however, is to avoid this and I will try to avoid it in my speech.

First, I wish to discuss the period when Burma was enslaved. Part of Burma was under foreign occupation in 1824, and gradually, after several wars, our whole country was enslaved. As all of you know, we were emancipated from bondage and (?officially) regained our independence on 4 January 1948. Thus, in the transition period from 1824 to 4 January 1948, foreigners or aliens flocked into our country without restraint and resided in Burma. The main reason for their coming was to earn their living.

The first batch of foreigners to come was the British, who ruled our country. Later, multitudes of their attendants and followers followed them. Allow me not to elaborate further. We, the citizens of Burma, were not able to decide the fate of our own country in the period between 1824 and 4 January 1948. We had to put up with whatever others were doing.

At the time of our independence in 1948, there were genuine citizens, resident aliens, and offspring of intermarriages between citizens and aliens, as well as offspring of the foreigners themselves in the country. Thus, when we attained independence, our country had a mixed population of genuine citizens and descendants of citizen-foreigner marriages as well as of the foreigners themselves.

Therefore, after independence, a problem arose, namely, to find a solution for the resident foreigners and the mixed blood [thwe hnaw] people. Our deliberations to solve the problem resulted in the emergence of a law the Union Citizenship Act, 1948. This act came into force as law No 66 on 4 January 1948. The second law to be enacted was law No (?76)--the Union Citizenship Election Act, 1948--which only came into force on 9 May 1948.

The objective of the first law was to define who were the genuine citizens and what their rights were. The other act was to solve the citizenship problem of those who had come from abroad. These people were already in the country at the time of independence. They were thus given the option to apply for Burmese citizenship. Since there were conditions stipulated in the act, citizenship was, of course, not granted freely when applications were submitted. Let me cite some important points of the acts. Article (?5) of the Union Citizenship Act stated:

The following persons born after the state constitution had come into force shall be citizens of the union:

a. A person born in the union of parents one of whom is a union citizen: when the father of that person is a citizen of a foreign country, should that person fail to declare within 1 year of attaining majority the renunciation of his/her foreign citizenship and the option to continue retaining union citizenship, the union citizenship of that person will cease after the expiration of that 1 year.

b. A person born outside the union whose father is a union citizen, provided he has registered at the union consular office concerned within the period and in accordance with the procedures (?specified in this act).

c. A person born outside the union of parents one of whom is a union citizen serving as a public servant of the union government: When one of the parents of that person is a foreigner, should that person fail to declare within 1 year of attaining majority the renunciation of his/her foreign citizenship and the option to continue retaining union citizenship, the union citizenship of that person will cease after the expiration of that 1 year.

I choose to mention this in particular because [words indistinct]. When a child born of parents one of whom is a union citizen attains majority, he must come forward to state thst he does not wish to be a foreigner, but that he wishes to be a Burmese citizen. In other words, even persons with native blood must follow this procedure. Those who made this law did so perhaps inadvertently, because according to this act, if a person fails to declare his choice of Burmese citizenship and to renounce his foreign citizenship in the presence of authorities when he is 18 years of age, he loses the citizenship after 1 year, or when he is 19. This is one point.

Article 7 of the same act states: A foreigner may apply for a naturalized citizenship certificate from the minister if he meets the following requirements: 1) has reached 18 years of age; 2) has resided in the union or under the sovereignty of the union continuously for at least 5 years before the application was submitted. If the minister accepts and is satisfied with the facts as stated, he may grant a naturalized citizenship certificate to the applicant.

I will cite only what is relevant and omit the rest. A foreigner who has reached 18 years of age and has resided in the union or under the sovereignty of the union continuously for at least 5 years before the application was submitted may apply for naturalized citizenship. You may not have noticed something in the text of the law I just read. It states: If the minister accepts and is satisfied with the facts as stated, he may grant a naturalized citizenship certificate to the applicant. It means that one minister has the authority to do what he pleases. It seems that just one minister is authorized to handle such matters with full authority.

Moreover, there is yet another point in the same act concerning people who came to our country and whom I did not mention earlier to avoid hurting them.

Article 13 of the act states: A person who has faithfully served in the union armed forces either continuously for 3 years or for a total of at least 3 years may apply for naturalized citizenship while in the service or within 6 months after completion of service. With the following exceptions, should that person follow all the other provisions of this act, he may be granted a naturalized citizenship certificate:

1. He/she may not state his/her intention beforehand;

2. He/she may not be required to have resided in the union.

There were many public service personnel serving the British who had come to Burma and emphasis was given to those serving in the armed forces. I shall say only this much concerning this law.

Another act is the Union Citizenship Election Act, 1948. Let me read article 3 of that act:

Any person who has the following qualifications may apply for a naturalized citizenship certificate from the district officer concerned:

a. Born in a territory under the sovereignty of his majesty the king of England.

The implications of this requirement are very extensive. At that time, the sovereignty of Britain was so extensive that there was a saying: The sun never sets on the British empire. So, anybody who resided within the empire was given the chance to come and stay in our country. In other words, we were giving special privileges. Since we are associating on good terms with the whole world, we cannot emphasize our relationship with just one country. We must be fair.

Subarticle b of the same article 3 states: Persons who have resided within the sovereignty of the Union of Burma for 8 years [words indistinct].

Those who were in Burma and who met the above requirements were required to apply for Burmese citizenship, stating that they wished to stay in Burma.

On the Burmese Government side, departments concerned had to scrutinize whether the facts stated were accurate or not before issuing the naturalized citizenship certificate.

Some of the foreigners in Burma were illiterate and some of them did not even know that this law existed. The result was that they did not apply for citizenship. There are many of them even today and if we were to take action against them, it would never end. We would be burdened with extraneous work while they would face difficulties.

Among other things, what was bad and what should never have been done is what we had said all along even before our party was founded, that is, never give an individual authoritarian power.

At that time, with their own way of thinking, they endowed an individual with authoritarian power. Since that person was given that power, whatever he decided was all right. Understandably, there were shortcomings when dealing with people who had come here before independence. But there were also people, despite coming here after 1948--that is, after independence--who were given citizenship certificates. Are there not?

So, we just cannot stand idly by with folded arms while there are individuals who came here after independence but who had been given citizenship. As I have mentioned earlier, after attaining independence in 1948, we were faced with a major problem concerning foreigners who had come here. Therefore these two acts were passed to deal with them. But the acts were not implemented effectively and therefore we still have the problem concerning these people even today.

If we observe the situation, the people are also living in fear. Until today, these people have no stable life. There are many of them. Therefore, for the sake of these people's peace of mind and [words indistinct] we are working systematically. They will be able to live in peace and on our side--the state--we must be magnanimous. We must be magnanimous in practice also. Some of these people, foreigners who are in Burma, are descendants of people who had entered more than 100 years ago. That is, circa 1830, 1835 and 1840. Before independence, these people continued to retain their original citizenship. But after independence, although some of them left, there were people who stayed behind and who were confused as to what their identity was. We must not be indifferent to the plight of these people or have an attitude of letting them fend for themselves. If we assume such an attitude, these people will suffer. They have no place to go to [words indistinct]. These are the people who had come here from ancient times; that is, since the first Anglo-Burmese war.

Later also, before the 1941 war began or before the 1948 independence, people came here. We must draft a new citizenship law to solve these problems as it is impossible to drive these people out after they have been here for so many years. Hence, we need to show good will toward them and allow them to stay in peace.

In our present law, we call them resident citizens [ae naingantha]. This is because, at one time, all we had in the country were genuine citizens. But these people came here as "guests" and either did not go back or circumstances were such that they had to settle here. We must be considerate and magnanimous. Although we must be considerate and magnanimous toward them, we must not be magnanimous to the extent that they will pose a danger to us. By magnanimity, we mean they should be allowed to stay in this country and to have the right to earn a living in a fair manner. However, in matters affecting the destiny of the country, they should be excluded. This is not because we hate them, but in practice, if we were to put them in a place where they could decide the fate of the country, our country would be in trouble if they could not fulfill the responsibilities or if they [words indistinct].

Let me cite an example concerning some people among these resident citizens [words indistinct]. After independence, some of them left Burma, while some of their family members remained behind.

Some people who left this country--for instance, Indians--did not go back to India. Instead they settled in Singapore, Hong Kong or America. Some Chinese also did not go back to China, but went to Singapore, Hong Kong, Australia or America. Say, for example, some relatives or a brother remain here. One brother is working in Hong Kong, another in England. They keep contact with each other and try to smuggle out our goods and engage in blackmarketeering. This is a fact. Since we know their habit--that they would do anything to earn money--would it be feasible for us to put them in organizations which decide the fate of the country? Therefore, we will not be able to give them full citizenship and full rights. They will, however, get their due rights. We will make sure that they earn commensurate with their work and that they will earn enough to meet their food and other requirements. We cannot do more than this.

I have explained the background and now I will explain the Burmese citizenship law which we have prepared. Until a certain time in the future, under the new citizenship law, there will be three categories of citizenship--genuine citizen, resident-citizen and naturalized citizen. Those who are nationals of pure blood will be genuine citizens. There are those who came to Burma before independence from other countries and who cannot go back. Some of these people, who knew about the two acts, applied for citizenship while others who did not know about the law did not. For those who have applied, we will scrutinize whether they meet the requirements under the abovementioned two laws, and if they do meet the requirements, we will grant them resident-citizenship. Those who did not know about the laws will be asked to submit applications and if they do meet the requirements, we will grant them naturalized citizenship. Thus, we will have three categories: genuine citizens, resident citizens and naturalized citizens.

What is the difference between resident citizens and naturalized citizens? Although both categories of people came here before independence, the difference will be those who have and those who have not yet applied for citizenship. Those who have not submitted the applications will, comparatively, be considered to have a bigger problem than those who have.

In the Union Citizenship Act, 1948, those born of parents one of whom is a citizen have to declare at the time of attaining majority the decision to renounce foreign citizenship and take up Burmese citizenship. But in our law, if that person has our blood from either of the parents, he is not required to go and pledge allegiance or take oath within 1 year. He automatically becomes a citizen.

Regarding resident-citizens and naturalized citizens, I have to say that although there will be three categories currently, for some time, ultimately there will be only a single type of citizenship in the future. There will be no more resident-citizens and naturalized citizens. How will this come about? Some people will become resident-citizens when they meet the requirements. We are calling them resident-citizens because we do not have complete trust in them, but it would not be fair to let generation after generation of these people to remain resident-citizens and be denied the rights of genuine citizens. As I said earlier, at the moment we do trust the resident-citizens. To recall the example I cited, one of them stays in Hong Kong, one in Burma and another in England for nefarious purposes. However, such contacts may end in a couple of generations. By that time, the third generation in our country will be given genuine citizenship and will have equal rights with others. The same will apply to naturalized citizens.

Are we to deny all their generations of genuine citizenship? Will they never attain that status? No, the third generation will be given genuine citizenship. That is why I mentioned earlier that although there will be three categories of citizenship today, there will only be one type of citizenship in our country in the third generation from now. Grandchildren of resident-citizens and naturalized citizens will be given genuine citizenship only when the current generation, their offspring and the third generation themselves reside in our country as law-abiding people and if they do not commit detrimental acts. If they break the law, their grandchildren will not become genuine citizens. We shall have to consider what action to take and stipulate it in the law for those people who break the law.

The current law is, therefore, aimed firstly at alleviating the problem of people who came here before independence and who do not now know whose citizens they are. They can now stay in our country if they meet the requirements. Moreover, if they continue to stay as law-abiding people, their third generation will become genuine citizens. It is vital that they know this. I want to advise these people to live as law abiding people, giving due consideration to what we have done for them.

We, the genuine citizens or the Burmese people, should not discriminate against them with the excuse that they have come from other countries. Please understand that one day, we and these people will share weal and woe as fellow travelers in the same boat.

As all of you know, we took quite some time to draft this law, including the process of submitting it to the whole country for advice. I do not know how many times the law was redrafted at the lower levels, but I do know that it has been rewritten about six times since it was first submitted to me.

Even then I now notice we have omitted something--I found out about it only this morning when I was preparing to deliver this address. That point is mentioned in the part concerning acts detrimental to the state committed by a genuine citizen. Nobody can stop a person from being a citizen unless he commits acts detrimental to the state. There is also a part which mentions giving a person some sort of responsibility so as to redeem himself. A particular point is missing here, and I am just mentioning this now so as to avoid any future arguments.

The point to add is: a citizen shall not have the right to divest himself of his citizenship during any war in which the state is engaged. We must add this. This point is mentioned in the parts dealing with resident-citizens and naturalized citizens but we inadvertently omitted this where genuine citizens are concerned.

Therefore, on page 5 after paragraph 13 we must add it as paragraph 14. Paragraph 13 says: A citizen shall not have the right to accept the citizenship of another country. Paragraph 14 will read: A citizen shall not have the right to divest himself of his citizenship during any war in which the state is engaged. If we do not insert this portion, some may come up with the excuse that they no longer want to be citizens during a war period so as to avoid having to fight. That is all I have to say. [applause]

MAUNG MAUNG KHA ADDRESSES CONGRESS SESSION

BK121549 Hong Kong AFP in English 1416 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Rangoon, 12 Oct (AFP)--Basic consumer goods and medicines in the consumer price index went up 5.2 percent in the year ending in May 1982, and inflation stood at 2.33 percent, Prime Minister Maung Maung Kha told the People's Congress on the opening day of its third session today.

Money in circulation, up until February, totalled 9,030 million kyats (1,231 million dollars), 11.34 percent up from February 1981 while savings reached 2,970 million kyats (405 million dollars) as of February 1982, the prime minister said in a state-of-nation report yesterday.

He told the congress that the increase of money in circulation was due to the implementation of projects aimed at increased production in agriculture and other commodities.

Burma has already achieved exports worth 631 million kyats (86 million dollars) of the 1,658.8 million kyats (226.3 million dollars) contracted. The country aims to export goods to the value of 4,250.8 million kyats (584 million dollars) in 1982-83.

Burma has also changed over to a five-day working week, effective Monday. Now state employees will enjoy two days off weekly.

Office workers are to work 35 hours weekly, seven hours a day, with weekends and holidays off. A 40-hour, five-day work week has been set for factory employees working on a single or two-shift system.

Some 1.5 million state employees will benefit from this change. Previously they worked a 44-hour week.

An announcement by the Council of Ministers said authorities had decided to adopt this work schedule so as to increase productivity and allow government employees more time for rest and recreation.

Another reason for the changeover is to conserve energy, informed sources said.

Burma is currently facing a shortage of energy and may be forced to import crude oil to supplement local production in order to meet the fuel demands of on-going projects. It has not imported crude oil since 1974.

Meanwhile, the People's Congress currently in session, continued into its second day with discussions on the state-of-nation reports submitted Monday by the various power organs. The People's Congress concludes Thursday.

GANDHI REPORTED TO EXPAND RESHUFFLED CABINET

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 12 Sep 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Saturday inducted up Congress-I President Mohsina Kidwai into her government as a Minister of State in a surprise move which has sparked speculations that the State's government and party machinery may be refurbished in the wake of the communal tension.

Mrs Gandhi had expanded and reshuffled her Cabinet on 2 September changing the portfolios of a number of senior Ministers. This was followed the same evening with changes in the Congress-I high command.

Mrs Kidwai has been made a Minister of State for Labour and Rehabilitation.

She took her oath of office together with four others who had been inducted into the Government on 2 September but had not been sworn in as they were not in the Capital.

The Cabinet expansion was announced in a Rashtrapati Bhavan communique after Mrs Gandhi returned from Srinagar where she had gone to attend the funeral of Sheikh Abdullah.

At a simple ceremony held at the panel room of the Rashtrapati Bhavan in the morning, President Zail Singh administered the oath of office to Mrs Kidwai and three other Ministers of State and a Deputy Minister.

The other three Ministers of State sworn in were Mr Virbhadra Singh, Mr S S B Pattabhirama Rao and Mr Ramchandra Rath and Deputy Minister Ghulam Nabi Azad.

Vice-President M Hidayatullah, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, her Cabinet colleagues, including External Affairs Minister P V Narasimha Rao, Home Minister P C Sethi and number of MPs were present on the occasion.

All the five Ministers took their oath of office and secrecy in English.

The Rashtrapati Bhavan communique also announced that the Department of Ecology has been redesignated as Department of Environment.

With this expansion, the Central Council of Ministers will have 18 Cabinet Ministers, including the Prime Minister, 25 Ministers of State and 18 Deputy Ministers.

The portfolios of the new Ministers of State are: Mr Pattabhirama Rao (Finance), Mr Ramachandra Rath (Chemicals), Mr Virbhadra Singh (Industry) and Mrs Mohsina Kidwai (Labour and Rehabilitation) and Deputy Minister Ghulam Nabi Azad (Law).

PREPARATIONS FOR GANDHI VISIT TO MOSCOW DESCRIBED

Madras THE HINDU in English 9 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 8.

The preparations for the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union are proceeding at a brisk pace, paying due attention to the details of her talks with the Soviet leaders on both bilateral and internal issues, so that the trip turns out to be a milestone in Indo-Soviet relations.

An advance party of senior officials drawn from different Ministries will be leaving for Moscow during the week-end to prepare the ground for the meeting of the joint commission before the External Affairs Minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, arrives there on September 14 on a week-long visit.

After the conclusion of the two-day session of the joint commission, Mr. Narasimha Rao will stay on for a few more days to await the arrival of Mrs. Indira Gandhi on September 20 and assist her in her talks with the Soviet leaders before she leaves for Kiev and Kalinin. He will then fly back to Delhi and leave a few days later for New York for the U.N. General Assembly session.

It is customary for the Soviet Government to conclude a series of economic protocols and credit agreements during the visits of high foreign dignitaries to consolidate relations. The joint commission will approve a number of Soviet-aided projects and other cooperation programmes for announcement during Mrs. Gandhi's visit.

No return banquets: The Soviet Government has dispensed with the formality of return banquets by visiting foreign dignitaries to avoid unnecessary strain to Mr. Brezhnev and give no excuse to the critics to attribute political motives for his absence due to health reasons. There will be only one round of talks with Mr. Brezhnev, although he will be present at the official banquet and also at the airport at the time of her arrival and departure.

The Prime Minister is visiting the Soviet Union at a time when there are some signs of improvement in Sino-Soviet relations and also a slight lessening of tensions in Europe after the recent Soviet-American strains. It will be a good occasion for her to urge the Soviet leaders to start at least reducing their military presence in Afghanistan to open the way for a negotiated settlement of the problem.

But it is considered highly doubtful whether the Soviet leadership will respond to any such suggestion even from a friendly country like India which has gone out of its way to give it the benefit of doubt over its undefendable action in Afghanistan.

There is little hope of any reversal of Soviet policy at a time when the Kremlin is preparing for a change over to a new leadership after Mr. Brezhnev's exit from the scene. The present Prime Minister, Mr. Tikonov, also is regarded as part of a stop-gap arrangement pending the emergence of new personalities with new power equations.

The whole accent of India's relationship with the Soviet Union at present is on keeping the continuity of close contacts without undue identification with the Soviet policy pursuits. The relationship has stood the test of time and proved useful to India which sees no justification at all for any dilution in the name of maintaining a better balance in its dealings with Moscow and Washington.

Attitude of communists: But at the same time Mrs. Gandhi has been making no secret of her disappointment with the Soviet leadership for not exerting its influence on Indian communists to desist from adopting a hostile attitude towards her Government. During the recent parliamentary debate on the no-confidence motion, she referred to the two communist parties and their "mentors" which caused quite a flutter among Soviet bloc diplomats here.

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, seems to be proceeding on the assumption that there has been a perceptible change in India's attitude and that the country was now going out of its way to befriend the United States. Anything that Mrs. Gandhi says during the talks in Moscow would be carefully analysed by the Soviet leaders for unmistakable signs of a change in direction.

But otherwise Mrs. Gandhi is assured of a very warm and affectionate welcome as a valued friend of the Soviet Union. She will be heard with respect and without any resentment even on an issue like Afghanistan.

A number of pending matters relating to defence cooperation are likely to figure during these discussions. The Soviet policy on such occasions is to assure the visiting dignitaries of every possible assistance leaving the details to be worked out by experts in due course.

MANEKA GANDHI FACTION LEADER COMMENTS ON RESHUFFLE

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 9 Sep 82 p 12

[Text]

RANCHI, Sept. 8.—The induction of three youth Congress (I) leaders, known for their loyalities to Sanjay Gandhi, into the Union Council of Ministers is unlikely to have any impact on the new political party to be launched by Mrs Maneka Gandhi next month, Mr Akbar Ahmed, leader of the Sanjay Vichar Manch, told reporters here on Sunday night. A large number of Sanjay followers would join the new party, he added.

Mr Kalpnath Sonkar, a Congress (I) M.P. who recently joined Mrs Maneka Gandhi, Mr Lalit Mohan Singh, president of Bihar Unit of the Sanjay Manch, and Mr Sudhir Kumar Misbra, a nephew of Mr Jagannath Mishra, the Bihar Chief Minister, were among those present at the Press conference.

Mr Ahmed announced that some prominent Congress (I) and youth Congress (I) leaders from Bihar, including some Adivasi Congress (I) leaders from the Chotanagpur belt, would join the new party. Mr Anadi Brahma, the convener of the Ranchi unit, declared that the names of Congress (I) leaders from Chotanagpur joining the party would be announced on October 1 by Mrs Maneka Gandhi when she visits Ranchi. New light is likely to be thrown on the alleged secret connexions of the Bihar Chief Minister with the Sanjay Vichar Manch. According to the leaders of the Manch, Mr Jagannath Mishra's letter to Mrs Maneke Gandhi is in their possession. Photocopies of the letter would be released to the Press very soon, leaders said. In reply to a question whether the Bihar Chief Minister was helping the Sanjay Manch, Mr Lalit Mohan Singh replied in the affirmative and repeated his earlier statements that the Chief Minister was helping it financially.

Mr Singh announced that a rally would be organized in Patna on October 10 to "expose" Congress (I) leaders in Bihar.

When asked if the new party would have any alliance with other political parties, Mr Ahmed said "No". He described Mrs Gandhi's charge that his party was being supported by the RSS and Jana Sangh as "baseless and mischievous". The new party would contest elections, he added.

GANDHI TO EXAMINE CONGRESS-I LEADERSHIP IN STATES

Madras THE HINDU in English 13 Sep 82 p 1

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 12.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today met separately several more Congress (I) leaders from Andhra Pradesh, including the Pradesh Congress Committee (I) President, six Ministers and one zilla parishad chairman, to ascertain their views on the proposed changes in the State.

The Chief Minister, Mr. B. Venkatram, who arrived from Hyderabad this morning, is due to meet her after Mrs. Gandhi's thinking has crystallised into some sort of decision.

But meanwhile almost all the Andhra leaders, who met her yesterday and today, are reported to have told her, with only one or two exceptions, that unless a more dynamic person is installed as Chief Minister and given a free hand in reconstituting the Ministry drastically by dropping some of the incompetent ones from the present Cabinet, the Congress (I) will not be able to face the NTR wave and give a good account of itself in the forthcoming Assembly elections.

Drastic Steps

The Prime Minister, too, seems to be veering round to the view that some drastic steps have to be taken soon to refurbish the party's sagging image with a new Chief Minister at the helm. But she is awaiting the return of the Finance Minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, from Washington late tonight to seek his advice before taking the necessary decision.

The External Affairs Minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, is due to leave for Moscow on Tuesday morning and, if no decision is taken tomorrow, it means that the issue will have to be settled in his absence, since he is going to be away from Delhi for ten days. But since his views are fully known to her, she can take the decision even after his departure in the light of her own assessment of the situation.

Those who met Mrs. Gandhi today included the PCC (I) president, Mr. C. Dass, the Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. C. Jagannadha Rao, the Finance Minister, Mr. K. Prabhakara Rao, the Cooperation Minister, Mr. Amarnath Reddi, the Municipal Administration Minister, Mrs. Sarojini Pulla Reddi, the Health Minister, Mr. Madan Mohan, the Public Works Minister, Mr. M. Manik Rao, and the Chairman of the Srikakulam Zilla Parishad, Mr. Sreeramulu Naidu, while a few more were expected to be called later tonight.

The Prime Minister has been listening to their views patiently without indicating her own thinking and giving any inkling of what she proposes to do in the situation. But it was quite evident from the sort of questions she has been putting to them that she has practically made up her mind to go in for a change, if she is satisfied that the new leader would be able to carry the party with him.

As a seasoned politician she knows that whoever is chosen there is bound to be some opposition from one interested group or the other for political or personal reasons. But, if it is established that on balance he would be able to command the support of the majority of members and mobilise the party for fighting the forthcoming elections, Mrs. Gandhi would be prepared to go along with the consensus emerging from the current consultations.

She is seeking the views of as many Andhra Pradesh leaders as possible because she does not want the impression to prevail that the new incumbent has been nominated by her and imposed on the State on the basis of her own preferences.

No Fait Accompli

The Prime Minister is also not allowing any of her confidants to stage manage the choice and confront the party with a fait accompli in her name. The whole accent this time is on listening patiently to the views of the party leaders invited to Delhi without letting any of the Central Ministers to prejudge their predispositions.

After getting the Andhra Pradesh problem out of her way, Mrs. Gandhi proposes to tackle the situation in different States. But what is proposed to be done to set matters right will vary from State to State depending on local compulsions.

If Andhra is being given priority over Maharashtra, it is not because that Mr. Babasaheb Bhosale has been given a reprieve. It is only due to the fact that the urgency in Andhra is much greater because of the forthcoming elections.

PRESS REPORTS EVENTS AFTER SHEIKH ABDULLAH'S DEATH

Appeal from Farooq Abdullah

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 10 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] Srinagar, September 9.

Dr. Farooq Abdullah, who was sworn in as acting chief minister last night, has made a fervent appeal to the people of the state to uphold and maintain its age-old traditions of communal amity and brotherhood.

In a special broadcast at 6.45 a.m. today, Dr. Farooq Abdullah said people from all over the country would be arriving here for the funeral of the "Baba-i-Kum". The people should conduct themselves in a manner that the fair name of the state was not sullied.

He also warned mischievous elements against trying to exploit the situation. He said the people should not resort to any step which would endanger the peace and tranquility of the state.

Dr. Abdullah appealed to all sections of the people, irrespective of their caste, colour or creed, to extend their co-operation to him in his onerous duties which he assumed last night. He said the people should not display any sign of weakness. Instead, they should try to uphold the traditions for which Sheikh Abdullah had fought and died. He was confident that this support would be forthcoming from the people.

In an emotional seven-minute speech which had been recorded last night, Dr. Abdullah said the light had gone out. It was now up to the people to take guidance from this light and march towards the realisation of the Sheikh's dream of a "Naya Kashmir".

Gandhi on Sheikh

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 10 Sep 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] VARANASI, September 9 (UNI).

THE Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today expressed optimism that Kashmir would continue to be as secular as it had been under the leadership of Sheikh Abdullah.

Talking to reporters at Babatpur airport where she arrived in the course of her tour of the flood-hit areas of Uttar Pradesh and Orissa,

Mrs. Gandhi said she was extremely sorry at the death of the Sheikh. There was a special relationship between her family and that of the Sheikh.

Mrs. Gandhi said Sheikh Abdullah was a great secular leader and had played a special role in the freedom struggle.

When Kashmir was attacked the first time, there were no Indian defence forces there. It was Sheikh Abdullah who mobilised the people to fight the invaders, she said.

Mrs. Gandhi will go to Srinagar tomorrow to attend the Sheikh's funeral.

New Delhi (UNI): Mrs. Indira Gandhi described Sheikh Abdullah as a great stalwart of the nation and the father figure of Jammu and Kashmir.

"A tall Indian has gone," she said in a condolence message.

The President, Mr. Zail Singh, expressed his deep grief over the death of Sheikh Abdullah whom he described as a "great nationalist and patriot with sterling qualities."

In the Sheikh's death, Mr. Zail Singh said, the country had lost a veteran freedom-fighter and champion of democracy and socialism.

In his message to the governor of Kashmir, Mr. B.K. Nehru, the President praised the Sheikh for his "iron determination and breadth of vision."

The vice-president, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, has said that in Sheikh Abdullah's death the country had lost a freedom-fighter of the first rank and a man of great stature and determination.

In a condolence message, Mr. Hidayatullah said the news of the Sheikh's death had left everybody in gloom and the shock was more profound since he was ailing for some time and there had been some hopes of his recovery.

Farooq New National Conference Chief

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] SRINAGAR, September 11.

DR. Farooq Abdullah was today unanimously elected leader of the ruling National Conference legislature party.

His name was proposed by Mr. Ghulam Mohiuddin Shah, general secretary of the party, and seconded by Hakim Habibullah.

Addressing the legislators after his election, Dr. Abdullah appealed to all parties to extend full co-operation to his party and the government in fulfilling the common objectives of public welfare.

He said: "We do not want confrontation but co-operation with all". His government would welcome constructive criticism aimed at rectifying mistakes, if any, in the functioning of the government. But criticism for the sake of criticism alone could weaken our democratic fabric and the country.

He reaffirmed the need for strengthening the bonds of unity between the state and the rest of the country. He said that his father was instrumental in the state's accession to India and nothing should be done which could weaken the link. Dr. Abdullah emphasised the need for strengthening the bonds of communal amity to which "we are dedicated."

UPPER HOUSE

Concluding, he asked the members to take a pledge to work for the ideals of Sher-e-Kashmir and carry forward the mission launched by him.

The party later adopted a resolution mourning Sheikh Abdullah and placing on record his services to the party and the people.

The meeting also decided to extend full co-operation and support to the newly-elected leader of the party.

Dr. Abdullah, who is an MP representing the Srinagar constituency and president of the National Conference, is not a member of either of the two houses of the state legislature. Within six months, he has to become a member of the legislature.

He is likely to contest the election to the upper house. One of the National Conference members of the house will have to resign so that the seat falls vacant. Two senior ministers—Mr. D. D. Thakur, finance minister, and Mr M. K. Tickoo, law minister—are from the upper house.

However, with the fast approaching cold weather, assembly elections this winter are ruled out as many areas will be snowbound.

The government will also have to wait till such reports are submitted before declaring dates for fresh elections. The commission, headed by Mr. Justice (Retd.) J. N. Wazir, is to submit its report by December.

Dr. Abdullah will also have to decide two other vital issues now. One is whether he would like to continue as the party president like his father. The other issue relates to the reconstitution of the present council of ministers.

It is learnt that there was some discussion on this issue at today's meeting of the legislature party as some members raised the point whether the present set of ministers could continue in the absence of a fresh oath of office and secrecy.

It is learnt that legal opinion was in favour of the ministers taking a fresh oath.

Later, in an informal chat with journalists, Dr. Abdullah said that his priorities would be to ensure speedier economic growth, strengthening the bonds of amity among various communities and regions of the state and to further promote Centre-state understanding.

He said the task of building up the socio-economic structure was a stupendous one and this could be done with the unstinted co-operation of all.

Mr. G. M. Shah, former works minister and son-in-law of the Sheikh, also endorsed the choice, but said that "differences existed in the party, which was natural in a democracy."

Farooq's Broadcast Speech Reported

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 12 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] SRINAGAR, Sept 11 (PTI)—Dr Farooq Abdullah tonight called upon the people of the State to redouble their efforts to further strengthen the bonds of communal amity, and secular base of polity in Jammu and Kashmir.

In his first broadcast from Radio Kashmir to the people as new State Chief Minister, he said that his father had always upheld with vigour the ideal of secularism. This was a "priceless legacy" which had to be defended and further strengthened.

Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah, he said, wanted Jammu and Kashmir to be "laboratory of secularism" and truly a crown of the great Indian democracy. "We have to make a common endeavour to further strengthen the Hindu-Muslim-Sikh unity, and turn this ideal into an ever-burning flame", he said.

Dr Farooq who was unanimously elected by the legislative wing of his party as its leader this afternoon, recalled the period of 1947 when Jammu and Kashmir defended its secular traditions with distinction and won praise from all sides.

"Mahatma Gandhi had then seen a ray of hope emanating from Kashmir. Today we have to turn ourselves into a little sun of light for the entire country", he observed.

In the course of his broadcast, Dr Farooq made touching references to the services rendered by Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah to the State and the country.

The spontaneous homage paid to him and the way people mourned his passing away, he said, was a befitting tribute to the Sheikh Abdullah's work for raising high the status of the State and the country, he said.

Farooq Press Conference

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]. SRINAGAR, September 12.

THE Jammu and Kashmir chief minister, Dr. Farooq Abdullah, today announced his decision to re-constitute the council of ministers in a small and compact ministry tomorrow.

Speaking at an all-party meeting held at the Iqbal Park here to pay homage to Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah, the chief minister revealed that his ministry of "new faces" would have 11 members.

He said he had decided upon this step after giving due thought to it: If he had dropped two or three ministers, it would have been misconstrued that these persons had been axed because of charges of corruption against them. He said he had, therefore, decided to drop all members of the erstwhile ministry.

The announcement was greeted with cheers by the huge gathering which was present at the meeting.

Dr. Abdullah said the formation of a small ministry would also reduce the burden on the state exchequer.

Earlier, the swearing-in ceremony of the council of ministers scheduled for today, was suddenly postponed at the last minute.

According to Raj Bhavan sources, the ceremony was fixed for 3.30 p.m. But during the day, a telephone call was received at Raj Bhavan, requesting that the ceremony be postponed. A new date for the swearing-in would be intimated soon.

As reported earlier, there is a dispute whether the ministry headed by the late Sheikh Mohammed Abdullah could continue in the absence of a fresh oath of office and secrecy. Protagonists of two view-points have quoted chapter and verse from the constitution in support of their differing stands. The matter was raised at yesterday's meeting of the National Conference legislature party at which Dr. Abdullah secured the unanimous support of the legislators.

The expert legal opinion was that the old council of ministers would have to take a fresh oath of office and secrecy.

Accordingly, Raj Bhavan was intimated. All arrangements that were completed were scrapped following the telephone call.

The postponement of the ceremony is also being ascribed to the alleged reluctance of Mr. G. M. Shah, former minister, to enter the cabinet excepting on his own terms. He has demanded the second rank according to reports. But Dr. Abdullah is unrelenting in his stand that this position should go to Mr. D. D. Thakur, the finance minister, who had stood by him.

UNI adds: Dr. Abdullah pledged to further strengthen the states' accession to India brought about by his father, the late Sheikh Abdullah, in 1947.

Talking to a group of newsmen here on the policy of his government, Dr. Abdullah stressed the need for cordial relations between Srinagar and New Delhi. "We believe in conciliation. Confrontation is not in the interest of anyone," he said.

Dr. Abdullah said he would welcome the co-operation of the Congress (I) in the state.

He, however, said it was too early to think of any alliance between the National Conference and the Congress (I).

The chief minister called for a "determined effort" to guard India's territorial integrity and strengthen communal harmony.

"Let nobody do anything which would jeopardise India's freedom and territorial integrity," Dr. Abdullah remarked.

He said his government would try its best to stamp out corruption, especially from high places.

He would examine individual complaints, if any, against the members of his council of ministers.

"Anyone found indulging in irregularities will not be found there," he added.

In reply to a question about his brother-in-law, Mr. G. M. Shah, who resigned from Sheikh Abdullah's cabinet last month, Dr. Farooq Abdullah said "Saheb is like my father. He is free to rejoin the cabinet or work in the party."

Mr. Shah who had reportedly staked his claim to the chief ministership earlier, pleaded with the National Conference legislative party yesterday to unanimously elect Dr. Farooq Abdullah as leader.

PTI adds: Shops and business establishments reopened in Srinagar today and vehicular traffic operated normally after a four-day mourning for Sheikh Abdullah.

Normalcy was restored in response to an appeal by the chief minister, Dr. Farooq Abdullah, who urged the people to resume work and reopen shops and business establishments.

In his broadcast from the Srinagar station of All India Radio last night, the chief minister also called upon the people to work hard for the state's progress, a cause that was dear to the departed leader.

Reports from district headquarters said that normal activity was resumed in almost all towns of the valley.

Dr. Karan Singh, MP and former Union minister, extended "full support" to Dr. Farooq Abdullah and expressed the hope that the new chief minister would work for bringing Jammu and Kashmir closer to the national mainstream.

In an informal chat with newsmen, he also welcomed the smooth change over of power and said that his assuming the office of the chief minister was in the "national interest".

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 13 Sep 82 pp 1, 9

[Article by M. L. Kotru]

[Text] Srinagar, Sept. 12.--The new Kashmir Chief Minister, Mr Farooq Abdullah, expects understanding from the Centre to place Centre-State relations on a balanced and mature keel. "I do not want misunderstanding between the two on this or that issue and what's in my favour is that the Prime Minister is a friend, a member of the family", he said.

The 45-year-old Chief Minister, father of four and a keen golfer, who had shown little taste for politics even as a member of the Lok Sabha, looked a picture of confidence as he spoke to me at his father's house in an exclusive interview.

Mr Abdullah spoke in a very forthright manner: "I am a total newcomer, call me a toddler in politics, and I have stepped into the shoes of a man who was cut out in the mould of Nehru and Gandhi. I am bound to falter but, Inshaallah, with the support and good wishes of my people, whom my father dearly loved, I shall overcome the teething troubles".

Mr Abdullah said there was so much to do in the State that he might initially have no time for other things such as visits to Delhi. "My first task will be to know my people, to go round every town and village, to establish the kind of bond that existed between my father and his people. Mind you, I know it is impossible for anyone to fill the void created by my father's death but I, having assumed the chair which he held must try if only to be remembered as a son who tried to emulate his great father" Mr Abdullah said.

Mr Abdullah said: "We want to be rid of starvation, industrial and economic. I want more and more industry to come to the State. I want more job opportunities to be created for the youth of the State. I want education to be given high priority, a new direction, so that Fundamentalist tendencies are discarded by minds more enlightened, by young men who are better educated".

One could not help noticing traces of his father's rhetoric as he went on to describe the recrudescence of communal strains throughout the country. "I do not want these clouds to come into our State".

"I want Kashmir to be the model it has always been, of communal amity, proper education," he said.

It was imperative that the Shiekh's message (of communal amity) found an echo in other parts of the country, he said.

What kind of a relationship did he expect to have with the Congress (I)?

"A healthy, friendly relationship".

But he did not want the kind of cooperation which the local Congress had offered his father at the time of his return to power after the Delhi accord, when Syed Mir Oasim had relinquished Chief Ministership in the Sheikh's favour and the Congress had first promised and then backed out of joining his Government.

There would have to be a mature relationship between the two, if there was to be one. Fortunately, because of his closeness to the Prime Minister and her family, he hoped he would be able to solve the problems created by the local Congress leaders. "You know," Mr Abdullah said: "I consider myself lucky that I can seek Mrs Gandhi's advice whenever I reed it. I can turn to her like I could turn to my father".

Mr Abdullah was surprisingly forthcoming on his relations with his brother-in-law, the controversial Mr Ghulam Mohammad Shah, who resigned from the Sheikh's Government only weeks ago over Mr Abdullah's induction into the Cabinet and because of the Sheikh's heavy reliance on his Finance Minister, Mr D. Thakur.

"The trouble with Shah Sahab is that he is over-sensitive given to violent reactions and a certain inability to carry on as a team man", the Chief Minister said of his brother-in-law, who had somehow fancied himself as the Sheikh's natural successor.

Was he inducting Mr Shah into the Cabinet? Mr Abdullah said: "You know, I am considering every single move must and if I do not come to a conclusion I start all over again". He hopes to formulate his Cabinet over the next two days.

Several thousand people had assembled outside the house for the umpteenth time this morning and Mr Abdullah had to leave to talk to them. They were the Sheikh's numerous admirers from all parts of the Valley and had come to assure him of their support. Mr Abdullah returned to request me for "patience, understanding and sympathy".

Srinagar continued to mourn the death of Sheikh Abdullah for the fourth day today. Although some shops opened on repeated requests broadcast over the local radio station by Mr Abdullah, all public entertainment continued to be at a standstill. Bars and cinema houses have been closed from the moment the Sheikh's death was announced.

IRRIGATION MINISTER MEETS PRESS ON RETURN FROM MOSCOW

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 14 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] Joint teams of Indo-Soviet experts will work for cooperation in inter-basin transfer of waters, Union Irrigation Minister Kedar Panday told newsmen on Monday, reports UNI.

Mr Panday was speaking at the Delhi airport on his return from Moscow where he signed a protocol on water management, water resources development and land reclamation.

The Minister said inter-basin water transfer was one of the new areas of cooperation identified during his discussions with the Soviet leaders.

This was particularly important in the context of the ambitious Rs 5,000 national perspective plan for water resources development formulated.

The Soviet Union, he said, had the experience in transferring river waters from the northern to southern river basins.

During his seven-day visit to the Soviet Union, Mr Panday was accompanied by Chairman of Central Water Commission M G Padhye and senior officials of the Irrigation Ministry.

The new areas of cooperation envisaged in the protocol include geophysical investigations of dams, studies in water resources development structures, rock mechanics and analysis of ecological impacts of water resources development. Experts of the two countries would also be sharing their experiences in saline land reclamation and silt control measures for extending the life of reservoirs.

Mr Panday said under an earlier protocol, India had shown interest in the Soviet techniques of single directional blasting for construction of dams and precast concrete canal structures.

The Soviet feasibility report for a precast canal structure factory, to be located in Gujarat, was ready.

The Soviet experts had visited Himachal Pradesh and suggested to try the single directional blasting method, a technique entirely new to India, for the construction of a 50-metre high dam Birai Khad river.

The experts had also prepared a project report for the purpose.

The Minister said the Soviet experts were interested in visiting the Central Water Research Station at Pune and the National Institute of Hydrology at Roorkee to study particularly the physical and mathematical modelling techniques for barrages and dams.

HIGH COMMISSIONER TO DACCA MEETS WITH PRESS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Sep 82 p 3

[Text] Dacca, Sept. 12 (PTI)

India's High Commissioner in Bangladesh Muchkund Dubey has expressed his "firm confidence" that the military ruler Lt. Gen H M Ershad's coming visit to Delhi in October and his talks with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi "will give further impetus to our relation".

The two heads of Government, Mr Dubey hoped, "will be able to give specific and concrete guidelines to sort out issues involved in the Indo-Bangla relationship".

The Indian High Commissioner was talking to members of the Overseas Correspondents' Association of Bangladesh here last evening at a posh hotel.

Describing Gen Ershad's impending visit to Delhi as a "significant event", Mr Dubey said "we are happy that India will be the first country to be officially visited by him".

The High Commissioner, who completes his Bangladesh assignment shortly stressed over and again the "imperative" need for greater and expanding cooperation between the two countries in every gamut of socio-economic existence, other than simply dealing with issues and sorting them out.

The "cost of not cooperating will be very high for both the countries", he said.

Asserting that any prolonged period of tension in the relationship would be harmful for the two countries, and much more harmful to India than to Bangladesh, Mr Dubey said that the onus to develop and keep the relations going "is greater on India" because of its being relatively developed status among the developing countries.

He said India had a great stake in the stability of Bangladesh because of her close proximity with this country.

Anything happening adverse in Bangladesh will have its inevitable effect "in our country", he added.

Describing the assignment in Bangladesh as the "most challenging one for any Indian diplomat anywhere in the world", Mr Dubey said "the relationship between the two countries is so sensitive because of the proximity and other socio-economic and cultural affinity that any development anywhere has direct bearing with the peoples of the two countries".

MOSCOW EXPERT REVIEWS INDO-SOVIET COOPERATION

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 14 Sep 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Moscow, Sept 13 (UNI)--The scope of Indo-Soviet economic cooperation has doubled since the signing of the long-term programme of 1979 and the agreements of 1980.

This was stated in a review of Indo-Soviet cooperation by Dr Koptevsky, an expert on the subject, on the eve of the seventh session of the Indo-Soviet Joint Commission, which opens here tomorrow.

According to Dr Koptevsky, Indo-Soviet projects are making a substantial contribution to India's industrial production. For example, contribution in steel production was 35 per cent, oil 60 per cent, refining 53 per cent, petroleum products 30 per cent, power about 20 per cent and coal about 40 per cent.

Giving projections up to 1990, which is the present perspective of cooperation under the long-term programme, Dr Koptevsky says that out of the 21 million tonnes of steel expected to be produced by then, about 14 million tonnes would be produced by Indo-Soviet projects and it is likely that the percentage may be even higher.

As for oil, out of the present projection of 25 million tonnes by 1985, about 14 million tonnes would be provided by Indo-Soviet projects. Simultaneously, the refinery capacity of Indo-Soviet projects would be raised to over 20 million tonnes.

Coal production in India is expected to be over 170 million tonnes by 1990, of which about 47 million tonnes would come from Indo-Soviet projects. But in terms of growth in coal production of 60 million tonnes in the next few years, the new Indo-Soviet coal projects would provide over 26 million tonnes.

Indo-Soviet projects would offer about 10 lakh tonnes of alumina by 1990, a significant portion of India's expected alumina capacity.

According to Dr Koptevsky, the seventh session of the Indo-Soviet Joint Commission is expected to clear some important new projects which will significantly raise the contribution of Indo-Soviet projects to India's industrial production, particularly in refining, non-ferrous metallurgy, steel and oil etc.

BHARATIYA JANATA LEADER PREDICTS MIDTERM ELECTIONS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Sep 82 p 4

[Text] Jaipur, Sept 12.

The Bharatiya Janata Party has asked all its State units to be prepared for a mid-term poll in the country, party general secretary L K Advani, MP, revealed at a press conference here yesterday.

Mr Advani expressed apprehension that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi might go for a general election before schedule, maybe in 1983. According to him, the increasing disenchantment among the people, the anarchical situation within the ruling party and Mrs Gandhi's loosing grip on the party machinery are the reasons prompting for an early poll.

The BJP leader also mentioned the 'secretive' way the Union Cabinet was reshuffled. This was to suppress a revolt in the party, he asserted.

When a correspondent asked what was wrong if a government went to poll before scheduled, Mr Advani said "I did not say it was wront". The correspondent reminded him that he had been using the word apprehension.

Mr Advani condemned the Bihar Press Bill and said the situation has become more serious after the Prime Minister publicly supported it. He said this was a test balloon and similar laws would be brought in other States also.

AGENCY REPORTS THREEFOLD RISE IN INDO-SOVIET TRADE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Sep 82 p 8

[Text] The trade turnover between India and the Soviet Union has increased more than threefold during the last five years, reports PTI.

The turnover which was 647 million roubles in 1976 has touched 2397.9 million roubles in 1981 (one rouble is equivalent to Rs. 12).

The Soviet Union, which tops the list of India's trading partners, imported goods worth 1333.8 million roubles in 1981 as against its exports worth 1064.1 million roubles to India during the same year.

According to current indications, the Indo-Soviet trade for 1983 is expected to cross the 1982 level by 15 per cent. The protocol setting out targets is to be finalised soon.

Out of India's total exports of Rs 6,709 crores in 1980-81, the Soviet Union accounted for goods worth Rs 1,157 crores--17 per cent. The second largest importer of Indian goods, the US, lagged far behind (Rs 852 crores) accounting for 13 per cent.

The corresponding share of the UK, once the leading trading partner, was only six per cent.

The Soviet Union has been increasing its imports from India steadily, even though some of the items are available elsewhere such as jute bags and textiles, tea, tobacco, black pepper, cashew nuts and coffee.

During the period 1976-80, the Soviet Union bought from India 232,000 tonnes of tea, 100,000 tonnes of coffee, 77,000 tonnes of cashew nuts, 90,000 tonnes of tobacco, 511 million metres of jute cloth and 791 million jute bags.

Sixty per cent of the total Soviet purchases from India are manufactured goods. They include electronic instruments, components, machinery, chemicals, cotton cloth, knitwear, ready-made garments, shoe uppers, paints and dyestuffs, chemical products, handicrafts, carpets and other goods.

Steel

Steel plants built under Indo-Soviet collaboration will be contributing about 68 per cent of total steel being produced in the country, by 1988-89, reports UNI.

The total steel-production capacity in the country by that year is expected to be 20 million tonnes when the capacity of the giant Soviet-aided plant at Visakhapatnam is commissioned.

According to steel experts, the steel sector is a major area of Indo-Soviet collaboration.

This collaboration has helped India attain self-reliance in designing, planning, constructing new steel plants in the country and abroad and undertaking consultancy on them setting up, the experts feel.

The Bhilai steel plant was the first plant to be set up under Indo-Soviet collaboration in 1955. The plant has already reached a capacity of 2.5 million tonnes and the capacity is expected to increase to four million tonnes.

The second Indo-Soviet collaboration project at Bokaro was also set up with a capacity of 2.5 million tonnes and is now being expanded to four million tonnes.

Negotiations are underway among experts of both the countries to expand the capacity of the two plants to seven million tonnes and ten million tonnes respectively.

Meanwhile, preparations are underway to adopt new technological facilities to initially increase the capacity of both the plants to five million tonnes.

BUSINESSMEN URGE MODERNIZATION OF MAJOR INDUSTRIES

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 8 Sep 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] Five major industries--cotton, textiles, cement, sugar, jute textiles and engineering--require Rs. 3,682 crores for modernisation in the next five to seven years, according to a study made by the Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Unless such modernisation is done on an urgent basis, says the study, these traditional industries will become uncompetitive in the world market.

The study suggests that the bulk of the finance--about 80 per cent--must come from the financial institutions, as the industries themselves would not be able to raise more than 20 per cent.

The cotton textiles industry requires the largest amount (Rs. 2,125 crores) for modernisation, followed by cement (Rs. 575 crores), jute textiles (Rs. 439 crores), engineering (Rs. 356 crores) and sugar (Rs. 187 crores).

The FICCI document records that Indian industry performed excellently in the 1950s and 1960s but is now up against some problems. In a large segment of industry, productivity is low, costs are high and quality is poor.

All this means losing out in the world market and cutting into the rate of growth of income. Most of these problems, the study says, flow from one single cause--technological obsolescence.

The pace of modernisation so far has been slow because of paucity of finance resulting from price controls, depreciation based on historical cost and high rate of corporate taxation.

Of the estimated requirements of Rs. 3,682 crores for the five industries over five to seven years, an annual outlay of Rs. 526 crores to Rs. 736 crores would be needed.

The financial institutions would be required to make available between Rs. 421 crores and Rs. 589 crores a year under the soft loan scheme. The balance of Rs 105 crores to Rs. 147 crores per year would be raised by industry itself, mainly from larger retention.

Since the financial institutions are short of funds, says the FICCI report, the Reserve Bank of India may channel through commercial banks the deposits impounded between January 1977 and October 1980 and amounting to Rs. 1,793 crores. This amount may be allowed to be invested in six per cent special modernisation securities to be issued by financial institutions.

To enable the companies to raise funds, the investment allowance may be increased from the present level of 25 per cent to 45 per cent for industries going in for modernisation. In the alternative, an excise rebate on production--up to 20 per cent of the capital outlay on acquisition of machinery for modernisation--should be considered.

For future needs, units may be allowed to set aside a percentage of their profits before depreciation towards modernisation reserves. In computing the cost of production for fixing prices, modernisation requirement should be taken into account. For purpose of taxation, units may be allowed to carry back losses against profits of the previous three years.

The FICCI document concludes: "Modernisation is not a matter of choice. It is a necessity, a means for survival and progress in a competitive world. The government and industry have to work together to complete the programme within five years."

OUTCOME OF CPI-M CENTRAL COMMITTEE ANALYZED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

CALCUTTA, September 5.

ONLY some subtle shifts in nuances rather than any significant change in the accepted political-tactical line seems to have marked the deliberations of the CPM central committee which ended in Delhi last week.

Not that any major change was expected. But point is that after all, this was the committee's, first full-dress discussion on the major developments on the international and national scene taking place since the party congress seven months ago.

In respect of the national scene, the most interesting shift in nuance seems to be the consensus that henceforth, the party, instead of harping on political slogans, should try and concentrate on developments from time to time and adjust its tactical line accordingly.

On the international plane, the committee is said to have felt it necessary, in view of the imminent congress of the Communist Party of China, to put off any evaluation of developments taking place in that country. Members thought the congress might throw up enough pointers for a really meaningful discussion of the Chinese scene.

In this area, the West Asia developments, particularly Israeli invasion of Lebanon, came up for close examination. While noting PLO's determined resistance, for the first time to come up in that region, and the natural reaction of the Arab countries not unmixed with a fear of the PLO, the CPM central committee took serious note of the growing threat of war, "spearheaded by the U.S." in other areas of the world as well.

THREAT OF WAR

On the other hand, the central committee felt that the Soviet stance throughout the West Asia crisis could not have been more correct, because its active intervention in Lebanon, in the absence of any invitation for doing so from any of the countries involved, might well have led to disastrous complications and consequences. After all, party sources ask, did not the PLO use mostly Soviet arms? Also, the party noted the contradictions developing within the Western bloc over the Siberian gas pipeline issue.

It was in this context, and especially in view of the U.S. arms supply to Pakistan, the party felt the need for stepping up its anti-war campaign nationally, irrespective of the many internal developments of significance and long-term consequence, providing conflicting indications.

The central committee noted the deepening economic crisis and the government's unavoidably growing dependence on external economic assistance, particularly the acceptance of the IMF loan and the very sensitive situations in the two border states of Punjab and Jammu and Kashmir as well as in Assam.

INDUSTRY MINISTER TALKS IN GDR REPORTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

LEIPZIG (East Germany), September 5 (PTI): India and the GDR have agreed that there was further scope for increasing trade and economic co-operation between the two countries and decided to sign a protocol in this regard tomorrow.

This was concluded in a meeting between the Union minister for industries, Mr. N. D. Tiwari, and the GDR Prime Minister, Mr. Willi Stoph, here yesterday.

During their talks, Mr. Tiwari and the GDR Prime Minister noted the 30 per cent increase in Indo-GDR trade last year and emphasised the need for further strengthening bilateral relations between the two countries for mutual benefits.

The two ministers also decided that the GDR should import iron-ore, engineering goods and textile machineries from India and felt that both the countries should look into possibilities of joint-ventures in various industrial fields.

Mr. Tiwari and Mr. Stoph also discussed the international situation. The GDR side condemned the Israeli aggression on Lebanon and supported the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people.

Earlier, Mr. Tiwari conveyed the greetings of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, to the GDR Prime Minister.

Mr. Tiwari, who arrived here yesterday, will meet several GDR ministers today and will also pay a visit to the international autumn fair.

BULGARIA DENIES DUMPING SODA ASH IN INDIA

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 8 Sep 82 p 5

[Text]

Bulgarian Ambassador Tocho Tochev on Tuesday denied the allegation that his country was dumping soda ash into India at a throw away price, report agencies.

He told newsmen that his country was hte biggest producer of soda ash in Europe with the production capacity of 1.5 million tonnes.

Bulgaria exported soda ash to a number of countries at international price. India imported only 50,000 tonnes. Besides, Bulgaria was supplying 1,00,000 tonnes of urea to India.

When the international prices had slumped naturally the same price was charged from India. There was no substance in making an allegation that Bulgaria dumped soda ash into this country to the disadvantage of the local producers.

Mr Tochev said trade between India and Bulgaria stood at 168 million dollars last year. They had some joint ventures as well as in third countries like Libya, Iraq, Iran and Nigeria, he said.

The ambassador said a team from hte Indian Counciler Agricultural Research (ICAR) was now in his country studying the possibilities of collaboration in perfume production, especially rose perfume for which Bulgaria is noted.

Referring to the sixth session of the Indo-Bulgarian oint Commision for economic, scientific and technical cooperation held in Sofia last month, he said it marked in a "concrete manner the future prospects of our bilateral cooperation. We have every reason to believ that our bilateral ties will be further strengthened in the days to come".

PRESS REPORTS FINANCIAL MEETINGS IN TORONTO

Mukherjee at IMF Meeting

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Sep 82 p 9

[Text] TORONTO, September 4 (PTI).

THE group of ten industrialised countries, at the IMF meeting here today, came to the conclusion that the Fund's financial position was adequate to accommodate the demands on its resources but recognised that it might come under strain in the period before completion of the eighth general review of quotas.

In a communique, the ministers agreed that the financial position of the Fund should be closely monitored and agreed that the fund might have to arrange for additional borrowed resources before quotas were increased.

They reviewed the progress that had been made to date concerning the quotas review and underlined the importance they attached to an early conclusion of the review before the end of the prescribed period.

The ministers re-emphasised the need for the Fund to maintain its character as a monetary institution and source of temporary financing with effective conditionality in support of the balance of payments adjustments. They felt the Fund should place primary reliance on quotas for its resources and that the present review quotas should be brought more in line with members' relative position in the world economy.

DONOR COUNTRIES

The group stressed the increasing role for conditional financing by the Fund to promote adjustments which might be needed in the period ahead. In their view, the recent concerted actions of their governments were aimed at assisting the Fund to support such adjustment programmes.

AP adds: As much as 3.7 billion dollars may be available from the U.S. and other donor countries for interest-free loans to the world's poorest countries in the year beginning next July 1, according to a top World Bank official.

"The United States has indicated... that it intends to meet its full commitment", the senior vice-president, Mr. Qureshi, who chaired a meeting of 33 donor countries, told a news conference on Saturday.

Negotiations may be completed next week. Saturday's session preceded the opening on Monday of the bank's annual meeting with its sister organisation, the International Monetary Fund.

But earlier, Mr. Rainer Offergeld, the West German aid minister, told another group of reporters that there is no guarantee of the U.S. contribution. That will depend on the willingness of the congress to meet the request of President Reagan.

'PARALLEL FUND'

Mr. Qureshi said that some of the money — about $500 million, an aide estimated — would go into a "parallel fund" proposed by France and Canada. It was not yet certain which other donors, if any, will join them.

This sum would be loaned out like the rest to poor countries that need to raise their living standards by building public projects. But orders for the equipment to be used would go only to companies in countries which contribute. The effect would be to cut U.S. firms out of millions of dollars worth of business — possibly hundreds of millions.

This business has been highly profitable for many American companies. Most of it will still be available to them since the restriction would apply only to a small percentage of the total loans.

The Union finance minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, has called on industrial countries to review their policies which, he said, were contributing directly to prolonging the deep-rooted recession in the world economy.

He told the policy making interim committee of the IMF on Saturday that the social and political costs of such policies were proving to be unbearably high. "The process of world development has come to a virtual halt, "Mr. Mukherjee said.

The finance minister also proposed that the resource base of international financial institutions should be strengthened to ease, at least to some extent, the burdens of developing countries. The IMF should be enabled to respond in a flexible manner to the growing requirements of financing adjustment processes.

Mr. Mukherjee took the opportunity of briefly recounting India's successful adjustment efforts and said no matter how hard the developing countries might try to restore stability to their balance of payments, their success would remain severely circumscribed by what the industrial countries did or failed to do.

He warned that adjustment without restoration of the growth process of the world economy would tear apart the whole fabric of international economic and financial co-operation. Meaningful adjustment could proceed only within the framework of interdependence, but events and policy trends in industrial countries were weakening the process of international co-operation, Mr. Mukherjee said.

Stressing the role of the IMF in the eighties, the minister regretted that the Fund's resources had fallen to extremely low levels. They were just about three per cent of world imports. Efforts to increase fund resources were being impeded. In the absence of a sizable increase in Fund resources, the innovating mechanisms evolved by the Fund such as the enlarged access policy to support extended arrangements would suffer.

Mr. Mukherjee urged the committee not to encourage the idea of special arrangements (as proposed by the U.S.) at the cost of an increase in Fund quotas. The integrity of the IMF and its financial structure should in no way be impaired ,nor should anything be done to detract from its authority, he said. It was high time the committee provided a firm lead for a large fund through the straightforward method of a substantial increase in quotas.

Mukherjee at IMF-World Bank Meet

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 8 Sep 72 pp 1, 7

[Text] TORONTO, Sept 7 (UNI).

INDIA today warned that if the present World Bank lending trends continue, developing nations would soon be 'obliged to pay more than what they receive'

Voicing anxiety over the 'failure to expand World Bank lending', Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee said it posed 'a setback to the process of development'.

Mr Mukherjee told the joint meeting of the Bank and International Monetary Fund Boards of Governors that lending projections for 1982-86 revealed a stagnant level in real terms.

Mr Mukherjee reminded members of the advice of the Group of 24 that action should be taken immediately to provide for a 'substantial annual increase in real terms'.

'The urgency of doing so is highlighted by the fact that net transfers to developing countries are decreasing', he told delegates from over 140 countries.

Mr Mukherjee said that the resource constraints had also hit the prospects of energy lending, where there now seemed no scope for increase despite the flexibility shown by the Bank.

The Minister opposed the proposals for 'differentiation between' recepients of International Development Association assistance.

'It would, indeed, be an odd way of solving the problem of world poverty if countries with large populations below the poverty line are made ineligible for IDA assistance on usual terms and conditions'.
